THE

BOOK OF

RUTH.

THIS book is a kind of appendix to that of Judges, and an introduction to the subsequent history: and it is most probable, that it was written by Samuel, after he had anointed David to be king.—Ruth, a Moabitess, having been married to the son of Elimelech, of the tribe of Judah; after the death of her husband and father-in-law, accompanied Naomi, her mother-in-law, into the land of Israel, from love to her, and to true religion: there she was married to Boaz, a near kinsman, and thus brought into the line of David, and consequently of Christ the Son of David. The chief events occurred at Beth-lehem, the city of David; whose genealogy from Pharez, the son of Judah, concludes the book, and is attested by the Evangelists Matthew and Luke.—It is not easy to fix the Chronology of these events: they occurred in the days when the judges ruled; but there is no evidence to determine exactly under which of them.—The narrative itself is very interesting and instructive. It shews the condescending providential care of God to the minutest concerns of his people: and the circumstance of a Moabitess becoming an ancestor of Christ, seems to have been a pre-intimation of the calling of the Gentiles into his church.

CHAP. I.

Elimelech induced by famine to sojourn in Moab dies there, 1—3. His two sons, having married women of Moab, die without children; and Naomi, Elimelech's widow, prepares to return to Israel, 4—6. Orpah and Ruth, her daughters-in-law, propose to accompany her; she dissuades them, and Orpah returns back, 7—14. Ruth determines to go with her, 15—18. They arrive at Beth-lehem, and Naomi answers the inquiries of her neighbors, 19—22.

NOW it came to pass, in the days when [a] the judges * ruled, that there was [b] a famine in the land: and a certain man of [c] Beth-lehem-judah went to sojourn in the country of Moab, he, and his wife, and his two sons.

NOTES.

CHAP. I. V. 1, 2. Elimelech seems to have been blameable, in removing from the ordinances and people of God. The famine was not so extreme but that others could endure it; and he evidently was a person of property, and not likely to want the necessaries of life, though Jewish traditions of his rank and dignity are entitled to little credit. (Note, 19—21.) Probably, he thought that he could live better and at less expense in the land of Moab, than in Canaan; but it terminated in the empoverishing and wasting of his family.—"Elimelech signifies my God a king, and "Mahlon" and "Chilion" seem to denote sickness and consumption; they having perhaps been children of a weakly constitution.

V. 4, 5. There is no reason to think, that either Orpah or Ruth was proselyted to the religion of Israel, before marriage; and consequently Mahlon and Chilion directly violated the divine law; for which some think their premature death without children was a punishment. (Lev. 20:20,21.) But their marriage with Moabitish women was the natural effect of Elimelech's conduct, in bringing them acquainted with the women of Moab, and removing them to a distance from the worshippers of God. Thus they settled among idolaters; and had they left children, there would have been

6 Then she arose with her daughters-in-law, that she might return from the country of Moab: for she had heard in the country of Moab, how that the LORD had [l] visited his people [m] in giving them bread.

7 Wherefore [n] she went forth out of the place where she was, and her two daughters-in-law with her: and [o] they went on the way to return unto the land of Judah.

8 And Naomi said unto her two daughters-in-law, [p] Go, return each to her mother's house: [q] the LORD deal kindly with you, as ye have dealt with [r] the dead, and with me.

9 The LORD grant you that ye may find [s] rest, each of you in the house of her husband. Then [t] she kissed them: and they lifted up their voice, and wept.

10 And they said unto her, [u] Surely we will return with thee unto thy people.

11 And Naomi said, Turn again, my daughters; why will ye go with me? are there yet any more sons in my womb, [x] that they may be your husbands?

12 Turn again, my daughters, go your way; for I am [y] too old to have an husband. If I should say, I have hope, if * I should have an husband also to-night, and should also bear sons;

13 Would ye † tarry for them till they were grown? would ye stay for them from having husbands? nay, my daughters: for ‡ it grieveth me much for your sakes, that [z] the hand of the LORD is gone out against me.

14 And they lifted up their voice, and wept again: and [a] Orpah kissed her mother-in-law, but [b] Ruth clave unto her.

[Practical Observations.]

15 And she said, Behold, thy sister-in-law [c] is gone back unto her people, and unto [d] her gods: return thou after thy sister-in-law.

16 And Ruth said, § Entreat me not [f] to leave thee, or to return from following after thee: for [g] whither thou goest, I will go; and where thou lodgest, I will lodge: [h] thy people shall be my people, and [i] thy God my God.

17 Where thou diest will I die, and there will I be buried: [k] the LORD do so to me, and more also, if aught [l] but death part thee and me.

great danger of their being incorporated among them. (Notes, Gen. 13:10—12. 14:12. 19:1,14, 26,31—38.) Probably Elimelech died soon after he came into the land of Moab, and his two sons followed him before ten years were expired; but it does not appear, how long after their marriage this took place.

V. 6—10. Perhaps Naomi had staid in Moab contrary to her inclination, from regard to her husband while he lived, and afterwards to her sons: and she was now encouraged to return into Canaan, by hearing that the Lord had visited the land with plenty; for it would have been very discouraging for a destitute widow to return home in a time of great scarcity. (Note, 19—21.)—She seems to have been a person of eminent faith and piety; and to have diligently instructed her daughters-in-law in true religion, which she recommended by her example. They both had a great affection for her, and at first purposed to go with her, notwithstanding her afflicted condition; though Orpah's resolution failed upon the trial. Their good behavior to their husbands, and to Naomi, likewise endeared them to her, and excited her affectionate wishes and fervent prayers for them; and they were all greatly distressed at the thoughts of parting.

V. 11—14. The custom of the surviving brother marrying the widow of the deceased, who had left no children, seems to have prevailed in other countries besides Israel; but no prospect of a settlement according to it, could possibly be held out by Naomi to her daughters in-law. She therefore expressed great concern at the afflictions with which God had visited her, because she was deprived of all power to help them: and she intimated, that if they were not disposed to accompany her out of disinterested love to God, and to the people of Israel, she could hold out no other inducement. Upon this Orpah, not being prepared to venture all consequences, and renounce all her worldly prospects for the sake of religion, returned back to her country, her relations, and her gods, though with reluctance and tokens of affection for Naomi. (Marg. Ref. a—c.)

V. 15. Naomi was doubtless very far from desiring that Ruth should return: but she intended to make trial of her sincerity, and to lead her to consider how she could bear poverty and hardship, for the sake of the God of Israel; that if she were not in earnest, and only induced by affection for her, and some general convictions, it might now be discovered; or that she might set out with steady determination of mind, and entire dependence on the grace of God. (18. Notes, Josh. 24:15—19. Luke 14:25—33.)

V. 16, 17. The example and instructions of Naomi seem to have given Ruth the most favorable opinion of the character and religion of the Israelites, so that she desired to have her lot with them at any rate: and for the sake of 18 When she saw that she *was stedfastly minded to go with her, then she left speaking unto her.

19 So they two went until they came to Beth-lehem. And it came to pass, when they were come to Beth-lehem, that [o] all the city was moved about them; and they said, [p] Is this Naomi?

20 And she said unto them, Call me not †Naomi, call me ‡Mara: for [q] the Almighty hath [r] dealt very bitterly with me.

21 I went out full, [s] and the LORD hath brought me home again empty: why then call ye me Naomi, seeing [t] the LORD hath testified against me, and the Almighty hath afflicted me?

22 So Naomi returned, and Ruth the Moabitess, her daughter-in-law, with her, which returned out of the country of Moab: and they came to Beth-lehem in [u] the beginning of barley-harvest.

this, she was willing to renounce all her connexions and prospects in the land of Moab, and to embrace hardship and penury in a strange country. (Notes, Josh. 2:4—6,8—11.) She was also determined to cleave to Naomi, however destitute and afflicted, until death separated them. For her sincerity in this profession she called the LORD to witness, and to multiply her troubles if she did not fulfil this solemn engagement. Thus she renounced idolatry, and became a worshipper and servant of the living God, and "counted all but loss" for the sake of his favor and salvation; and her subsequent conduct proved that her faith was genuine and her profession sincere. (Notes, 2 Sam. 15:18—22. 1 Chr. 12:16—18. John 6:66—71.)

V. 19—21. Naomi had probably lived in affluence, and been much respected: her neighbors were therefore greatly surprised to see her return home, so altered in her circumstances and appearance; for she and Ruth seem to have travelled on foot, without any attendants, all the property which Elimelech had taken with him having been spent.—"Naomi" signifies pleasant, and "Mara," bitter. She humbly considered her afflictions as coming from the Lord's hand upon her and her family, for sin. For thus "the LORD testified against her, and the Almighty afflicted her." Perhaps she considered herself as guilty, in not having left Moab immediately on the death of her husband.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.
V. 1—14.

No judgment can be formed from mere outward circumstances, whether we have, or have not, "found favor with God;" for whom he loves he often chastens for their profit, and leaves his enemies to be hardened in prosperity.—Afflictions should be submitted to as the Lord's rebuke, and they call on us, as by the voice of the Lord, to exercise repentance, and seek forgiveness: (Notes, Am. 4:6—13. Mic. 6:9.) for every endeavor, by carnal policy, to evade correction, will eventually entangle us in greater difficulties.—Those who, by inconveniences or hardships, are easily induced to change their situations, seldom prosper in this world; and prove that they do not understand the real causes of their uneasiness. For the displeasure of God, and the pride and impatience of our hearts, cannot be avoided by change of place or situation; and while these remain, they will produce misery whithersoever we remove. But when we are tempted to quit the ordinances of God, and the communion of his people, out of secular motives, we should remember Lot and Sodom. In such measures our children and families are deeply concerned; for if they are estranged from the servants and house of God, and brought acquainted with persons of no religion, or of a false religion, it cannot be expected, but that they will conform to their ways, and have their portion with them living and dying. Better would it be to be pinched with poverty, and worn down with labor, in the Lord's land, than to live in luxury and ease by hazarding such consequences. (Notes, Ps. 37:3,16,17.) For our earthly trials or enjoyments are of short continuance; death is continually removing those of every age and situation, suddenly breaking in upon the most endeared unions, and marring all our outward comforts: we cannot therefore too decidedly prefer those advantages which shall endure for ever, that we may be ready for every separating stroke. If however, we be constrained to dwell for a season in places of temptation, we should retire when the necessity ceases; and consider every rebuke in Providence, as a call to us, to "come out and be separate" from the workers of iniquity.—When "the Lord visits his people in giving them bread," they ought to be content and thankful, though they have not abundance of silver and gold: and the assurance, that he will supply the real necessities of his true servants, should encourage us cheerfully to cast our lot among them. In every situation and relation in life, especially among such as are strangers to the truths of the gospel, believers should aim to "adorn the doctrine of God our Savior in all things." (Note, Tit. 2:9, 10.) And when they behave with prudence, integrity, meekness, and kindness; when they well perform the duties of relative life, and shew attention to the temporal comfort, and compassion for the sufferings, of those around them; and when they commend what is right in the moral and relative conduct of those who are not acquainted with spiritual things; they win much upon them, and render them more disposed to take in good part any endeavors made to do good to their souls. And thus, (beside the comfort of domestic harmony, which cannot easily be valued too highly,) the Lord often blesses such conduct, as the means of bringing those who were ignorant, careless, or prejudiced, to inquire after his truth and salvation; while the contrary behavior of too many professors of the gospel, forms a grand objection against it in the minds of thousands and tens of thousands.—Many feel an affection for such believers as have been kind to them, and entertain favorable sentiments of religion, who are not decided in renouncing all their worldly pleasures, connexions, and prospects, and joining themselves to the poor and despised people of God, for the sake of Christ and his salvation. They more desire "rest in the house of a husband," or in some worldly settlement or satisfaction, than that rest to which Jesus invites our souls; and therefore when fully tried, they depart from him, though sorrowful and reluctant. (Note, Matt. 11:28—30. 19:16—22.)

V. 15—22.

Nothing but a deep sense of the importance of eternal things, and a conviction of our guilt, and need of a Savior; nothing but that faith, which is inseparably connected with true repentance and hatred of sin, and which works by love of Christ, and his people, his truth, ordinances, and precepts; will, in such a world as this, carry a man through all possible temptations. And therefore the Lord proves those who profess themselves his disciples, by setting the consequences before them in his word, and by some experience of them in his providence; by which they, who have not faith, are discouraged, and go back to their own people and idols: and this, though lamentable, is principally their own loss. We ought indeed greatly to desire the increase of true Christians; yet we should be cautious in our endeavors to multiply professors, lest we engage those who will betray the cause, which they are expected to defend. (Notes, Deut. 20:5—9. Judg. 7:2—7.) Especially we ought to examine, whether we ourselves are thus stedfastly minded, and determined to cast in our lot with the people of God, however poor, despised, or persecuted; and that living and dying, and for ever. We should inquire, whether this be our aim and prayer; whether the prospect of secular advantage have not some influence upon our minds; and whether, if that were withdrawn, or changed for the prospect of poverty and suffering, we should not be tempted to draw back. But if we are thus decided in our judgment for the Lord and his service and salvation, he will assuredly accept and provide for us; he will make up all our losses, support us under all our trials, and communicate unspeakable consolations; and while many "draw back unto perdition, we shall believe unto the saving of our souls:" nay, we shall even grow more determined by their apostacy, and by our own difficulties and temptations. If reduced in our circumstances, we shall often be more grieved for the sake of others, than for ourselves; the consciousness of our sins will teach us to submit to our trials, without murmuring; and our mourning will be mingled with heavenly sweetness.—While we remark, with compassion, the sad changes which numbers suffer, we should be reminded to prepare for changes ourselves, especially for our last great change; when the true believer, will certainly find that all things have worked together for his everlasting good. (Note, Rom. 8:28—31.)

CHAP. II. V. 1. Marg. Ref.—Job 1:2,3.

V. 2. When Naomi and Ruth were settled in some homely lodging at Beth-lehem; the latter, expecting nothing in Canaan but a life of hard labor and mean fare, proposed to go and glean in some field, where she might obtain permission, for her own subsistence, and that of her mother-in-law, who probably was unable to endure the fatigue and heat of such an employment. The Lord indeed intended other things for Ruth: but he was pleased thus to prove her sincerity, humility, industry, and patience; and her dutiful affection to Naomi for his sake. Orpah could not have stood this trial: but had she been assured of a settlement in Israel, as desirable as that which Ruth at length obtained, she would have come also, and have made a hypocritical profession of religion for the sake of secular advantage. (Note, Matt. 8:18—20.)

V. 3. Her hap.] This circumstance was with Ruth merely accidental, and not the result of choice or contrivance; but it was the effect of the Lord's secret direction, in whose providence great events depend upon apparently trivial incidents. perintended his own reapers.—The pious and affectionate language interchanged between him and his reapers, and which appears to have been familiar to them, shews that there were many godly persons in Israel, notwithstanding national defections: and it beautifully illustrates the genuine effect of true religion, in producing affability in superiors, and respect and affection in inferiors, and mutual unaffected good will in all.—It is lamentably true, that such language as this is seldom heard in our fields, while the bounty of Providence is gathering in: but frequently the reverse; yea, whatever can inflame the passions, and corrupt the morals. So that a stranger, who should be occasionally present, would be apt to form a very different opinion respecting the religion of England, than Ruth did concerning that of Israel, from the conversation and conduct of Boaz and his reapers.

V. 5—10. There is a beautiful simplicity in this narrative. The servant's account of Ruth was suited to give Boaz a high opinion of her modesty, humility, and industry; and the discourse of Boaz with Ruth exhibits genuine humanity, kindness, and consideration for the stranger and destitute.—It seems evident, that the same language was understood by all parties, whether Moab, as descended from Lot and Heber, retained the language of their ancestors, or a dialect of it; or whether Ruth had learned the language of Israel, in Elimelech's family. (Notes, Gen. 11:6—9. Neh. 13:23—30.)—"Seeing I am a stranger." 'I am not of Israel, but a 'heathen, born and brought up; a Moabitess, un-'worthy the regard, and unmeet for the society 'of the people of God, even for that of the hand-'maidens (13), the poorest of them; much less of 'the attention of one so eminent in Israel as thou art.' (Note, Matt. 8:8,9.)

V. 11, 12. Ruth had renounced the idols of Moab, and become the worshipper and servant of the God of Israel. In proof of her sincerity, she had left "the land of her nativity," where she might have expected a comfortable settlement; and her parents, (who it seems were still living,) as well as her other relations and friends, to come to a people, with whom she had had no previous acquaintance, but against whom she had been educated in prejudice and enmity; and to attach herself to a poor widow, whom by her industry she must help to maintain. This she had done, because she believed that JEHOVAH was the only true God, and Israel his people: and therefore she desired to be associated with them, and to have the benefit of the ordinances and instructions with which they were favored. (Note, Josh. 2:8—11. P. O. Zech. 8:16—23.) Thus she came "to trust under the wings of the LORD God of Israel;" depending on his power, care, and love, both for the blessings of salvation, and for the things which were needful for the body; and seeking protection in every danger and alarm, as the chickens shelter themselves under the wings of the hen, from whatever incommodes or affrights them. (Marg. Ref. Note, Matt. 23:37—39.) This conduct of a Moabitess had been greatly noticed; and Boaz had thence formed a very favorable opinion of her faith and piety. He therefore shewed her much kindness, encouraging her industry and affording her protection; and praying for her, "that the LORD would recompense her work, and give her a full reward."—In all ages and nations, conversion is substantially the same: irreligion or false religion is exchanged for the spiritual worship of the true God, through the appointed Mediator, and in his instituted ordinances; the practice of sin, for the pursuit of true holiness; self-dependence, for reliance in every thing on the mercy, grace, and providence of God; the expectation of felicity from the world, for his favor as our portion; and the company of the workers of iniquity, for the society of those who love and serve him. But many circumstances depend upon men's outward situation. Such as have godly parents and relations, are engaged in lawful and useful employments, and live in peaceable times, will not be immediately required to make the same sacrifices, as those who are called out of the families of imbittered opposers, from occupations inconsistent with the precepts of Scripture, or in times of furious persecution. The more, however, men venture, renounce, or suffer for the Lord's sake, the clearer evidence they have, that their faith is genuine, and that they shall "receive a full reward." The principle and the precept are in all cases alike; but the application varies, according as different trials are allotted in the providence of God. (Notes, Heb. 11:8—10,24—26.)

V. 14. (*Marg. V. 18, 19. (Marg. Ref.) The quantity of barley which Ruth had gleaned, and the residue of her plentiful meal, which she brought to Naomi, shewed that she had met with uncommonly kind usage.

V. 20. Boaz had been kind to Elimelech's family, before his removal to the land of Moab: and Naomi rejoiced that his care of her had revived after the death of her husband, when she so much needed his assistance; and she besought the Lord to repay him with his blessing. (Notes, 2 Sam. 9:1—3. Phil. 4:10—13.)

V. 22. If Ruth had gone into any other field to glean, it would have seemed a slight put upon the kindness shewn her, as well as an evidence of an inconstant temper of mind, which might have given Boaz and his family an unfavorable opinion of her. (Note, Matt. 10:11—15.) Ruth persevered in her labor, and endeavored to maintain herself and Naomi, by her industry for a considerable time; and was evidently prepared to do it permanently; before a favorable turn, as to her wholly unexpected, was given to her affairs.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.
V. 1—10.

The distinctions which we are apt to form concerning the persons and affairs of men, do not comport with the judgment of the Lord: and the gleaning of a poor Moabitess, who trusted in him, was deemed more worthy of his condescending notice, than the transactions of the greatest princes then living, which are now almost entirely consigned to oblivion! We ought not therefore to "mind high things, but to condescend to men of low estate."—Honest industry, humble patience in poverty and hardship, and a willingness to labor for aged parents, relations, or benefactors, who are unable to provide for themselves, if these spring from faith, are both honorable and acceptable to God.—True religion will teach men to behave with propriety in every circumstance and relation of life: it will form kind masters, faithful servants, and harmonious families: it will produce mutual love among persons of different ranks; and while it engages the rich to condescension, it will teach the poor to be humble and respectful in their behavior to their superiors and benefactors: above all it will naturally express itself in prayer and praise. This return the poorest may render for favors bestowed; and for the neglect of it, no liberality can excuse the affluent.—The good examples of those placed in eminent stations, and who employ many in their service, are most extensively beneficial.—With what gratitude to God and liberality to the poor, should the bounty of a kind Providence be received by us unworthy sinners! and how inexcusable are those who abuse plenty in intemperance, or covetously neglect the indigent, or allow themselves in wickedness, when they are thus experiencing the goodness

CHAP. III.

By Naomi's instruction Ruth lies down in the night at the feet of Boaz, 1—7. He acknowledges that he owes the duty of a kinsman, but shews that another has a prior claim, 8—13. He sends her away in the morning with six measures of barley, and she confers with Naomi, 14—18.

of the Lord!—In shewing kindness to the destitute, we ought ourselves to avoid, and try to prevent in others, every thing that may appear like reproaching them: for a generous mind in distress has very exquisite sensibilities.

V. 11—23.

All persons should be careful what connexions they form, and what places they frequent; but especially young women, both for conscience and credit's sake: and parents, and other superior relations should have a watchful eye over them, and require an account, where, and with whom, they have spent their time.—In the path of duty is safety; and we should keep close to those employments and situations, in which the Lord has blessed us, without being desirous of change. He will not suffer those who trust in him to want the necessaries of life, and will often far exceed their expectations; and an abundant recompense for every loss, and of every really good work, yea a full but gracious reward shall surely be given to all those, "who come to trust under the wings of the LORD our God."—A tender concern for each other's welfare, affectionate and edifying conversation, with true piety and contentment, will render the lowest circumstances and the meanest fare comfortable.—The Lord will prove those, who enter upon a religious profession, whether they are sound hearted, and willing to stoop and suffer for his sake; and then he will stir up the minds of his more experienced servants to speak comfortably to them, and deal kindly with them. This is a good work, which all Christians should embrace every opportunity of performing; especially to those who are cheerfully industrious, and willing to endure hardship for conscience' sake.—But to accommodate this subject, ought not parents to ask their children what they have gleaned from the sermons which they have heard, the books which they have read, and the conversation that they have joined in? May we not also ask ourselves the same question? He that would increase in wisdom must be always thus gleaning, and call himself frequently to account respecting it; determining if possible, to get some profitable hint from every person and occurrence. And those, who thus daily collect knowledge from others, and keep close to the word and ordinances of God, will become "thoroughly furnished for every good work.—Finally let us, in the kindness of Boaz to Ruth, contemplate the kindness of Jesus to poor sinners; to whose meanness he most freely condescends; on whom, though most unworthy, he liberally confers his benefits; and whom he neither upbraids himself, nor suffers others to upbraid, with their former transgressions.

NOTES.

CHAP. III. V. 1—6. If the measure, here proposed by Naomi, had been of as ill appearance in those days, as it would be at present; it can hardly be supposed that she would have advised it, or that Ruth would have complied with it.—The law, concerning a man's marrying his brother's widow when he died childless, was by custom extended, as it seems, to the other near relations, when there were no brethren: and it required the woman to do several things, widely different from modern usages. (Note, Deut. 25:5—10.) This law gave Ruth, now proselyted to the true religion, a legal claim upon Boaz, as Naomi supposed; who either did not know of another nearer kinsman, or was aware that it would be in vain to apply to him. (Note, 4:1—8.) It was customary for widows to assert this claim; and, considering Boaz's character and superiority of station, she supposed that this was best done in a private manner. She deemed herself bound to promote this desirable settlement for Ruth, and had an entire confidence both in her and Boaz; whose character in all respects appears to have been very excellent, and who seems to have been advanced in life. And as Ruth supposed Naomi to be well acquainted with the laws and customs of Israel, she implicitly followed her counsel. Yet, when all allowances are made, perhaps neither party can be entirely exculpated. At least, though their plan was graciously rendered successful, it was not recorded for imitation in the present state of society; nor must it be judged of by modern customs and maxims. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 7. When the work of the day was finished, it seems that Boaz feasted with his laborers; and, according to the simplicity and hardiness of the times, afterwards lay down to sleep on some couch prepared for him in the barn, or in an adjoining tent. It is said "his heart was

10 And he said, [k] Blessed be thou of the LORD, my daughter; for thou hast shewed more kindness in the latter end than [l] at the beginning, inasmuch as thou followedst not young men, whether poor or rich.

11 And now, my daughter, fear not; I will do to thee all that thou requirest: for [m] all the † city of my people doth know that thou art a virtuous woman.

merry;" but it may be translated, 'his heart was 'good;' and may be used to mark his cheerfulness, and thankfulness for the plenty which the Lord had sent after the famine; and his subsequent conduct shews that his feast was consistent with temperance and piety. In the mean time Ruth concealed herself, till he was left alone; and then lay down at his feet, waiting her opportunity of speaking to him; and by that very action she implicitly preferred a claim to be received by him into the marriage-relation.

V. 9. Spread ... thy skirt.] This is supposed to have been a customary ceremony in contracting marriage, and implied the woman's being taken under the protection of her husband, and admitted to share all his comforts. (Note, Ez. 16:6—8.) It was therefore a direct claim upon Boaz to marry her; which she grounded on the law of God, and on his being the nearest relation of her deceased husband.

V. 10—13. The conduct of Boaz in this transaction is worthy of the highest encomiums. He neither attempted to take advantage of Ruth's exposed situation, nor reproached her with impropriety of conduct, nor disdained her as a poor destitute stranger, nor suggested that she was swayed by interested motives in preferring her claim. On the contrary, instead of suspecting her of any ill intentions, he imputed her whole conduct to her affection to the family of Elimelech, and to Naomi; as if she had thus shewn her greater kindness, than in coming with her into the land of Israel: and he commended her, for giving him, an elder man, the preference to younger persons, whether rich or poor, Moabites or Israelites; and for her regard to the law of God. Perceiving her confused, as it is probable, upon the recollection of her situation, he also obviated her fears, applauded her as a woman of known and approved virtue, and made her a promise of marriage, in case a still nearer kinsman who had a prior claim, would wave it, as it might be supposed he would. This he confirmed, for her fuller satisfaction, with a solemn oath; and in the morning he sent her away with a present to her mother-in-law (15).

V. 14. Let it not be known, &c.] We may consider these words as containing his reasons for dismissing her so early; for he said within himself, "Let it not be known, that a woman came into the floor:" or as his caution to Ruth not to speak of it to any one. For it does not appear that there was any servant privy to the interview.

V. 15. This present was a token of the favorable construction which Boaz put upon the transaction, and of his affectionate regard for Ruth and Naomi.—It is not known of what quantity these measures consisted.

V. 16. Who art thou?] Or, "What hast thou done?" What has passed? For so the words may be interpreted.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

It behoves aged persons to recollect their younger days, and not to exclude young persons from those lawful satisfactions, of which themselves have given up all thoughts. (1:12.) Indeed we ought not to make our own conduct a standard for that of others, in any matter which the law of God leaves to our choice; but should, without censure, allow them in many things which we deem inexpedient for ourselves.—The word of God has pronounced "marriage honorable in all;" and therefore those who from inclination, prudential regard to the interests of their families, a pious desire of being more at leisure, and having more in their power for the service of God, and preparation for the eternal world, choose to abide in a single state, should not condemn those, who may have as good reasons for preferring a married life. If they are imprudent, they "will have trouble in the flesh: but their brethren should spare them," and not censure what the divine law does not condemn. (Notes, 1 Cor.

CHAP. IV.

Boaz proposes to the kinsman of whom he had spoken to redeem Elimelech's land, and to marry Ruth; which he declines to do, 1—8. Boaz buys the inheritance and marries Ruth, 9—12. She bears Obed the grandfather of David, 13—17. The genealogy from Pharez to David, 18—22.

THEN went Boaz up [a] to the gate, and sat him down there: and, behold, [b] the kinsman of whom Boaz spake came by; unto whom he said, [c] Ho, such a one, turn aside, sit down here. And he turned aside, and sat down.

2 And he took ten men of [d] the elders of the city, and said, Sit ye down here. And they sat down.

3 And [e] he said unto the kinsman, Naomi that is come again out of the country of Moab, selleth a parcel of land which was our brother Elimelech's:

4 And * I thought to advertise thee, saying, [f] Buy it [g] before the inhabitants, and before the elders of my people. If thou wilt redeem it, redeem it; but if thou wilt not redeem it, then tell me, that I may know: [h] for there is none to redeem it beside thee; and I am after thee. And he said, I will redeem it.

5 Then said Boaz, What day thou buyest the field of the hand of Naomi, thou must buy it also of Ruth the Moabitess, the wife of the dead, [i] to raise up the name of the dead upon his inheritance.

6 And the kinsman said, I cannot redeem it for myself, lest I mar mine own inheritance: redeem thou my right to thyself; for I cannot redeem it.

7 Now this was the manner in former time in Israel, concerning redeeming, and concerning changing, for to confirm all things; [k] a man plucked off his shoe, and gave it to his neighbor: and this was a testimony in Israel.

8 Therefore the kinsman said unto Boaz, Buy it for thee: so he drew off his shoe.

7:25—28. 1 Tim. 5:13—15.)—The married state, when properly entered into, is a rest, as much as any thing on earth can be so called; seeing it ought to fix the affections, and form a connexion for life: it therefore should be engaged in with great seriousness, and with earnest prayers for the direction and blessing of God upon it, and with an eye to his precept and providence: and parents should carefully advise their children in this important concern, "that it may be well with them," especially as to the interests of their souls.—The more willing any one is, for conscience' sake, to renounce worldly interests, the greater care should others employ in promoting his advantage.—But good intentions will not justify improper means; and it is well for us, that we have to do with a God of mercy, who takes better care of our interest, purity, credit, and peace, than we often do of our own and of each other's.—Parents should be very cautious what injunctions they lay upon their children; lest filial affection and deference should ensnare their consciences, and lead them into temptation: for the authority even of a parent will not justify a sinful action.—Few men have such command of their passions, and candor of mind, as to injure neither the virtue nor the reputation of females, who indiscreetly put themselves in their way: and yet to take advantage of a woman's affection and confidence, for her irreparable detriment, is much baser than defrauding those who implicitly trust in us. They, however, who value either their chastity or their character, should flee from such situations; in which they can only be preserved by the same power, that preserved the young men in the fiery furnace.—All our plenty should be shared with the poor and industrious: and all our feasting should be so moderated, that it may neither unfit us for our ordinary employments, nor for the exercises of devotion. When in such circumstances, men can retain the dominion over their passions, and conduct themselves with tenderness, prudence, piety, justice, and regard to the law of God, their wealth may be pronounced blessed, and their use of it honorable.—We must not, however, rest satisfied even with a clear conscience in the sight of God; but should endeavor to preserve a clear character, and to avoid whatever may occasion slander, or excite suspicion: (2 Cor. 8:20,21. 1 Thes. 5:22.) and we ought to be as tender of the reputation of others as of our own.—In every undertaking we should be diligent in using proper means, and then calmly leave the whole to the Lord's decision.—But without any impropriety, we poor polluted sinners may apply to Jesus Christ, our nearest Kinsman and Brother, as dwelling in human nature, to spread his skirt over us, and to espouse our souls to himself; to take us under his almighty care, and to admit us to share in all his unsearchable riches. If we truly desire to be his, though many defects and mistakes attend our application to him, he will not reject us; we cannot do it unseasonably; he will condescend to encourage and assist us; and graciously accept all our endeavors to serve him; and most kindly notice our love to him, and our desire of his salvation. When we have applied to him, he will not rest till he has accomplished our desires; and in the mean time he will communicate blessings to us and ours, in answer to our prayers: nor can we too earnestly desire and seek this same rest for our children and friends, that it may be well with them also. (Note, Matt. 11:28—30.)

NOTES.

CHAP. IV. V. 1—8. Considerable difficulties arise, in explaining this transaction consistently with the laws before given; and indeed it does not appear in whose possession the estate of Elimelech was at this time. It is however probable, that it had been sold till the year of jubilee: (Notes, Lev. 25:14—17,25—28.) and as Elimelech had no male issue surviving, and it could not be alienated from his family, the nearest relation would have a right to re-

9 And Boaz said unto the elders, and unto all the people, [l] Ye are witnesses this day, that I have bought all that was Elimelech's, and all that was Chilion's and Mahlon's, of the hand of Naomi.

10 Moreover Ruth the Moabitess, the wife of Mahlon, [m] have I purchased to be my wife, to raise up the name of the dead upon his inheritance, that [n] the name of the dead be not cut off from among his brethren, and from the gate of his place: [o] ye are witnesses this day.

11 And all the people that were in the gate, and the elders, said, We are witnesses. [p] The LORD make the woman that is come into thine house like [q] Rachel and like Leah, which two did [r] build the house of Israel: and * do thou worthily in [s] Ephratah, and † be famous in Beth-lehem:

12 And let thy house be like [t] the house of Pharez, ([u] whom Tamar bare unto Judah,) of [x] the seed which the LORD shall give thee of this young woman.

13 ¶ So Boaz [y] took Ruth, and she was his wife: and when he went in unto her, [z] the LORD gave her conception, and she bare a son.

14 And [a] the women said unto Naomi, [b] Blessed be the LORD, [c] which hath not ‡ left thee this day without a § kinsman, [d] that his name may be famous in Israel.

15 And he shall be unto thee a restorer of thy life, and ‖ a nourisher of thine old age: [e] for thy daughter-in-law, which loveth thee, which is [f] better to thee than seven sons, hath born him.

16 And Naomi took the child, and laid it in her bosom, and became nurse unto it.

17 And [g] the women her neighbors gave it a name, saying, There is a son born to Naomi; and they called his name deem it, by repaying the proportion of the purchase-money; except as Ruth, Elimelech's daughter-in-law, was entitled to his inheritance, according to the law given in the case of those who left daughters only. (Notes, Num. 27:1—11.)—To obviate therefore all doubt and difficulty in this matter, Boaz proposed to this kinsman of Elimelech, that he should both redeem the estate and marry Ruth; in which case the estate would certainly belong to his eldest son by her: but if he was unwilling to do it, he desired him to renounce his claim, and he would marry her, and redeem the land for himself. The kinsman however was not willing to marry the poor widow, lest he should injure his circumstances, or create himself disturbance; for perhaps he had at this time a wife and family: he therefore resigned all claim to the estate also. This transaction respects all the several laws above referred to; and doubtless the whole was settled in the most regular, legal, and customary manner: and as the pulling off the shoe was not done by Ruth with the prescribed ceremonies, but, as it appears, by the kinsman himself; it seems not to refer merely to the law about refusing to marry a brother's widow, but to have been the custom in transferring inheritances. (Note, Deut. 25:5—10.)—The manner in which Boaz brought forward this business, evinced a strict regard to openness, fairness, and equity; and also an affection for Ruth, whom it is evident he was desirous of marrying, provided the kinsman was willing to relinquish his prior claim.

V. 9, 10. As Orpah had preferred her connexions in Moab to her prospects in Israel, she was not considered in this transaction; and Naomi transferred all her claim to Ruth. Consequently, when the nearest kinsman, before the elders of his city, by legal process, gave up his claim; Boaz, by marrying Ruth, possessed the whole right of Elimelech. Yet according to the law of God, and the custom in Israel, the eldest son of this marriage must be considered as the heir of Elimelech, and of Mahlon the former husband of Ruth: so that the land would be called by the name of one of them, and not by that of Boaz, that the family might not be considered as extinct.

V. 11, 12. Gate.] (Marg. Ref. on v. 1, a.—Note, Job 29:7—11.) The public recognition of Boaz's taking Ruth to wife, by the elders of his city, accompanied by benedictions and prayers, may be considered as the customary method of distinguishing honorable marriage from illicit connexions.—It is observable, that only Rachel and Leah are mentioned, as having "built the house of Israel;" and that Bilhah and Zilpah, Jacob's concubines, are not named.—The law, forbidding the admission of Moabites into the congregation of Israel, seems not to have related to marriages with such as embraced the true religion; especially in such peculiar circumstances: for there is no intimation in Scripture that Boaz acted improperly on this occasion. (Note, Deut. 23:3—5.)

V. 13—15. Naomi was congratulated on this occasion, more than either Boaz or Ruth; as she had the ruins of her family thus providentially repaired, and her old age solaced after the death of her husband and sons, through her daughter-in-law, who had loved her, and been a greater blessing to her than seven sons. The piety of the language, and the conduct of all parties on this occasion, should not pass unnoticed.—The term kinsman, or redeemer, seems here applied to Naomi's grandson, as inheriting the rights of the whole family. (14,15.)

V. 17. The women named the child, doubtless by the approbation of all parties. "Obed" signifies a servant, or serviceable; probably intimating a confidence, that Obed would be very useful to his family and people. From him Christ descended: and thus peculiar blessings and honor redounded to Boaz, who had not disdained the low estate of Ruth, but had paid due honor to his deceased relations, and their decayed family; while the kinsman, who refused so to do, is not allowed a name in the book of God, but is disgracefully consigned to oblivion.

V. 18—22. Pharez was born about 1714 years before Christ, and David was born about 630 years after, and ten generations seem too few for such a length of time. But the difficulty is very greatly increased, when it is recollected, that Salmon married Rachab, (doubtless the same as Rahab, Matt. 1:5.) about 1450 B. C. leaving 365 years or more, to only four generations! Some learned men have attempted to shew, that possibly Salmon, Boaz, Obed, and Jesse, were remarkably long-lived; and that Boaz, Obed, Jesse, and David were born in the extreme old age of their respective fathers: but this at least is not probable, and it is certain that Jesse lived till David arrived at full manhood. (Notes, 1 Sam. 17:12,13. 22:3,4.) It is therefore much more natural to suppose, that some names are omitted in the genealogy; as we know the case to have been in the genealogies given by the evangelists. (Note, Matt. 1: 2—17.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Diligence in business, punctuality to engagements, integrity, and fair dealing in the affairs of common life, not only adorn a profession of godliness, but tend to prosperity in the ordinary course of Providence.—Men are generally ready to embrace opportunities of increasing their estates, but few know the value of godliness: nor can it be expected, that those, who supremely value carnal things, will make a due estimate of spiritual excellency in the character of others. Such are frequently the wise men of this world; they do not attend to the concerns of their souls, and they reject the salvation of Christ, for fear of "marring their inheritance!" Indeed, selfishness not only obliterates all charity and justice, but extinguishes natural affection; and causes men to treat with disdain their nearest relatives, however excellent, if poor and in need of their assistance. But the loss, in the final event of things, will be entirely their own; as the Lord will raise up other friends for such as love and trust in him, and especially for those who have shewn themselves willing to bear hardship for his sake. Nay, such persons, however poor, are a blessing to all connected with them. Especially they are to be valued in the marriage-relation: "A prudent wife is from the Lord," and "the price of a virtuous woman is above rubies." (Notes, Prov. 19:14. 31:10.)—As marriage is honorable in the sight of God, it ought to be publicly contracted and recognised, that it may be distinguished from those deeds of darkness which require concealment: and it is likely to be comfortable when the law of God is regarded, and his blessing supplicated. In this important concern, (as in all others,) pious people should pray for each other, that the parties may live together in peace, be good examples, do worthily in the church and in the world, and train up families for future usefulness, when they have served their generation, and are fallen asleep.—The birth of children also calls for united prayers, that they may be indeed a comfort to their parents, blessings to society, and blessed themselves: for without the blessing of God, none of these things can be expected; and the general disuse of this pious language and behavior, by professing Christians, too plainly evinces that true religion is at a low ebb among us.—We should never promise ourselves much comfort from any earthly object; for our heaviest trials often arise from those quarters whence we expected most satisfaction, and our greatest solace from those whence we expected none: indeed one truly Christian friend may be better to us, than all our children and relations.—But if these streams are so refreshing, what may we not expect from the Fountain? Let us then look to Jesus, our Redeemer, who "though he was rich, for our sakes became poor," and at the price of his sufferings both ransomed our inheritance, and purchased us to be espoused unto him in truth and righteousness; not induced by our worthiness or excellence, but by his own unfathomable love to our polluted souls. To this union he invites the perishing sinner: this relation to the poor despised believer, he avows and glories in. May we therefore joyfully accept of his salvation, expect all our felicity from him, and devote ourselves to his service; and, being "bought with a price, let us glorify him with our bodies and spirits, which are his;" obeying his commandments, imitating his example, and recommending him and his salvation by word and deed to all around us!

THE

FIRST BOOK OF SAMUEL,

OTHERWISE CALLED

THE FIRST BOOK OF THE KINGS.

THIS book and the following form but one in the Hebrew canon, and derive their name from Samuel; though he could not write more than the former part (perhaps twenty-four chapters) of the first book.—The remainder of them is, with great probability, ascribed to the prophets Nathan and Gad: for we read in Chronicles, "Now the acts of David the king, first and last, behold they are written in the book of Samuel the seer, and in the book of Nathan the prophet, and in the book of Gad the seer." (1 Chr. 29:29.) It is therefore very reasonable to conclude, that Samuel wrote the first acts of David; and Nathan and Gad, continuing the history after Samuel's death, wrote his last acts, or the records of his reign till near his death; and that the whole was formed into one book, which was ascribed to Samuel, as the more eminent person, and as the latter part formed a sort of appendix to the history which he had begun.—It may also be observed, that in the time of Samuel a new epoch commenced: the government by judges was changed for that of kings: and Samuel anointed both those kings whose history is here given, and was himself a principal person in all these transactions.—From the Vulgate Latin translation, these books are also called "The first and the second books of Kings;" and consequently the two following are "The third and fourth books of Kings."—When Eli was judge and high priest of Israel, Samuel was born: and while Eli's indulged sons were bringing destruction on themselves and their family, and almost on the nation; Samuel was growing up in wisdom and piety, to be an illustrious prophet, and the reformer, deliverer, and judge of Israel. Yet the people, at length ungratefully weary of his mild government, desired a king: and Saul having been placed over them, his family was soon set aside for his disobedience to God; and David was anointed as his successor. The rest of the book is taken up with an account of David's illustrious actions, and the harassing persecutions which he endured, till the death of Saul opened his way to mount the throne. It is not agreed, how many years elapsed during these events; some confining them within eighty years, and others extending them to a hundred and fifteen.—It is evident that this book was extant, when the first book of Kings was written. (Compare 2:35,36. with 1 Kings 2:27.) Almost every subsequent part of Scripture refers to the events recorded in it, as of undoubted certainty: especially very many of the Psalms are poems made on occasion of one or other of them.—Our Lord and his apostles quote it, as a part of the sacred Oracles. (Matt. 12:3,4. Acts 7:45,46. 13:21,22.)—The history of David, the son of Jesse, forms a sort of introduction to all the prophecies concerning his family; and especially concerning Christ, who sprang from the root of Jesse, was distinguished as the Son of David, and inherited the throne of David. (Ps. 2: 72: 89:19—37. Is. 9:6,7. 11:1—10. Acts 2:25—31.) The narrative itself may in some sense be considered as prophetical, recording many typical events, which had their accomplishment in Christ. The book likewise contains several direct prophecies concerning the families of Eli and Saul, which were speedily fulfilled: and the song of Hannah concludes with a prophecy of our Lord, in which he is, for the first time, predicted expressly as the Messiah, the anointed of God. (2:10.)

Elkanah a Levite has two wives, 1, 2. He goes yearly to worship at Shiloh, 3. He favors and comforts Hannah, when insulted by Peninnah on account of her barrenness, 4—8. NOTES.

CHAP. I. V. 1. Elkanah appears to have been a Levite of the family of Kohath. (Marg. Ref.—Notes, 1 Chr. 6:16—38.)—Ramathaim-zophim was the place which is afterwards called Ramah; (19) and from the dual number here used,

2 And he had [e] two wives; the name of the one was Hannah, and the name of the other Peninnah: and Peninnah had children, [f] but Hannah had no children.

3 And this man went up out of his city [*] yearly [g] to worship, and to sacrifice unto the LORD of hosts in [h] Shiloh: and the [i] two sons of Eli, Hophni and Phinehas, the priests of the LORD, were there.

4 And when the time was that Elkanah [k] offered, he gave to Peninnah his wife, and to all her sons and her daughters, portions.

5 But unto Hannah he gave a [†] worthy portion: for [l] he loved Hannah: but the LORD had [m] shut up her womb.

6 And her [n] adversary also [‡] provoked her sore, for to make her fret, because the LORD had shut up her womb.

7 And as he did so [o] year by year, [§] when she went up to the house of the LORD, so she provoked her: therefore she wept, and did not eat.

8 Then said Elkanah her husband to her, Hannah, [p] why weepest thou? and why eatest thou not? and why is thy heart grieved? [q] am not I better to thee than ten sons? [Practical Observations.]

9 ¶ So Hannah rose up after they had eaten in Shiloh, and after they had drunk: (now Eli the priest sat upon a seat by a post of [r] the temple of the LORD:)

10 And she was [‖] in bitterness of soul, and [s] prayed unto the LORD, [t] and wept sore.

11 And she [u] vowed a vow, and said, O LORD of hosts, if thou wilt indeed [x] look on the affliction of thine handmaid, and [y] remember me, and not forget thine handmaid, but wilt give unto thine handmaid [¶] a man-child, then I will give him unto the LORD all the days of his life, it is supposed to have been divided into two parts, upon distinct hills. The word "Zophim" signifies watchmen, perhaps because some watch-towers and watchmen were stationed there; for "Ramah" signifies exaltation: or it might be so called from Zuph, Elkanah's ancestor.—Ephrath is the same as Beth-lehem; and probably Elkanah, or his ancestor Zuph, was called an Ephrathite, from being allied in the female line to a family of the tribe of Judah, whose inheritance lay there; or because he was born at Ephrath. (Gen. 48:7.)

V. 2. Hannah seems to have been the first wife of Elkanah: but as she was barren, he probably took Peninnah, (as Abraham took Hagar,) from an impatient desire of children: (Note, Gen. 16:1—3.) but the event shewed, that in deviating from the original law of marriage, though in a manner then tolerated, he little consulted his own peace and comfort.

V. 3. The stated worship at Shiloh was observed, but probably in an irregular manner; otherwise Elkanah, a Levite, would have had employment at the sanctuary. In those times of apostacy and idolatry, when "men abhorred the offering of the LORD," through the wickedness of Eli's sons, (2:17.) it was commendable in Elkanah to go up, though but once a year, perhaps at the Passover, to worship the Lord; the original words, however, may mean, that he went up at stated times, probably at the three great feasts. The Israelites were confined to one place, one altar, and one priesthood; and therefore Elkanah could not go elsewhere. But, though the wickedness of ministers does not deprive the pious Christian of the blessing, nor furnish a sufficient excuse for neglecting the ordinances of God; yet we, not being under a similar limitation, should certainly prefer attending on the ministry of those, who appear at least to be walking heaven-ward themselves, as well as teaching others the true way thither, and not countenance either heretical teachers, or ungodly men. (Notes, Prov. 19:27. 1 John 4:1—3. 2 John 7—11.)

V. 4—7. After the other appointed sacrifices had been brought, the peace-offerings were presented, on part of which the offerer feasted with his family, having given to each a portion. On these occasions Elkanah shewed his peculiar attention to Hannah by the customary indications; which probably excited the envy and jealousy of Peninnah, as well as her proud contempt of Hannah's barrenness; and thus great uneasiness was occasioned. (Notes, Gen. 16:4—6. 37:3.) For Hannah laid it far more to heart than she ought; and her perpetual sorrow distressed Elkanah, and greatly interrupted the comfort and benefit of their religious ordinances; and this might be one reason why Hannah refused to partake of the sacrifices, lest the Lord should be displeased with her for eating them mourning. (Deut. 26:14. Hos. 9:4. Mal. 2:13. Notes, Neh. 8:9—12.)

V. 8. Elkanah seems to have endured Peninnah's angry and malevolent tempers and conduct with great patience: and he most tenderly remonstrated with Hannah concerning her immoderate grief; and reminded her, that, though she had no children, she possessed his affection, which would conduce more to her real comfort than ten sons would without it: and that therefore her situation was more desirable than that of Peninnah.—This gentle rebuke prevailed with her to repress her grief, and perhaps to partake of the sacrifice: but that did not comfort her heart, till she had poured it out in prayer. (18. Note, 9—11.) and [z] there shall no razor come upon his head.

12 And it came to pass, as she * continued praying before the LORD, that Eli marked her mouth.

13 Now Hannah, she [a] spake in her heart; only her lips moved, but her voice was not heard: therefore Eli thought [b] she had been drunken.

14 And Eli said unto her, [c] How long wilt thou be drunken? [d] put away thy wine from thee.

15 And Hannah answered and said, [e] No, my lord; I am a woman † of a sorrowful spirit: I have drunk neither wine nor strong drink, but have [f] poured out my soul before the LORD.

16 Count not thine handmaid for [g] a daughter of Belial; for [h] out of the abundance of my ‡ complaint and grief have I spoken hitherto.

17 Then Eli answered and said, [i] Go in peace: and [k] the God of Israel grant thee thy petition that thou hast asked of him.

18 And she said, [l] Let thine handmaid find grace in thy sight. So the woman [m] went her way, and did eat, and her countenance was no more sad.

19 ¶ And [n] they rose up in the morning early, and worshipped before the LORD, and returned, and came to their house to Ramah: and Elkanah knew Hannah his wife; [o] and the LORD remembered her.

20 Wherefore it came to pass, § when the time was come about after Hannah had conceived, that she bare a son, and called his name ‖ Samuel, saying, [p] Because I have asked him of the LORD.

21 And [q] the man Elkanah, and all his house, went up to offer unto the LORD the yearly sacrifice, and his vow.

22 But Hannah went not up; for she said unto her husband, I will not go up until the child be weaned, [r] and then I will bring him, that he may appear before the LORD, [s] and there abide [t] for ever.

23 And Elkanah her husband said unto her, [u] Do what seemeth thee good: tarry until thou have weaned him; only [x] the LORD establish his word. So the woman abode, and gave her [y] son suck until she weaned him.

V. 9—11. The tabernacle, now become stationary, was sometimes called "the temple." (3:3. Ps. 27:4. 29:9.)—Hannah, with great earnestness and importunity, entreated the Lord to grant her a son, and vowed that he should be a perpetual Nazarite; devoted to the service of God alone, all his days. (Notes, Judg. 13:4,5. 16:17—21.) Some learned men compute that Samuel was born before Samson, whom God thus separated to himself, and for a special purpose, before his birth; but others think he was born about the same time, or a few years after him. The chronology of this part of the history, however, is extremely obscure, and the attempts of learned men to elucidate it are peculiarly unsatisfactory, and often widely discordant from each other.

V. 12—16. Probably Eli had many times seen instances of such intemperance as he here charged upon Hannah; and perhaps he sat near the tabernacle to repress these enormities, though he did not adopt the only effectual method. (Note, 2:23—25.) Perceiving her great discomposure, and observing that her lips moved, he too hastily attributed it to drunkenness. But Hannah had now obtained such inward consolation, that this severe reflection neither distressed her, nor excited her anger: so that she intimated her abhorrence of the crime with which she had been charged, and calmly and respectfully explained to him the real cause of her agitation. In doing this, she emphatically described the nature of fervent prayer: "I have poured out my soul before the LORD." (Marg. Ref. f.) For prayer does not consist merely in using good words, but in opening before the Lord the inmost soul, and in unreserved confidence, pouring out before him all our fears, sorrows, desires, and purposes; as a child would before a loving father, from whom alone he had expectations of relief, and who, he was satisfied, was able and disposed to help him.

V. 17, 18. The character of Eli was very defective; yet there are several traces in it of true piety, and this answer is one. He was open to conviction, and willing to acknowledge himself mistaken, and by his commendation, blessing, and prayers, to make Hannah amends for the injury which he had done her. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 19—22. It is probable that Elkanah established Hannah's vow, in a solemn act of worship, before he left Shiloh. (Note, Num. 30:3—8.) Samuel's name would remind his mother, every time it was mentioned, of the Lord's kindness in remembering her affliction, and in answering her prayer.—The women were not commanded to go up to the sanctuary; and Hannah, after Samuel's birth, had a sufficient engagement at home.

V. 23. Establish his word.] As no promise of God respecting Samuel is recorded, it is thought that the clause may be rendered, 24 And when she had weaned him, [z] she took him up with her, with three bullocks, and one ephah of flour, and a bottle of wine, and brought him unto the [a] house of the LORD in Shiloh: and the child was young.

25 And they slew a bullock, and [b] brought the child to Eli.

26 And she said, O my lord! [c] as thy soul liveth, my lord, I am the woman that stood by thee here, praying unto the LORD.

27 [d] For this child I prayed; and [e] the LORD hath given me my petition which I asked of him:

28 Therefore also I have * lent him to the LORD; as long as he liveth † he shall be lent to the LORD. And [f] he worshipped the LORD there.

V. 24, 25. One of these bullocks might be intended for a burnt-offering; and the other two for thank-offerings or peace-offerings, on part of which, and of the flour and wine, Elkanah with his family and friends, and with the Levites, might feast before the Lord. (Notes, Lev. 3: 7:12—18. Deut. 12:5—7.) After the burnt-offering had been sacrificed, they seem to have presented Samuel to Eli, before the other offerings were slain.—The original words rendered, "The child was young," seem to imply that he was exceedingly dear to his parents; who exercised great self-denial, in leaving him at the sanctuary at so early an age. (Note, 2:18,19.)—Some think he was about three years old; others that he was seven. (Note, Gen. 21:8—12.)

V. 26, 27. Hannah's heart was too full of joy and gratitude upon this occasion, to notice the injurious reflection Eli had cast upon her: but she well remembered her prayer and vow, and the Lord's gracious answer.—The words rendered, "as thy soul liveth," are supposed by some to have been intended merely as an expression of good will; May thy soul live. (Marg. Ref. c.)

V. 28. The word rendered "lent," is nearly similar to that translated asked; and refers to the name of Samuel.—Hannah had asked him of God, and now she returned him to him. (Marg. —Notes, Ex. 3:21,22. 11:2,3. 12:35,36.) It was her intention, that, as a Levite and a Nazarite, he should spend all his life in the immediate service of the sanctuary; but the Lord was pleased afterwards to employ him as a prophet, and a judge in the public affairs of Israel.—Some think that Elkanah is meant, when it is said, "He worshipped the LORD:" but others understand it of Samuel, who thus gave some early ndications of piety.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—8.

Experience universally evinces the kindness, as well as equity, of the original institution of marriage, and the divine law concerning it: for every deviation makes way for domestic contention, envy, malice, impatience, and every evil work, to the interruption of the worship of God, and the ruin of family religion. —None of our troubles, however, should be allowed to interfere with our attendance on the ordinances of God: for if Satan can induce us to yield to discouragement in one respect, he will attempt it in another, and never cease to harass us, when engaged in the duties of religion, till he has driven us from every means of grace, and solemn act of holy worship: so that resolute resistance and perseverance, with earnest cries to the Lord for his assistance, are our only successful weapons: and we should not in the least degree "give place to the devil."—The human heart can neither bear prosperity without insolence, nor adversity without impatience. Instead of being contented and thankful in our appointed situation, and rejoicing in the happiness of others, we are prone to murmur and to vex ourselves, because others are more favored or prospered, than we suppose ourselves to be: yet could we change conditions in every respect with them, we should generally increase our uneasiness; whereas impartial reflection upon our own situation in life, compared with our unworthiness, and with the condition of others, would silence our complaints, or convert them into thankful praises. —All inordinate passions are irrational, as well as inimical to our comfort; and even pious Christians, who are shocked at the thought of yielding to other temptations, often rebelliously and ungratefully indulge excessive grief against which they ought especially to watch and pray. But if our earthly comforts, when duly estimated, being greater than our sorrows, should console us under our trials; surely the favor of God is better to his people, than all beloved relations or outward satisfactions, and sufficient to compensate for the loss or the want of them all.—Every one should comfort those who are in bitterness of soul: yet a mild and tender rebuke is frequently the greatest kindness, when we see our friends forgetting their mercies, or their duty.

V. 9—18.

Nothing can give solid comfort to those who are in anguish of spirit, but the assurance and experience of the love of God in their hearts; nor will that cordial in general be communicated, till they have "poured out their souls" repeatedly in earnest secret prayer. This must bring down the blessings, which flow from the atoning blood of Christ, and are vouchsafed through his intercession; and it is necessary to render public ordinances profitable and joyful: nor can a concurrence of all possible distresses and temptations render that man miserable, or long uncomfortable, who rightly improves the precious privilege of access to the mercy-seat of a reconciled God in Christ Jesus. Yet, through Satan's temptations, and the evil of our hearts, we are often reluctant to begin, slight in presenting, and hasty in concluding our petitions! Hence it is that we go mourning all the day long, instead of "casting our burden upon the LORD:" and our miseries will increase upon us, till we take this course. (Notes, Phil. 4:5—7. 1 Pet. 5:5—7.)—The more we experience the sweet consolations which are communicated while the soul is poured out before the Lord, the more we shall determine "to call upon him as long as we live." (Note, Ps. 116:2.)—We ought to be very cautious how we condemn those, who are uncommonly earnest in religion, as if guilty of hypocrisy, enthusiasm, or some other iniquity; and ministers especially, in their zeal against sin, ought to be careful, that they do not grieve such as are "in bitterness of spirit:" but if we have rashly censured those who are not faulty, we should be ready to hear their plea, to retract our decision, to give them encouragement, and to assist them with our prayers.—Among the various trials, to which we are exposed, none is in general more bitter, than the suspicions and censures of those whom we love and esteem. But while "the God of all grace" hears our prayers, we may bear even this with patience, and answer it with meekness: for though it is painful to be counted "children of Belial" by our brethren; yet if our loving Father sees that correction needful, and favors us with the assurance of his acceptance and the light of his countenance, we may thankfully submit to his will.—Even before those blessings which we have asked in prayer are vouchsafed, or expected with certainty, he sometimes communicates such supports to the soul, as exceed every temporal advantage, can be destroyed by no outward trouble, and give a relish for those mercies which before we undervalued or overlooked.—We are also most likely to obtain all our warranted desires, when we are rendered most willing to submit them to the will of God.

No temporal satisfaction can be durably comfortable, which we cannot name, "Asked of the LORD;" and which we do not receive from him with gratitude as an answer to our prayers, and uprightly desire to use to his glory and in his service. If he give us children, we shall have the most comfort in them, when they are most entirely his: and therefore we should devote them to him from the first; bring them up for him; and pray continually that we may see early proofs of his having received them into his family, and made them his to serve him all their days.—The vows that we have mingled with the prayers made in our distress, must be performed with gratitude, when our desires have been granted; that others may praise our God along with us, and be encouraged to trust and call upon him.—It does not become the worshippers of God to be soon weary of his ordinances; but to leave them reluctantly, when called to attend on other duties: and when men are in such haste to set out on journeys, or to engage in business, that they have not time to worship God, they are likely to proceed without his presence and blessing.—There are times, when domestic employments may render it a duty, to be occasionally absent from public ordinances: but those seasons should abound the more in the exercises of secret devotion; and when special blessings have been conferred, and restraints are removed, the true believer will go with more longing desires to the courts of the Lord, to pay his vows, and render his grateful praises. With what transport then will he at last leave this distant land below, to ascend to the courts above, to receive the full answer of all his prayers, and to offer everlasting praises, with an uninterrupted flow of holy affections and ineffable delight!

NOTES.

CHAP. II. V. 1. The word prayer is sometimes used for any act of devotion, whether it be confined to petition, or include thanksgiving and praise, or chiefly consist of the latter. (Marg. Ref. a.)—When Hannah requested a son, she spake in her heart, and "her voice was not heard;" but when, according to her vow, she presented Samuel to God, his glory and the edification of his people required a public acknowledgment. Whilst her heart was enlarged with love and gratitude, she was led on, by the Holy Spirit, to speak with great enlargement and fervency, and with clear discernment of divine things, on the gracious dealings of God towards Israel, and of his dispensations towards men in general in every age.—"Her heart rejoiced," not in Samuel, but "in the LORD;" in his power, faithfulness, and love.—"Her horn" (the weapon for defence and annoyance in some animals,) "was exalted in the LORD, and her mouth was enlarged over her enemies:" being delivered from the taunts and reproaches of her rival, she took that as an earnest of more important victories, and rejoiced in the hope of triumphing over the adversaries of her soul; for she "rejoiced in the salvation of the LORD," and in looking for the coming of Him, who is the Salvation of his people. (Notes, Hab. 3:17—19. Luke 1:46—55. Phil. 4:4.)

V. 2. From personal mercies, Hannah proceeded to contemplate the perfections of God. Holiness, which comprises perfect wisdom, purity, justice, truth, goodness, and mercy, is in him alone underived, immutable, and complete. "There is none holy as the LORD:" all created holiness is derived, dependent, mutable, and scanty; all human holiness mixed with impurity; and all the idols of the nations are abominable demons. Nay, says she, "there is none beside thee," no other God; and all creatures are "less than nothing, and vanity" in the comparison with him: "neither is there any rock, like our God;" he is our only Protector, Refuge, and Support; and they only are safe and strong, who trust entirely in him. (Notes, Ex. 15:11. Deut. 32:4. Is. 43:8—13. 44:6—8. 45:1—7.)

bers, courage, or ability, glory in themselves and insultingly despise believers. But let them cease from such proud boastings, arrogance, and reproaches; remembering, that "the LORD is a God of knowledge, and by him actions are weighed." (Note, Is. 30:18,19.) He distinguishes men's characters, and weighs their actions in the balance, and knows when to interpose in behalf of his people: he also knows those, who despise and hate him, and will in due time effectually punish them, though for a season they may seem to prosper.—The last clause may be rendered, "By him works are regulated:" he orders every thing in perfect wisdom and power, and none can defeat his purposes. Or, still more exactly according to the text, Are not works by him regulated? (Marg. Ref.)

V. 4—8. The events which these verses speak of, are often called the caprices of blind fortune: but they in fact are the settled purposes of God, thus manifesting his own perfections by saving those who trust in him; and pouring contempt upon all the distinctions, in which ungodly men confide and glory. Are they proud of valor, military skill, or strength? their bows shall be broken, and themselves crushed by an inferior and despised company. Do they glory in riches, and riot in ease and luxury, while they despise and oppress the poor? they are often impoverished, and reduced to the necessity of hiring themselves out for bread, whilst the poor and hungry are surprisingly advanced to affluence. Do any glory, as Peninnah did, in the increase of their families, and despise the childless? Providence may soon by unexpected death reduce their numbers; whilst the desolate are as wonderfully increased. The Lord gives life, and takes it away: the most vigorous are by the stroke of his hand brought down to the gates of the grave; and the feeble are unexpectedly restored to health and strength. Such vicissitudes may likewise be often observed in men's circumstances and families, in which capacity and industry prove utterly unavailing to prevent the adversity of some; while others are wonderfully prospered, and rise even from the lowest and most abject condition to the throne of glory. (Notes, Ps. 107:33—43. 113:7—9. Ec. 9:11,12.) Events of this kind occasion surprise, and many attempt to account for them; but "the pillars of the earth are the LORD's, and he hath set the world upon them:" and the same power, which first created and established the earth in its settled course, without human help, and in such a manner as no human power can change; by his secret over-ruling providence does every thing, and should be acknowledged in every thing. (Notes, Job 34:20—30. Dan. 4:34—37. Rom. 11:33—36.)—These things are equally applicable to the dispensations of his kingdom of grace; in which he respects, not men's wisdom, learning, greatness, or imagined excellency, but selects the base, the poor, the foolish of the world, having taught them to feel their guilt and misery, and to value his free and precious salvation. Thus he "taketh the poor out of the dust, and the beggar from the dunghill, to set them among princes, and to make them inherit the throne of glory;" and all this "according to the eternal purpose, which he hath purposed in Christ Jesus our Lord." (Notes, Matt. 19:29,30. 1 Cor. 1:26—31. Eph. 1:3—12.)

V. 9. The saints are those, whom the grace of God has separated from a sinful world, and sanctified unto himself: and "he will keep their feet," so that they shall be directed and upheld in his ways; they shall not so stumble as utterly to be cast down, nor be so snared as finally to be taken captive by their enemies. (Notes, Ps. 37:23,24. 1 Pet. 2:2—5.) But, however sinners may now boast, and fill the world with disturbance and confusion, they will ere long be put to silence, and sink speechless, under the divine sentence of condemnation, into everlasting darkness and despair. (Notes, Matt. 22:11—14. Rom. 3:19,20.) "For by strength shall no man prevail," either to injure and overturn the interest of true religion, or to secure themselves from merited destruction. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 10. While the adversaries of God shall be destroyed for ever, his church shall prosper, not only as it did under the government of David, his king, whom Samuel by his command

11 ¶ And Elkanah went to Ramah to his house; and the child did [l] minister unto the LORD before Eli the priest.

12 Now [m] the sons of Eli were [n] sons of Belial; they [o] knew not the LORD.

13 And the priests' custom with the people was, that when any man offered sacrifice, the priest's servant came, while the flesh was in seething, with a flesh-hook of three teeth in his hand;

14 And he struck it into the pan, or kettle, or caldron, or pot; [p] all that the flesh-hook brought up the priest took for himself. So they did in Shiloh unto all the Israelites that came thither.

15 Also [q] before they burnt the fat, the priest's servant came, and said to the man that sacrificed, Give flesh to roast for the priest; for he will not have sodden flesh of thee, but raw.

16 And if any man said unto him, Let them not fail to burn the fat * presently, and then take as much as thy soul desireth; then he would answer him, Nay; but thou shalt give it me now: and if not, [r] I will take it by force.

17 Wherefore the sin of the young men was very great [s] before the LORD; for men [t] abhorred the offering of the LORD.

V. 11. The Levites were not called to any of their peculiar services, until they were twenty-five years of age; but Samuel, being devoted to God in an especial manner, was, from a child, employed about the sanctuary in those things of which he was capable, and thus "did minister unto the LORD." (Notes, Num. 8:24—26.)

V. 12. The sons of Eli had been brought up in the courts of God, and instructed out of the law, and probably had some general speculative knowledge of God and divine things: yet being sons of Belial, men of a rebellious and disobedient spirit, (Marg. Ref. n. Note, Deut. 13:13—18.) it is said, that "they knew not the LORD." They had neither that acquaintance with the divine perfections, nor that disposition of heart to love them, which are essential to true religion; nor that experience of the faithfulness and loving-kindness of God, to which those attain, who trust him and call on him, and have real communion with him. (Notes, 1 Chr. 28:9. John 17:1—3.)—Eli appears to have been a godly man, and probably set his sons a good example in private life, and gave them good advice and instruction: but he yielded to a natural timidity and feebleness of mind, and shunned trouble and exertion. Thus he was induced to indulge his children, instead of exercising his parental authority to restrain and correct them when young: and he connived at many abuses in the service of the sanctuary, till they became customs, and made way for greater abominations; and even then he did not exert himself, as it became the high priest and judge of Israel, to punish and repress them. (Notes, 23—29. 3:13.)

V. 13—16. The priests had the whole breast, the right shoulder, the cheeks, and the maw, allotted to them by the law, out of every peace-offering. (Notes, Lev. 7:29—34. Deut. 18:3.) But in addition to this, it had become customary for the servants of the priest to come, while the flesh was boiling, for the use of the offerer and his friends, in vessels of various sizes, according to the nature of the oblation, placed in the court of the tabernacle; and to carry away whatever the flesh-hook, or three-pronged fork, brought up: and the people in veneration for the priesthood quietly submitted to it; by which the appetites of the priests were gratified with greater variety, and their avarice with an additional perquisite. The sons of Eli, however, were not satisfied with this innovation, which did not always secure the choicest parts: but, while they neglected or postponed "burning the fat," (which, typifying the sacrifice of Christ, and being the appointed expression of the offerer's repentance and faith, was essential to the acceptance of the sacrifice;) they insisted upon having such portions of the flesh as they chose for roasting: and when any one, however conscientiously and mildly, remonstrated against this abuse in a sacred ordinance, though willing to yield every other point, the very servants were so insolent, as to threaten to take it by force! Thus these priests "lorded it over God's heritage," and "kicked at his sacrifice which he had commanded!" (Notes, Is. 56:9—12. Hos 4:6—11. Mal. 1:12—14. 1 Pet. 5:1—4.)

V. 17. The contempt of God and his ordi

18 ¶ But Samuel [u] ministered before the LORD, being a child, girded with [x] a linen ephod.

19 Moreover his mother made him a little coat, and brought it to him [y] from year to year, when she came up with her husband to offer the yearly sacrifice.

21 And the LORD [a] visited Hannah, so that she conceived, and bare three sons and two daughters. And the child Samuel [b] grew before the LORD.

nances, shewn by the sons of Eli, was in all respects very great; and the sin was aggravated by their public character and eminent station. But it is especially noted, that through them "men abhorred the offering of the LORD." Many were so prejudiced by their scandalous behavior, as entirely to neglect religion: others would deem it unnecessary to put themselves to the trouble and expense of going up to Shiloh with their sacrifices, there to witness such enormities; which would prove a temptation to sacrificing in other places, contrary to the law: and even those who persevered in attending, were so grieved, that they hated to go, and had no comfort in the ordinances. So that the stated worship of God was likely to be quite forsaken, and general ignorance, ungodliness, profligacy, or idolatry, to ensue. It does not appear that Eli reproved his sons for these things, or refused feasting with them on those portions which they sacrilegiously obtained. (Notes, 29. Mal. 2:4—9.)

V. 18, 19. The contrast between the child Samuel and the wicked sons of Eli, between his docility and early piety and their daring impiety, seems intentionally marked, by the accounts of them being thus interwoven.—It was a trial of the faith of Elkanah and Hannah, to leave their son with such abandoned priests: but they were performing a vow, and the Lord, with whom they trusted him, preserved him from the contagion. Eli likewise was peculiarly pleased with him, and clothed him when employed at the sanctuary in a linen ephod, such as the ordinary priests wore, and others occasionally in the service of God; (Notes, 22:18. Ex. 28:40,41. 2 Sam. 6:14,15.) thus denoting the great expectations that he had from him. His parents also, who persevered in coming to the courts of the Lord, notwithstanding the misconduct of the priests, supplied him with every thing further that he wanted.

V. 20, 21. It seems that Elkanah and Hannah, having so hopeful a son, (whom however they seldom saw,) were satisfied, though for several years they had no more children. It appears also that Eli, notwithstanding his misconduct in respect of his sons, really loved those who loved the Lord; and was so pleased with the conduct of Samuel, and with the piety of his parents, that his heart was enlarged in blessing them, and in praying that they might be recompensed, for devoting their only son to the service of God's sanctuary, by the comfort of more children: and his prayer in this respect was abundantly answered.

V. 22. (Note, Ex. 38:8.) These "women that assembled at the door of the tabernacle," are said by some writers to have dedicated themselves, by courses, to the service of the sanctuary, doing any work pertaining to it, which belonged to their sex; such as spinning, weaving curtains, washing the garments, and various services of a similar nature: and by their attendance for these purposes, the priests at the sanctuary had an opportunity of forming an acquaintance with them. Their business, however, was doubtless professedly of a religious nature: but when those, who ought to have been their instructers in piety, used their influence to solicit them to wickedness, the most shameful consequences followed.—A more horrible abomination can scarcely be conceived: and it could hardly have been deemed credible, did not every age produce examples in some respects similar and not less atrocious, to the great dishonor of the gospel, and to the hardening and rejoicing of the hearts of infidels and profligates. (Notes, Jer. 23:13—15. Hos. 6:8—10 Matt. 18:7—9. 2 Pet. 2:12—14.)

V. 23—25. This last enormity induced Eli to reprove his sons; which he did in language very reasonable, and suited to the case of those who, though faulty, possess a tender conscience, but far too mild for such atrocious offenders Indeed no words ought in this case to have sufficed: the execution of condign punishment upon them was absolutely due to the insulted honor of God, and needful to counteract, by a salutary example, the fatal effects of their crimes upon the minds of the people. To have finally excluded them from the execution of every priestly office, was the least that Eli, as the high priest and the judge of Israel, ought to have done: and if he had imitated the zeal of his tribe, "who said to his father and mother, I have not seen him, neither did he acknowledge his brethren, nor know his own children;"

and [n] was in favor both with the LORD, and also with men. [Practical Observations.]

27 ¶ And there came [o] a man of God unto Eli and said unto him, Thus saith the LORD, [p] Did I plainly appear unto the house of thy father, when they were in Egypt, in Pharaoh's house?

28 And [q] did I choose him out of all the tribes of Israel to be my priest, to offer upon mine altar, to burn incense, to wear an ephod before me? and [r] did I give unto the house of thy father all the offerings made by fire of the children of Israel?

29 Wherefore [s] kick ye at my sacrifice, and at mine offering, which I have commanded in my [t] habitation; and [u] honorest thy sons above me, to [x] make yourselves fat with the chiefest of all the offerings of Israel my people?

30 Wherefore the LORD God of Israel saith, [y] I said indeed that thy house, and the house of thy father, should walk before me for ever: but now the LORD saith, [z] Be it far from me, for [a] them that honor me, [b] I will honor, and they [c] that despise me shall be lightly esteemed.

(Notes, Ex. 32:27—29. Deut. 33:9.) and if he had honored God more than his ungodly sons, he would have done it (29). There were priests enough without employing such monsters of iniquity: and his neglect was chastised in the most terrible manner, in their destruction, with the slaughter of thirty thousand Israelites, in the captivity of the ark, in his own violent death, and in the ruin of his family. (Notes, 4:) His words, however, are worthy of consideration: he endeavored to convince his sons, that their conduct was notoriously evil; that their characters were publicly infamous; that religion was scandalized; and that the Lord's people were in various ways made to transgress. If their crimes had only injured their fellow-creatures, the judge might have appointed a penalty, which being paid, or submitted to, the guilt might have been taken away: or if their sin had been of an ordinary kind, the priest, who was judge in such cases, having offered their sin-offering and entreated the Lord for them, they might have been forgiven. But their offence was so directly against the Lord, and so interwoven with their ministrations as priests, in offering the sacrifices for sin, that no expiation could be accepted for the presumptuous crime; no entreaty nor intercession could be made for them; and none could dare to stand between them and the wrath of God to which they were exposed. For the intercession for sinners with a holy God, was grounded upon the atonement of the promised Savior, which was typified by the sacrifices that they had so horribly polluted. (Notes, Heb. 10:26—31.) This seems to be the meaning couched under Eli's words, though through his timidity, and perhaps indistinct views of the subject, not very clearly expressed.—The case of these wicked men was indeed bad, when their own father could not entreat the Lord for them, though he had not resolution to restrain and punish them!—It seems that they utterly disregarded his reproof; for the Lord was determined to restore the honor of his own ordinances by executing signal vengeance upon them, and therefore he left them to total obduracy. (Notes, Deut. 2:30. Josh. 11:19,20. 2 Sam. 17:7—14. 2 Chr. 25:14—16.)—The original signifies, that it was pleasing to the Lord to slay them.

V. 27, 28. This prophet was sent, as an extraordinary messenger from God, to reprove the neglect and wickedness of his ordinary ministers the priests; and even of the high priest, the divinely constituted head of the church and ruler of the nation of Israel; and indeed, in some or all of these respects, the subsequent prophets were the same. This humiliating circumstance was in itself a token of the Lord's displeasure, and a preparation for Eli's being further warned by the mouth even of the child Samuel. (Notes, 3:8—14.) The signal favors, which the Lord had conferred on the house of Aaron, and the family of Eli, were mentioned as an aggravation of his sin, which was thus marked with black ingratitude.—"Wearing an ephod," here refers to the sacred ephod with the breast-plate of judgment, with which the high priest consulted the Lord. (Note, Ex. 28:30.)

V. 29. Eli, as high priest and judge, was bound to repress wickedness without partiality, and to maintain the worship of God in purity; so that he was deemed an accomplice in the crimes of his sons, because he connived at them. He therefore, as well as they, was charged with "kicking at" and despising the sacrifices; only regarding them as the means of their gratification. (Note, 13—16.) This arose especially from undue regard to his sons, whom he honored more than God himself; by preferring their safety, interest, authority, and indulgence, to his glory: whereas he ought not to have "known his own children," but to have disregarded even their lives; suppressing paternal tenderness, in his zeal for God and his ordinances. (Marg. Ref.—2 Cor. 5:16. 1 Tim. 5:20—22. Jam. 3:17,18.)

V. 30. The promise of a perpetual priesthood, given first to Aaron, was afterwards made to Phinehas, the son of Eleazar, Aaron's eldest son: (Notes, Num. 25:11—13. 1 Chr. 6:4—15.) but Eli was of the line of Ithamar; and it is not known on what account, and at what time, the high priesthood was transferred from Eleazar's family to that of Ithamar. In both instances a tacit condition must have been implied; namely, while "they walked before God," in faith and piety. (Note, Num. 14:34.)—The reason however, assigned for setting aside Eli's family, is of universal application: "Them that honor me I will honor, and they that despise me shall be lightly esteemed." Those who choose God for their Portion, who trust him for salvation, love him above all created objects, renounce worldly interests and connexions for his glory, and count nothing too valuable to part with, too hard to do, or too sharp to suffer, for his sake, and to promote his cause; shall be honored by him, perhaps in this world, certainly in the world to come: but those, who despise his authority, his salvation, cause, or glory, in comparison of the interests, ease, credit, or pleasure, of themselves or families; shall sink into contempt in this world, or in the world to come, or in both. V. 31—34. This prediction began to be fulfilled, when the Philistines vanquished the Israelites with great slaughter, and killed Eli's two sons in one day; and afterwards in the massacre of his descendants by Saul, and in the deposition of Abiathar for treason by Solomon, with the subsequent degradation of his family. (Notes, 4:10—18. 22:17—19. 1 Kings 2:26,27.) As Eli had so greatly offended in old age, it was also foretold, that his descendants, even in future ages, should die in the prime of life; which no doubt was exactly fulfilled, though little dependence can be placed on the instances mentioned by the Jewish writers as examples of it. —When Eli witnessed the removal of the ark from Shiloh, he might be said, according to the marginal reading, to "see the affliction of the tabernacle, for," or instead of, "all the wealth which God would have given Israel:" for thus the tabernacle was spoiled of its chief glory; and when the ark was taken by the Philistines, Israel was deprived of their richest treasure.— The tidings of these events hastened the death of Eli: and had he lived to see the subsequent calamities of his family, the sight would have been most painful to his eyes, and grieving to his heart. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 35, 36. Zadok, of the line of Eleazar, was made high priest by Solomon, whose posterity continued in that office till the captivity; (Notes, 1 Chr. 6:4—15. 24:1—4,6.) and concurred with the pious princes in promoting true religion: while the descendants of Eli, being excluded from the more honorable and lucrative parts of their office, would abjectly petition the priests for the lowest services, in order to obtain the meanest maintenance.— The concurrence of the priests of Aaron's line with the kings of David's family, while they thus walked before the anointed of the Lord, typified the union of the kingly and priestly offices in Jesus Christ: which seems also to have been predicted. No mention had been made of anointing a king over Israel, when this prophecy was delivered? (Notes, 10. Deut. 17: 14,15.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.
V. 1—10.

The mercies which we receive in answer to our prayers, should not only be acknowledged with thankful praise, but should lead us to rejoice in the Lord as the Fountain of felicity and the God of salvation; and to anticipate with cheerful hope our complete deliverance, and victory over all the enemies of our souls. From what the Lord has done for us, we should be led to meditate upon his glorious perfections, as displayed in all his works, but especially in his dealings with sinners who hope in his mercy.—An established judgment, concerning his perfect wisdom, power, love, and faithfulness, as exercised with sovereign authority, in the whole administration of his kingdom of providence and grace; and an habitual regard to his operations in all those events, which take place through the instrumentality of second causes, or rational agents, of whatever kind or character; will confirm our belief, that they, and they only, are safe and happy, who trust in him and enjoy his favor; and that the present success, boastings, and confidence of the wicked, will shortly terminate in disappointment, misery, and despair; and the troubles of every humble believer, in triumph and exultation.—Vain and transitory are all distinctions, except that between the godly and the ungodly, which will swallow up the rest, and endure to all eternity. —"The Lord is a God of knowledge, and by him actions are weighed." He knows and approves his people, and he marks with abhorrence the presumptuous offender: with uncontrollable authority he dispenses to every man as he pleases; and in his own most wise and gracious time and manner he will terminate the afflictions of his people, advance their comforts, and over-rule every event for their good. Let us then wait his time, and submissively trust him; and we shall acknowledge at last that "he hath done all things well." Every circumstance of our life and death is already appointed in the secret purpose of our God: we shall live, however exposed, till he pleases to take away our breath; and then we must die, whatever efforts be made to prolong our lives. As this period, unknown to us, cannot be far distant, it is our wisdom and duty to prepare for it: making it our one great business to obtain the favor of God and do his will; in assured hope that, however abject our condition in this world, we shall at length "inherit the throne of glory."—Though our path be dark and slippery, and beset with snares and enemies, the Lord will keep our feet, and uphold our goings, by the same power which established the earth: nor can any power prevail against his saints, or prevent the destruction of his enemies. May the Lord hasten that day, when his anointed Priest and King shall establish his authority throughout the earth, upon the ruins of all opposition!

V. 11—26.

Our gracious God accepts thanks for mercies received, as prayers for further benefits; and when we offer him his own, he considers the service as a loan, and as such will recompense it. (Note, Prov. 19:17.) Out of the mouth of babes he can perfect his praise, and by their example expose the shame of those sons of Belial who, with every advantage, know him not, and rebel against him. (Notes, Matt. 11:25,26. 21:14—16.)—We have great encouragement to devote our children to the Lord in prayer from their birth, yea from their conception, to bring them early to his courts, and to train them up in his ways; for in this manner he generally takes them into his service, and gives them that spiritual and experimental knowledge of himself, which fortifies the heart against temptation, and is the source of all godliness. (Note, 1 Chr. 28:9.)—The feeble attempts of children to serve God are noticed with condescending regard, as peculiarly pleasing to him; for in all cases, "where there is a willing mind, it is accepted according to what a man hath, and not according to what he hath not:" and the grace of God is sufficient for his feeblest servants, when in their proper place, though in the midst of the worst examples, and struggling with the most powerful temptations. (Notes, Gen. 39:)—The neglect of properly educating children, and the indulgence of their wayward inclinations, is a sin which God severely chastises in his own people: because it seems to imply a contempt of his authority and special favor, and a disregard to his glory, as well as to their immortal souls; and because it tends to the most fatal crimes and apostacies, and to the utter decay of true religion. None are generally more abandoned than the degenerate offspring of pious persons, when they have broken through all the restraints of shame, conscience, and regard to character: and thus the cause of religion suffers, both in losing those families which were its support, and in the prejudice which their base conduct excites in the minds of beholders. And when such children of Belial have been admitted into the sacred ministry, and are allowed to go on with the forms of godliness, for the sake of emolument or authority; they prove the most fatal enemies to the cause of God, and the most destructive murderers of the souls of men. Many they mislead, but more they set against all religion; they furnish infidels and scoffers with their most formidable weapons; they supply excuses to the careless and slothful; they discourage the hearts, and damp the zeal, of those who are seriously disposed, and "cause even the LORD's people to transgress;" they buoy up the confidence of hypocrites, and by their enticements and examples tempt many to those sins, which they would otherwise have trembled to think of.—We ought not, however, on account of such men, to neglect the ordinances, truths, or precepts of God's word: but by persevering in a contrary conduct, we should enter our protest against them, and evince the difference between the name and the reality of religion.—Abuses, when once introduced, are soon sanctioned by custom, and conformed to without hesitation. Thus customs and precedents acquire authority in the church, which it is deemed by a great majority very sinful to dissent from or object to, even in the most peaceful manner.—Yet when wicked men have thus gained one point for their own lucre or ambition, they will attempt another, and not shrink from the basest crimes to serve their selfish purposes. And is it not evident, that the whole system of papal antichristianity grew up in this manner, to its full stature of spiritual domination and iniquity?—The beginnings should therefore be steadily resisted; and in such a case mild arguments and gentle rebukes are feeble weapons; the coercive arm of authority should impartially and decisively interpose: for, though the magistrate must not use his sword in matters simply of conscience towards God; yet he ought to use it in punishing atrocious immorality in persons of every description: and the rulers of the church are bound, by the strongest responsibility, to exercise their spiritual authority, in excluding them from the sacred office. If, however, they escape with impunity, through the false tenderness or partial negligence of those who ought to execute condign punishment upon them, they will not escape the vengeance of God: and wretched indeed is the case of those, who, by their contempt of the sacrifice of Christ, are excluded from the benefit of his intercession; and who have so long hardened themselves, as to be left to judicial hardness, in the righteous judgment of God, because he has determined to destroy them! (Note, 2 Thes. 2:8—12.)

V. 27—36.

If the servants of God yield to temptation, and repeatedly commit iniquity; he will persevere in his rebukes and chastenings, till he has brought them to repentance: and in this process the offenders will suffer unspeakable anguish. The dishonor which they have occasioned to the name of the Lord, shall redound in disgrace upon themselves and their families; the crimes which they have connived at in others, through self-indulgence or partial affection, will be corrected in themselves; their expectations will be blasted, their distinctions withered, their usefulness precluded, and their honor laid in the dust, or rather transferred to those who honor God: and perhaps the repeated and severest strokes of the Lord's chastising rod, shall pursue them down to the grave.—That improper regard to the interests of his family, which induces a man to offend God, often proves the immediate cause of its ruin; whilst a disregard shewn by any one, to all personal or relative interests, when the glory of God is concerned, forms the best method of promoting the welfare of his posterity.—Many of the Lord's offending people live to witness terrible effects of their misconduct; but how would it grieve their hearts, if they could foresee all the future consequences of every kind, to their families, and to the church, and in hardening sinners to their destruction! Let us endeavor

CHAP. III.

The Lord reveals himself to the child Samuel, and informs him of his purposes against the house of Eli, 1—14. Samuel, adjured by Eli, tells him the vision; and Eli answers submissively, 15—18. Samuel is established to be a prophet of the Lord, 19—21.

AND [a] the child Samuel ministered unto the LORD before Eli. And [b] the word of the LORD was precious in hose days; there was no open vision.

2 And it came to pass at that time, when Eli was laid down in his place, and [c] his eyes began to wax dim, that he could not see;

3 And ere [d] the lamp of God went out in [e] the temple of the LORD, where the ark of God was, and Samuel was laid down to sleep;

4 That the LORD [f] called Samuel: and he answered, Here am I.

5 And he ran unto Eli, and said, Here am I; for thou calledst me. And he said, I called not; lie down again. And he went and lay down.

6 And the LORD called yet again, Samuel. And Samuel arose and went to Eli, and said, Here am I; for thou didst call me. And he answered, I called not, [g] my son; lie down again.

7 * Now Samuel [h] did not yet know the LORD, neither was the word of the LORD yet revealed unto him.

8 And the LORD called Samuel again [i] the third time. And he arose, and went to Eli, and said, Here am I; for thou didst call me. And Eli perceived that the LORD had called the child.

9 Therefore Eli said unto Samuel, Go, lie down; and it shall be, if he call thee, that thou shalt say, [k] Speak, LORD, for thy servant heareth. So Samuel went, and lay down in his place.

to conceive of them, that we may be led to greater abhorrence and dread of sin, and to more constant watchfulness and prayer: for these things were written for our warning, that we might the more earnestly resist temptation, and strive against the beginnings of iniquity, and train up our families "in the nurture and admonition of the Lord."—But whosoever misbehaves, or is degraded, the work of the Lord shall not be stayed for want of instruments: and though others have been and are useful and faithful, as servants, in their several generations; yet the Son of God is the faithful and merciful High Priest, who doeth according to all that is in the heart of his heavenly Father, and whose priesthood shall be unchangeable and eternal. The meanest office under him is great preferment; his pleasant service is perfect freedom: he will here feed, and hereafter glorify, all who disinterestedly serve him; but the hirelings he will utterly exclude.—May he furnish and send forth many faithful ministers, who may seek his glory, and follow his example; and never henceforth suffer any, who resemble Hophni and Phinehas, to prostitute the sacred ministry to their avarice and ambition, or to disgrace it by their crimes!

NOTES.

CHAP. III. V. 1. Samuel, under the direction of Eli, diligently performed such services at the tabernacle as he was capable of. (Notes, 2:11,18,19.) He is supposed at this time to have been about twelve years of age; and he was early prepared to enter on the prophetical office, for which the Lord intended him. (Note, Jer. 1:5.)—From the death of Moses, no more than wo prophets have been mentioned; (except Deborah, who is called a prophetess:) and these only delivered an occasional message, and then retired; so that their names are not recorded. (2:27. Judg. 6:8—10.) Samuel was therefore the first eminent prophet after Moses; and with him prophecy was openly established: so that for several ages prophets were raised up in Israel by a regular succession. But before this time there had been "no open vision:" whatever revelation might be made to individuals, or occasional messages publicly delivered, there was no acknowledged prophet, to whom the people might resort, to know the mind and will of God: and therefore such intimations, as were then given, were more highly valued, than when the gift of prophecy became more common. (Note, Am. 8:11—14.)

V. 2, 3. The lamp in the sanctuary, ought to have been constantly kept burning. (Marg. Ref.—Notes, Ex. 27:20,21. 30:7,8.)—Eli being old and infirm had lain down long before; but Samuel was just retired to rest, in some room adjoining that of Eli, and near to the sanctuary.

V. 4—6. The Lord called Samuel by name, in an audible voice: (Marg. Ref. f:) which he mistook for the call of Eli, who probably often disturbed him in the night through the infirmities of old age. But when Eli assured him, that he did not call him, he went again to his bed, and concluded that he had been mistaken.—His respectful and affectionate assiduity, in waiting on the aged high priest, is well worthy of our notice. For he came, and even ran, at the first call, and that repeatedly: and Eli's language to him is expressive of affection.

V. 7. Samuel was not destitute of the knowledge of God, in that sense which implies the total absence of true piety, as Eli's sons were: (Note, 2:12.) but he did not know his manner of making his will known to the prophets, and therefore was not sensible that this was the voice of God. (Marg.) The LORD, however, over-ruled his mistake, to make Eli acquainted with his purpose of revealing himself to Samuel, and to excite his inquiry about it.

V. 8, 9. Eli could not but consider the preference, which the Lord thus shewed to a child, before himself and family, as a severe and humiliating rebuke; especially as he had reason to forebode that the message which he was about to receive, would be a denunciation of judgments on him and his family: yet, without envy, resentment, or impatience, he gave Samuel proper directions how to behave on the occasion.

Speak, LORD. (9) Or, "Speak, O JEHOVAH."

and called as at other times, Samuel, Samuel. Then Samuel answered, Speak, for thy servant heareth.

11 And the LORD said to Samuel, Behold, [l] I will do a thing in Israel, at which [m] both the ears of every one that heareth it shall tingle.

12 In that day [n] I will perform against Eli all things which I have spoken concerning his house: * when I begin, I will also make an end.

13 †For I have told him, that [o] I will judge his house for ever, for the iniquity [p] which he knoweth: because [q] his sons made themselves ‡vile, and he §restrained them not.

14 And therefore I have sworn unto the house of Eli, that [r] the iniquity of Eli's house shall not be purged with sacrifice nor offering for ever.

15 ¶ And Samuel lay until the morning, and [s] opened the doors of the house of the LORD: and Samuel [t] feared to shew Eli the vision.

16 Then Eli called Samuel, and said, Samuel, my son. And he answered, Here am I.

17 And he said, What is the thing that the LORD hath said unto thee? [u] I pray thee hide it not from me: [x] God do so to thee, and ‖more also, if thou hide any ¶ thing from me, of all the things that he said unto thee.

18 And Samuel told him  every whit, and hid nothing from him. And he said, [y] It is the LORD: let him do what seemeth him good.

19 And Samuel [z] grew, and [a] the LORD was with him, and did [b] let none of his words fall to the ground.

20 And all Israel, from [c] Dan even to Beer-sheba, knew that Samuel was †† established to be a prophet of the LORD.

21 And the LORD [d] appeared again in Shiloh: for the LORD revealed himself to Samuel in Shiloh, by [e] the word of the LORD.

V. 10. And stood, &c.] This seems to imply a visible appearance, as well as an audible voice.—It is also mentioned that the name Samuel was twice repeated; and we may observe that Samuel omitted the word LORD, or JEHOVAH, in answering as Eli had instructed him, probably, through uncertainty, timidity, or profound awe and reverence.

V. 11. Shall tingle.] The very report would exceedingly affect the hearer, and would seem to thrill in his ears long after; as very loud and stupendous noises are used to do. (Marg. Ref.—Notes, 4:13—22. Is. 28:17—19.)

V. 12. (Notes, 2:27—36.) It is probable, that this message was sent to Eli some years before his death; and this forbearance of God tended to harden the hearts of Eli's sons, in presumptuous expectations of impunity: but when he had once begun to execute the threatened vengeance, he repeated his strokes till the whole had been accomplished.

V. 13. Eli did not use coercive measures to restrain his sons, as he ought to have done: and by this omission he brought ruin on his family. (See marg. readings.—Notes, 2:12,22—25,29,30.)

V. 14. The sins of pious individuals among Eli's posterity would be pardoned, through the sacrifice of Christ, for their eternal salvation: but the Lord had irrevocably determined, that no number of sin-offerings or oblations should prevail with him, to continue that family in the high priesthood, or to deliver them from the awful temporal judgments which had been denounced; as perhaps both Eli and his sons hoped would be the case. (Notes, Num. 15:30,31. Is. 22:8—14.)

V. 15. In the morning, Samuel opened the gates of the court of the tabernacle, into which the people came to worship, as if nothing had occurred; neither elated with the distinction, nor neglecting his business, nor mentioning the matter, nor shewing the least disrespect to Eli; but rather through his great deference and affection for him, being reluctant to inform him of the distressing message.

V. 16—18. Eli was solicitous to know the revelation which God had made to Samuel, and afraid that he would not fully inform him of it: but he must no doubt have been greatly alarmed and distressed, when he heard the awful message, from the mouth of a child, who was so respectfully affectionate to him, and dependent on him; and whom he could not possibly suspect of artifice, or corrupt motives, or harshness of language. Yet his answer is very remarkable. He reflected on the wisdom, justice, truth, and goodness of God, as well as on his sovereignty. He acknowledged that he had a right to do as he saw good, and was assured that he would do nothing wrong. He was conscious that he deserved the terrible sentence, and acquiesced in the will of God, casting himself entirely on his mercy.—The meekness, patience, and humility of these words are very admirable, and prove that Eli was truly penitent and pious· (Marg. Ref. y. Notes, Lev. 10:3. Job 1:20,22. Ps. 39:9,10.) though in his old and infirm age, he had not sufficient courage, vigor, or even authority, to execute punishment upon his sons, who would now set him at defiance. (Notes, 2 Sam. 3:38, 39. 2 Chr. 33:15—17.)

V. 19—21. Samuel, it seems, was after this

CHAP. IV.

Israel is again smitten, with great slaughter; the ark is taken, and Eli's two sons are slain, 10, 11. On hearing these tidings Eli falls and breaks his neck, 12—18. The wife of Phinehas travails, names the child I-chabod, and dies 19—22.

frequently favored with revelations from God, which he delivered to the people: and as these were punctually accomplished, his appointment to be "a prophet of the LORD" was known and acknowledged, throughout the land. (Marg. Ref.) "The word of the LORD," may either mean, an audible voice from God; or the appearance of him, "whose name is called the WORD of GOD."

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Men are seldom duly sensible of the value of their mercies, till they are deprived of them: and this perversity operates even in matters pertaining to religion. We, who are favored with the written word, and the public preaching of the gospel by ministers of varied talents and endowments, can scarcely conceive how greatly our forefathers, in days of ignorance and persecution, valued a Bible, or the opportunity of hearing a faithful sermon; and how much numbers still value them in different parts of the world. (Note, Deut. 31:10—13.) This should teach us to be thankful, and to improve our privileges, lest the Lord should show us their preciousness, by the loss of them.—He disposes of his special favors in wise and holy sovereignty, without confining himself to age, station, or office in his church; but he orders every thing so as to correct or punish such as offend him, and to "honor those who honor him."—Docility, diligence, and a humble self-denying disposition in youth, are happy indications of an honorable and useful life.—They, who reduce to practice what they have been already taught, shall be favored with further discoveries concerning the truth and will of God: and where the heart is upright, mistakes and infirmities will be pardoned, rectified, and over-ruled for good.—Young persons ought to behave with assiduous and attentive kindness to the aged; and to shew a submissive respect to their superiors, even when faulty and under divine rebukes. But no deference to men, because every way superior to themselves, must influence those, whom the Lord employs as his messengers, to conceal or mutilate their message: and they are most unwise in their spiritual concerns, who wish to be flattered; nay, who do not desire above all things to know the whole of the revealed will of God, and the worst of their own state and case. For though temporal punishment may be unalterably determined; yet, blessed be God, the blood of Jesus cleanses the penitent believer from all sin, and assuredly delivers him from eternal misery; and this most gracious Savior casts out none that come to him however guilty, vile, or accursed they have made themselves.—Presumptuous hopes of impunity, because the Lord is long-suffering, ruin multitudes who postpone repentance till God hath "sworn in his wrath that they shall not enter into his rest:" and when he begins to take vengeance, he will also fully execute his most tremendous threatenings.—If temporal sufferings may be so terrible, as to "cause the ears of all who hear of them to tingle," what will be the everlasting punishment of the wicked! Let us then humble ourselves before God, ere the door of mercy be for ever shut: let us accept of his chastisement, however sharp: let us submit to him, because he is a mighty Sovereign, and because he is perfectly wise, righteous, and merciful: let us cast ourselves upon his mercy and seek his salvation; and study to shew our repentance, not only by good words, but by good works; by restraining others from sin and frowning upon them, however otherwise near and dear to us, as well as by avoiding it ourselves, and by faithfully improving every talent committed to us. Then, though the infirmities of age disable us for usefulness, and we meet with many humiliating dispensations, we may rejoice to see others likely to be useful when we are gone; and should willingly impart to them the best counsel we can, though their rising reputation be attended with our dishonor. In this case, should the prospect for our families, our country, or the church of God, be gloomy; we may encourage ourselves in the hope of that state, where "the wicked cease from troubling, and where the weary are at rest." (Note, 2 Sam. 23:5.)

NOTES.

CHAP. IV. V. 1. The word, which the Lord had spoken to Samuel, concerning Eli's family; or the word which from time to time the Lord sent by him to the people, declaring his will and calling them to repentance; was heard throughout the land, and excited great attention. (Note, 3:19—21.)—Some learned men suppose, that the events recorded in this chapter occurred immediately after the death of Samson; and that the slaughter at that time made of the Philistines encouraged the Israelites to attack them. If so, Eli judged Israel during the whole life of Samson, who lived about forty years; as he too judged Israel twenty years. (18. Notes, Judg. 15:20. 16:30,31.) Again, some are of opinion, that these events happened about the middle of the forty years, during which the Philistines oppressed Israel: but on that supposition, Samson must have been born at least twenty years before that oppression began, which does not accord with the narrative: (Notes, Judg. 13:1, 4,5.) and if his exploits only made way for the defeats recorded in this chapter; how could it be said that he began to deliver Israel?—Others, however, think that the forty years, dur-

[h] the ark of the covenant of the LORD out of Shiloh unto us, that when it cometh among us, [i] it may save us out of the hand of our enemies.

4 So the people sent to Shiloh, that they might bring from thence the ark of the covenant of the LORD of hosts, [k] which dwelleth between [l] the cherubims: and the two sons of Eli, [m] Hophni and Phinehas, were there [n] with the ark of the covenant of God.

5 And when the ark of the covenant of the LORD came into the camp, [o] all Israel shouted with a great shout, so that the earth rang again.

6 And when the Philistines heard the noise of the shout, they said, [p] What meaneth the noise of this great shout in the camp of the Hebrews? And they understood that the ark of the LORD was come into the camp.

ing which the Philistines oppressed Israel, ended about seven months after Eli's death, when the ark of God was restored: and in that case the subsequent oppression by the Philistines must be considered, as distinct from that mentioned in the book of Judges. The chronology of these times is, in fact, to us abstruse and uncertain. (Notes, Judg. 3:11. 11:26.)—Perhaps Samuel was at this time about twenty years of age; but it does not appear that he was consulted on this occasion.—Eben-ezer.] Note, 7:12.

V. 3. These elders seem to have been miserably sunk in ignorance and formality, which was the genuine consequence of the impiety of the priests. Though the nation was ripe for dreadful judgments, they had no idea that the defeat which they had received was intended as a warning to repent; and they proposed a very ignorant and presumptuous expedient to secure the assistance of JEHOVAH. They had heard what wonders had formerly been wrought for Israel, when the ark, the symbol of the Lord's presence, was by his command carried before the people, under the care of holy men, who trusted and glorified him; and when Israel was comparatively an obedient people, fighting under his banner: and they did not make the obvious distinction, between the outward sign or token, and the invisible presence of the Almighty, as assisting his servants: a distinction little noticed, by formalists, either in ancient or modern times; but of the highest importance in all respects, and under every dispensation. In fact they made an idol of the ark, as numbers have done, and do, in respect of the New Testament sacraments; and not only papists, by worshipping the bread, but protestants, by trusting in the outward and visible sign, to the neglect of the inward and spiritual grace: and they imagined that, (without humiliation before God or repentance of their sins,) by fetching the ark into the army, carried by two sons of Belial, who were doomed to destruction, and whose presence brought a curse into the camp, they could induce God to fight for them, though he was evidently contending against them! (Notes, 2:12,31—34. Josh. 7:10—12. 22:20. P. O. Josh. 7:10—15.) Nay, they spake, as if the ark itself could deliver them! (Marg. Ref. i.)

V. 4, 5. It is probable, that Hophni and Phinehas did not so much as ask the consent of their aged father on this occasion. Being hardened to their destruction, they were left to venture presumptuously into the holy of holies, and to carry the ark into the army; and thus, without any proper call, they were found within the reach of the sword of the Philistines, by which they were destined to be slain. (2:25. Notes, 2:31—34. Lev. 16:2. Num. 4:5. 31:8.) Doubtless they were much pleased with the service, and proud of coming as the supposed deliverers of Israel, bearing the ark of the covenant. (Notes, Lev. 10:1—3.) And when they entered the camp, the whole army was infatuated with the same groundless presumption, and shouted for joy as if already triumphant!—It is very doubtful, whether it was ever lawful to carry the ark into the army, without the express command of God. (Notes, 14:16—23. 2 Sam. 11:10,11.)

V. 7—9. It is no wonder, that the Philistines made no distinction between the ark, and that invisible God, whose presence with his believing people this symbol denoted, when the Israelites themselves entirely overlooked it. (Notes, 3—5.) The Philistines probably thought, that JEHOVAH was indeed a God, the God of Israel; but then so was Dagon a god, the god of Philistia. (Notes, 5:1,2. Judg. 16:23,24.) This therefore did not destroy their hope of gaining the mastery by the help of their god; and it tended on this occasion to increase their intrepidity and resolution.—They spake of the works of JEHOVAH in Egypt and in the wilderness, in language very expressive of their partial information, and confused apprehensions concerning them. (Marg. Ref.) and [a] the two sons of Eli, Hophni and Phinehas, * were slain.

12 And there ran a man of Benjamin out of the army, and came to Shiloh the same day, [b] with his clothes rent, and [c] with earth upon his head.

13 And when he came, lo, Eli [d] sat upon a seat by the way-side, watching: for [e] his heart trembled for the ark of God. And when the man came into the city and told it, all the city cried out.

14 And when Eli heard the noise of the crying, he said, [f] What meaneth the noise of this tumult? and the man came in hastily, and told Eli.

15 Now Eli was [g] ninety and eight years old; [h] and his eyes † were dim, that he could not see.

16 And the man said unto Eli, I am he that came out of the army, and I fled today out of the army. And he said, [i] What ‡ is there done, [k] my son?

17 And the messenger answered and said, [l] Israel is fled before the Philistines: and there hath been also a great slaughter among the people; and thy two sons also, Hophni and Phinehas, are dead; and the ark of God is taken.

V. 10, 11. On the former defeat the Israelites returned to the camp (3): but this was so entire, that the survivors were totally dispersed. Probably Hophni and Phinehas fell fighting in defence of the ark. (Note, 4,5.)

V. 13—18. Though Eli had been most criminally indulgent to his sons, and had abundant reason to expect to hear of their death, as well as of the defeat of Israel, yet his chief anxiety appears to have been about the ark of God. Accordingly he bore the tidings of Israel's calamity, and of the death of his sons, in the midst of their unrepented crimes, with fortitude and resignation. (Notes, 3:16—18. 2 Sam. 18:28—33.) But when he heard that "the ark of God was taken;" his reflections on the dishonor to God and to religion, and the dreadful loss to his people, which his sins and negligence had occasioned, were more than he could support; and falling down in a swoon, his neck brake and he died. Thus his death, under a divine rebuke for his sins, has been a salutary warning to others, even to this present day: yet, in the circumstances of it he testified his supreme regard to the honor of God, and the interests of religion, above all personal and relative considerations; and notwithstanding all his faults, he died in a lively exercise of love to God and his ordinances, and even by occasion of it.

V. 19—22. (Notes, Gen. 35:17,18.) The wife of Phinehas, (though married to so wicked a priest,) appears to have been a person of eminent piety. The death of her father-in-law and of her husband contributed to hasten her death: but her dying regret was for the captivity of the ark, and the departure of the glory from Israel; for with her parting breath she named her son I-chabod, or inglorious. In this her judgment was right: the presence and ordinances of God were the chief glory of Israel; and the loss of them was the departure of that glory. 'This 'chiefly lay at her heart, as the concerns of re-'ligion do on all pious spirits.' Bp. Patrick. But if she supposed that the Lord had finally departed from Israel, she was under a great mistake. From Shiloh indeed the ark, the glory of Israel, was finally removed; for probably the inhabitants of that city had too much resembled the abandoned priests; as is generally the case, when such examples of sacerdotal impiety and profligacy are exhibited: but it was restored to Israel, and established in another place. (Notes, Ps. 78:61—64,67—69. Jer. 7:12—15.) Neither was the ruin of Eli's family the destruction of the Aaronic priesthood. (Note, 2:35,36.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

When the judgments denounced in the word of God do not bring sinners to repentance, the speedy execution of them may be expected.—The nearer any persons are to the Lord in profession, and the greater privileges they are favored with, the more certain and dreadful will be their punishment, if they thence take encouragement to commit iniquity.—Unhumbled professors of true religion, especially if observant of forms, whether of divine appointment or human invention, are apt to think, that they are entitled to help from God, because they are called by his name, though they disgrace it with their crimes; and to murmur at those rebukes,

The Philistines place the ark in the temple of Dagon at Ashdod, 1, 2. Dagon falls down before it, and is broken in pieces, 3—5. The Philistines are smitten with emerods at Ashdod, Gath, and Ekron, when the ark is brought to those cities, 6—12.

AND the Philistines [a] took the ark of God, and brought it from [b] Ebenezer unto [c] Ashdod.

2 When the Philistines took the ark of God, they brought it into the house of [d] Dagon, and set it by Dagon.

3 And when they of Ashdod arose early on the morrow, behold, [e] Dagon was fallen upon his face to the earth, before the ark of the LORD. And they took Dagon, and [f] set him in his place again.

by which they are warned to repent and to amend their lives. As their dependence is placed upon external signs and symbols, the increase of their hypocrisies buoys up their presumptuous hopes: and they often take the name of the Lord in vain, and dishonor him more in attending on his ordinances, than they could do by neglecting them; so that he abhors those services, for which they expect his favor and think themselves entitled to it, or even deserving of it. (Notes, Ps. 50:16—21. Is. 1:10—20. 48:1,2. 58:1—4. Jer. 7:5—7,21—23. Ez. 20:39. Am. 5:21—24. Matt. 23:14.) But he will rather let his avowed enemies triumph for a season, than encourage hypocrites, whose crimes still more dishonor his holy name.—The most avowed infidels and Atheists, and the most atrocious and desperate offenders, have their pangs of conviction and disquietude of mind: with all their efforts, they cannot utterly exclude forebodings of fatal effects from their rebellion against the God of heaven; and though they conceal and quiet this apprehension for a time, and even prosper in their ungodliness; yet their fear will come upon them, and even far worse than they ever foreboded. (Note, Prov. 10:24.)—Whilst the impenitent are consigned to final ruin, the offending servants of God, who tremble at his judgments, and for the dishonor which they have occasioned to his name, may die in an awful manner, for a warning to those who are left behind. (Notes, 1 Kings 13:20—32.) Yet, when death in its most formidable shape finds men humbled for their sins, crying for mercy, and more anxious for the cause of God and truth, than for the most valued earthly comforts, it will eventually prove a blessing; yea, every dispensation is mercy, which rescues the immortal soul from hell. (P. O. Dan. 4:28—37.)—What miseries do some ungodly men entail upon all connected with them! And what an awful lesson is here for parents, who are tempted to connive at the first appearances of vice in their children! Let them reflect on Eli's death, on the far more dreadful condition of his sons, on the dying agonies and sorrows of Phinehas's wife, on the slaughter of Israel, the ark taken captive, "the glory departed," and Shiloh forsaken; and let them tremble to think "how great a matter a little fire kindleth." (Notes, 2 Kings 11:1,2. 2 Chr. 18:1. 19:2. 21:3,4.)—'In 'the midst of life we are in death:' some situations however peculiarly remind those placed in them to be ready for a sudden call; and few more than pregnancy.—But those who belong to the Lord, need not desire to survive, when the ordinances of God are withdrawn, and his cause is run down: little comfort can they take in their children, or in life itself, under such circumstances. Yet even these trials will prove blessings, where the ark and cause of God are thus dear to the heart.—Though the glory may successively be withdrawn from sinful nations, cities, or villages; yet it shall never depart from Israel, but shall shine forth in one place, when it has been eclipsed in another: for Jesus, our High Priest, ever liveth to maintain his own cause, and the gates of hell shall never prevail against his church; whatever may be the triumphing boasts of his enemies, or the despondings fears of his people.

NOTES.

CHAP. V. V. 1, 2. Besides the other wickedness of Israel, the idolatry of the Danites yet remained unpunished and unrepressed: and this might be one reason why the Lord was pleased to deliver his ark into the hand of these idolaters. (Notes, Judg. 18:30,31. 20:8—11,20—25.) The Philistines concluded that they had overcome the God of Israel, by the help of Dagon, and placed the ark in his temple, as a trophy of their victory. (Note, Judg. 16:23,24.) But they did not attempt to destroy it, as Israel destroyed the images of the Canaanites. (Note, 2 Sam. 5:21.) It has indeed been conjectured, that they intended to worship it, in conjunction with their former idol, though in subordination to him.

V. 3— 5. The image of Dagon is supposed to have been framed in the upper part like a man, and below like a fish: when therefore the head and hands were broken off, a deformed trunk alone remained. Thus the helplessness and insensibility of the dumb idol were made apparent: yet the Philistines, in this respect as senseless as their idol, instead of despising so contemptible a stock, revered as sacred the very threshold on which the idol had been disgraced and broken; and thus perpetuated the memory of JEHOVAH's triumph, by their own foolish superstition! They likewise either continued to worship the stump of Dagon; or got a new image of him formed as soon as possible. (Notes, Ps 115:3—8. Is. 41:5—7. 44:12—20.)

7 And when the men of Ashdod [m] saw that it was so, they said, [n] The ark of the God of Israel shall not abide with us: for his hand is sore upon us, and [o] upon Dagon our god.

8 They sent therefore and gathered all the lords of the Philistines unto them, and said, [p] What shall we do with the ark of the God of Israel? And they answered, Let the ark of the God of Israel be carried about unto [q] Gath. And they carried the ark of the God of Israel about thither.

9 And it was so, that after they had carried it about, [r] the hand of the LORD was against the city with a very great destruction: and he smote the men of the city, both small and great, [s] and they had emerods in their secret parts.

11 So they sent and gathered together all the lords of the Philistines, and said, Send away the ark of the God of Israel, and let it go again to his own place, that it slay †us not, and our people: for there was [u] a deadly destruction throughout all the city; the hand of God was very heavy there.

V. 6—12. As the Philistines were not convinced by this defeat of Dagon, that their attempt to keep the ark in captivity was foolish and ruinous; they were visited with some fatal judgment, probably a pestilence, which swept away multitudes: while the rest were afflicted very generally with emerods, which put them to excruciating pain, and extorted the most doleful lamentations. The emeröds are supposed to have been the worst sort of the disease now called the piles.—Under this terrible visitation, they sent the ark of God from city to city, probably in hopes of thus obtaining deliverance: but the same calamities attended the inhabitants wherever they carried it. (Notes, Ps. 78:65,66. Zech. 12:2—5.)—Thus, while the Israelites were so degenerate, as to make no attempt for the recovery of this sacred symbol of JEHOVAH's gracious presence, and indeed were utterly unworthy of being honored in such a service; he himself rendered the Philistines willing to send back the ark; and so over-ruled these events, as to expose idolatry to the deepest contempt, and to convince the obstinate idolaters, that they could not profane his sacred institutions with impunity. (Notes, Josh. 7:6—9. Ps. 115:1,2.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The Lord may for a season permit his cause to be run down, in order to expose the hypocrisy, to undermine the vain confidence, or to chastise the wickedness, of his professed people: for he knows how, without any human help, and in defiance of all enemies, to recover it from the ruins, and to establish it in greater splendor; and this may account for the successes of infidels and Atheists, through so many countries, which have long professed Christianity, but have corrupted and disgraced it. But the short-lived triumphings of the wicked, on such occasions, will terminate in their deeper disgrace, and more dreadful punishment.—Men may be convinced by the judgments of God, that he is a terrible enemy, and that it is in vain to contend with him; and they may be constrained to render him a feigned submission: (Notes, Ps. 66:1—3. 81:14,15.) but nothing except his renewing grace, will produce genuine repentance, faith, and love, and conversion from every idol to his worship and service. Yet those confessions, which are extorted by torment or terror, (Mark 5:7.) are honorable to God, though useless to the impenitent; and he will glorify his name in the punishment of his enemies, as well as in the salvation of his people. When he contends, he will overcome; and all endeavors to evade or escape his wrath, will only increase the sinner's misery, till he is either brought to true repentance, or sinks under final condemnation.—When the Lord's appointed time shall arrive, all attempts to uphold the falling kingdom of idolatry, superstition, infidelity, or profaneness, will be utterly unavailing; and destruction will overtake all those, who are not led to repentance. It is equally dangerous to oppose those partial revivals of true religion, which take place from age to age: for the ark of God will cause every Dagon to fall down before it, till all of them be broken in pieces.—The zeal and pertinacity, with which the grossest idolatries and most stupid superstitions have been supported against the cause of God and truth, display the blindness of fallen man's understanding, as much as the depravity of his affections.—Thus, convinced sinners also, with perverse assiduity, set up again those false confidences and worldly idols, which seemed to be thrown down under the preaching of the gospel: or when the old delusion will no longer soothe their consciences, they exchange it for another equally absurd, as long as they continue to love sin, and to hate the spiritual service and humbling truth of God. But when Christ, the true Ark of the covenant, really enters the heart of fallen man, (which is indeed Satan's temple,) all idols will fall before his presence and power; every endeavor to set them up again will be in vain; all iniquity will be forsaken; all unrighteous gain restored; and the Lord will claim and possess the throne. Yet pride, self-love, and worldly lusts, though dethroned and crucified, still remain within us. Let us then watch and pray against their prevalency; let us seek to have them more entirely destroyed; and let us consider death, through the mercy of God, and the grace of the gospel, as attended by the final destruction of our worst enemy, "the sin that dwelleth in us."

CHAP. VI.

At the end of seven months the Philistines consult about sending back the ark, 1—9. They bring it on a new cart, with oblations, to Beth-shemesh, 10—18. The Beth-shemites are smitten for looking into it, 19, 20. They send to the men of Kirjath-jearim to fetch it, 21.

4 Then said they, What shall be the trespass-offering which we shall return to him? They answered, [f] Five golden emerods, and five golden mice, according to the number of the lords of the Philistines: for one plague was on [*] you all, and on your lords.

5 Wherefore, ye shall make images of your emerods, and images of your [g] mice that mar the land; and ye shall [h] give glory unto the God of Israel: peradventure he will [i] lighten his hand from off you, and from [k] off your gods, and from off your land.

6 Wherefore then do ye [l] harden your hearts, as [m] the Egyptians and Pharaoh hardened their hearts? When he had wrought [†] wonderfully among them, [n] did they not let [‡] the people go, and they departed?

7 Now therefore make a [o] new cart, an take two milch-kine, [p] on which there hath come no yoke, and tie the kine to the cart, and bring their calves home from them:

8 And take the ark of the LORD, and lay it upon the cart; and put the [q] jewels of gold, which ye return him for a trespass-offering, in a coffer by the side thereof; and send it away, that it may go.

9 And see, if it goeth up by the way of his own coast to [r] Beth-shemesh, then [§] he hath done us this great evil: but if not, then we shall know that it is [s] not his hand that smote us; it was [t] a chance that happened to us.

10 ¶ And the men did so; and took two milch-kine, and tied them to the cart, and shut up their calves at home:

11 And [u] they laid the ark of the LORD upon the cart, and the coffer with the mice of gold and the images of their emerods.

12 And the kine took the straight way to the way of Beth-shemesh, and went

NOTES.

CHAP. VI. V. 1. Seven months.] During so long a time the Philistines endured the judgments of God, before they so far yielded as to restore the ark; and the Israelites neglected all endeavors to recover it! But it was far more honorable to the Lord, to constrain the Philistines to send it back of their own accord, than that war should wrest it, or that money should ransom it, out of their hands. (Note, 5:6—12.)

V. 2—9. It has been conjectured, that when the emerods and pestilence exceedingly afflicted the inhabitants of each city, to which the ark was carried, the Philistines placed it in the open field: and that then great numbers of mice began to destroy their crops and spoil the land. It is evident that there was a plague of destroying mice sent among them: (Note, Ex. 8:15—17.) out it is not said that the ark was placed in the fields of any city At length, however, being no longer able to endure their complicated distresses, they determined to send back the ark, and consulted their priests and diviners about it; whose answer contains such an assemblage of inconsistencies, as clearly developes the workings of the human heart in difficult circumstances. From the tradition of Pharaoh's rebellion, and the destruction of him and his subjects, they seriously exhorted the people not to harden their hearts, but to let the ark go (6): but they did not advise them to repent, to renounce idolatry, or to worship JEHOVAH. Nay, they were reluctant to conclude that their afflictions were from him, and framed an artful device for putting it to the trial: and, if not convinced by another complicated miracle, they seemed determined to keep the ark, and ascribe their sufferings to chance. (Notes, Is. 26:10,11. Matt. 16:1—4.) Some trespass-offerings they supposed to be necessary, if the ark must be restored, in order that "the LORD might lighten his hand from off them," or that they "might know wherefore he did not." This opinion, that trespass-offerings must be sent with the ark, was probably derived from some slight acquaintance with the ritual law of Moses; or from usages among themselves originally derived from it. The oblations, however, were altogether different from those which God required from his worshippers: (Notes, Lev. 5: 6:1—7.) but well suited to be monuments of their shame, and of the Lord's triumph over them. In short, they evinced how unwilling they were to yield, and how unable to resist.—As the Egyptians hired Israel with jewels of gold to depart from them, yet were unwilling to let them go quite away; (Note, Ex. 12:35,36.) so did the Philistines respecting the ark, in taking which they had so greatly triumphed.

along the high-way, lowing as they went, and turned not aside to the right hand or to the left; and the lords of the Philistines went after them unto the border of Beth-shemesh.

13 And they of Beth-shemesh were reaping their wheat-harvest in the valley: and hey lifted up their eyes, and saw the ark, and rejoiced to see it.

14 And the cart came into the field of Joshua a Beth-shemite, and stood there, where there was a great stone: and they clave the wood of the cart, and [v] offered the kine a burnt-offering unto the LORD.

15 And the Levites took down the ark of the LORD, and the coffer that was with it, wherein the jewels of gold were, and put them on the great stone: and the men of Beth-shemesh offered burnt-offerings and sacrificed sacrifices the same day unto the LORD.

16 And when [x] the five lords of the Philistines had seen it, they returned to Ekron the same day.

17 And these are the golden emerods, which the Philistines returned for a trespass-offering unto the LORD; [y] for Ashdod one, [z] for Gaza one, [a] for Askelon one, [b] for Gath one, [c] for Ekron one.

18 And the golden mice, according to the number of all the cities of the Philistines belonging to the five lords, both of fenced cities, and of country-villages, even unto the *great stone of Abel, whereon they set down the ark of the LORD; which stone remaineth unto this day in the field of Joshua the Beth-shemite.

19 And [d] he smote the men of Beth-shemesh, because they had looked into the ark of the LORD, even he smote of the people fifty thousand and threescore and ten men. And the people lamented, because the LORD had smitten many of the people with a great slaughter.

20 And the men of Beth-shemesh said, [e] Who is able to stand before this holy LORD God? and [f] to whom shall he go up from us?

21 And they sent messengers to the inhabitants of [g] Kirjath-jearim, saying, The Philistines have brought again the ark of the LORD; come ye down, and fetch it up to you.

V. 10—16. That two kine, which had never before been yoked, and whose calves were left at home, should draw quietly, and keep the road without a driver, for several miles, neither stopping, nor turning aside, nor attempting to return; and that, while they shewed the force of instinct in lowing for their calves, they should be urged forward with a stronger impulse to the very place, which the Philistines had mentioned (9), and stop there;—these circumstances constituted in all respects a most astonishing miracle, or rather complication of miracles: and the obedience of the animals, in carrying back the ark, reproached the negligence of Israel.—The presumption of the Philistines, in requiring this additional proof of JEHOVAH's power, was very great; but it was over-ruled for the manifestation of his glory, and to their deeper condemnation in still cleaving to idolatry. The triumph of the ark was completed, when it was thus miraculously restored, with oblations, and the distant attendance of the lords of the Philistines.—Beth-shemesh was a city of the priests out of the lot of Judah, in the border of the land nearest the country of the Philistines; (Josh. 21:16.) and no doubt some of that order, very properly, offered the kine in sacrifice before the ark, though kine in ordinary circumstances were not appointed for burnt-fferings: (Notes, Lev. 1:1—4. 3:1.) but nothing, which had been used in this sacred service, could lawfully be employed for any common use. Their other sacrifices also were suitable expressions of joy and gratitude: but placing the ark upon a great stone, rather than taking it into their houses, or preparing a tent for it, seems to have been improper. The inhabitants of Kirjath-jearim gave it a different reception, and were accepted in so doing. (7:1,2.)

V. 18. It seems evident that no more than five golden mice were sent (4); but the inhabitants of the villages, as well as of the cities, contributed to the expense.—The great stone of Abel, or weeping, being so called probably on account of the mourning of the people over those who were smitten (19), seems to have been the boundary, at that time, between the land of the Philistines and that of Israel.

V. 19—21. The Beth-shemites availed themselves of the opportunity thus given them, to gratify their curiosity, by presumptuously looking into the ark; even the outside of which was not to be seen uncovered by the Levites who were appointed to carry it. (Num. 4:5,6,15.) Perhaps they professed a purpose of examining whether the Philistines had taken away the tables of the law; but it does not appear, that any of the Philistines had so much as looked into it. Some of them might encourage themselves in this presumptuous conduct, by reason of their office as priests, which in fact aggravated their offence: and others, on the circumstance, that the ark had been brought back to them in the first instance, and on their having welcomed it, and offered sacrifices before it. But the Lord was provoked by their irreverent intrusion, to punish many of them with sudden death. (Notes, Lev. 10:1—3. 2 Sam. 6:6,7.)—The number, as it stands in our version, is so very large to be found in one small city, and the expression in the original is so uncommon, that it is generally allowed some mistake is made: Josephus mentions only seventy. The passage may be rendered, "He smote ... seventy men, even fifty

The ark is removed to Kirjath-jearim, and remains there a long time, 1, 2. At Samuel's exhortation the Israelites repent, and humble themselves before God at Mizpeh, 3—6. The Philistines prepare to assault them: but, while Samuel prays and sacrifices, the Lord discomfits them with thunder before Israel, 7—11. Samuel calls the place Eben-ezer, and sets up a stone for a memorial, 12. The Philistines are subdued, and Samuel judges Israel, 13—17.

out of a thousand men;" which supposes that about 1400 persons were present, and that a twentieth part was slain: and this appears to be the genuine meaning of the passage. The Beth-shemites were not duly humbled for their offence; but they were so terrified, that, like the Philistines, they wanted to have the ark removed from them, and solicited the men of Kirjath-jearim to fetch it; though that was not a city of the priests. (Marg. Ref. e. Notes, Num. 17:12,13. 2 Sam. 6:8—11.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

When transgressors, under divine rebukes, harden themselves in sin, they are sure to prolong and multiply their own miseries; and it is so much more pleasant to learn wisdom by the experience of others, than by our own, that it would be deemed madness to do otherwise, were it not so general.—Those convictions, which spring from terror without humiliation, never produce more than a reluctant and submissive obedience: and the indignant hearts of proud rebels avail themselves of every pretence to ascribe afflictions to chance, rather than to the hand of God, and to infer that it is not absolutely necessary to part with every sin.—If correction be withdrawn, while the heart is thus disposed, the respite proves an encouragement to proceed in transgression: if the affliction be continued after a partial amendment, this is deemed an argument that repentance and reformation are useless. Thus every dispensation of Providence eventually occasions increasing guilt and condemnation.—Natural reason and conscience, with the fragments of traditional revelation, may convince men that some method should be used to appease the anger of God, and may enable them, as priests or diviners, to give plausible advice on the subject: and when sinners are suffering under afflictions, and the terrors of an awakened conscience, they are ready to put themselves to much expense and self-denial, in order to purchase peace with God. But faith alone, appropriating the information of the sacred Scriptures, can discover what oblation he will accept, or in what way he will be approached by his sinful creatures. (Note, Mic. 6:6—8.)—The inconsistencies and superstitions of idolaters, and the lukewarmness of his professing people, will in due season combine to display his glory to greater advantage. The very brute creation, when he pleases, shall shame man's ingratitude and disobedience; his enemies shall furnish memorials of their own disgrace, and all shall be constrained to say, "This hath God wrought!"—Many appear joyful at the revival of religion, and favorable to its truths and ordinances, who are too busy about the world to be at much trouble or expense about them: and numbers unite in external observances, who have no inward reverence for the divine majesty.—The true glory of religion consists in its spiritual excellency: and that simplicity, which the carnal mind despises, forms its highest ornament. But presumptuous intrusion into "the secret things, which belong to God," forms a heinous provocation, and springs from a careless and impenitent heart: and the nearer to the Lord such an intruder is in profession and in office, the greater is his guilt, and the more terrible will be his punishment: for though we are not under the same dispensation as Israel was; yet "our God is still a consuming fire," and must be "worshipped with reverence and godly fear." (Note, Heb. 12:26—29.) Instead of this reverence, the carnal heart substitutes a slavish fear; and when rebuked for presumption and contempt, or alarmed with discoveries of the justice and holiness of God, it will, with the Gadarenes or these Beth-shemites, request the Savior to depart, and vainly seek to escape the Lord's displeasure by an entire forgetfulness of him. (Note, Matt. 8:33, 34.) In like manner, numbers, alarmed by the danger of "eating and drinking unworthily" in the Lord's supper, vainly expect security, by habitual and wilful disobedience to the dying command of him, whom they still continue to call their Lord and their Savior. (Notes, 1 Cor. 11:23—34.) In these ways, many smother up and silence their convictions, and put away salvation from them; and by running into one extreme or another, the very truths and ordinances of God, which are the means of life and salvation to some, become the occasion of deeper condemnation to others. Let us always consider what a holy LORD God he is, with whom we have to do; and may he give us a spirit of humble fear, filial love, and heavenly hope, that we may be preserved from fatal mistakes, and profit by the salvation of the gospel, and the sacred ordinances with which we are favored in his providence!

NOTES.

CHAP. VII. V. 1, 2. Kirjath-jearim lay in the road between Beth-shemesh and Shiloh. (Marg. Ref. a.) The inhabitants, being convinced that the ark was indeed the pledge of Israel's prosperity, and only dangerous when treated with irreverence, were ready to entertain it. It does not appear that Abinadab, and Eleazar his son, were either priests or Levites; though some expositors take it for granted that they were. But it may be questioned, whether an intended neglect of that tribe, for their ungodliness and wickedness, was not shewn on this occasion; so that no notice was taken of them in a matter, which otherwise peculiarly and entirely belonged to them. It is not so much as said, whether any of them were employed to fetch the ark to Kirjath-jearim, or whether the Lord dispensed with the irregularity of the inhabitants of that city, in carrying it themselves. —Here, however, the ark remained, till David removed it in the beginning of his reign over all Israel: (Notes, 2 Sam. 6:2,3.) but it is not agreed how many years intervened, certainly many more than twenty; so that the expression twenty years, clearly refers to the time that

3 And Samuel spake unto all the house of Israel, saying, If ye do [d] return unto the LORD with all your hearts, then [e] put away the strange gods and Ashtaroth from among you, and [f] prepare your hearts unto the LORD, and [g] serve him only; and he will deliver you out of the hand of the Philistines.

4 Then the children of Israel did put away [h] Baalim and Ashtaroth, and served the LORD only.

5 And Samuel said, [i] Gather all Israel to [j] Mizpeh, and [k] I will pray for you unto the LORD.

6 And they gathered together to Mizpeh, and [l] drew water, and poured it out before the LORD, and [m] fasted on that day, and said there, [n] We have sinned against the LORD. And Samuel [o] judged the children of Israel in Mizpeh.

[Practical Observations.]

7 And when the Philistines heard that the children of Israel were gathered together to Mizpeh, the lords of the Philistines went up against Israel. And when the children of Israel heard it, they were [p] afraid of the Philistines.

8 And the children of Israel said to Samuel, * Cease not to cry unto the LORD our God for us, that he will save us out of the hand of the Philistines.

9 And Samuel took [q] a sucking lamb, and offered it for a burnt-offering wholly unto the LORD: and Samuel [r] cried unto the LORD for Israel; and the LORD † heard him.

10 And as Samuel was offering up the burnt-offering, the Philistines drew near to battle against Israel: but the LORD [s] thundered with a great thunder on that day upon the Philistines, and [t] discomfited them; and they were smitten before Israel.

11 And the men of Israel went out of Mizpeh, and pursued the Philistines, and smote them, until they came under Bethcar.

passed previously to the events recorded in the rest of this chapter.—The Israelites continued in subjection to the Philistines; and generally in the beginning of these twenty years, they remained ignorant and inattentive to religion, and careless about the ark or the worship of the Lord: but we may suppose that Samuel was laboring, incessantly and successfully, from town to town, and from village to village, throughout the whole land, to bring them to repentance, and to revive true religion among them; and at length his success was so great, that "all the house of Israel lamented after the LORD."—Some learned men think that the tabernacle had before this been removed from Shiloh, perhaps to Nob. (21:1.)

V. 3, 4. When Samuel, by the divine blessing, had brought large numbers of the people to a sense of their sin and of their duty, he urged the heads of their several tribes to concur in a public and avowed reformation, and re-establishment of the worship of JEHOVAH, attended by putting away and destroying all their idols and images, of whatever kind: and to this proposal they readily and practically consented. (Note, Judg. 2:11—13.) Few words are indeed used; but they are so expressive, that we cannot hesitate in pronouncing this to have been one of the most general and effectual revivals of religion, which ever took place in the church of Israel.

V. 5, 6. (Note, Judg. 20:1,2.) The ceremony of "drawing water, and pouring it out before the LORD," might be an emblem of the effects of divine grace upon the heart; which disposes it to pour forth itself as water before the Lord, in penitential confessions, with tears of godly sorrow, and in fervent prayers and thanksgivings. (Marg. Ref. l.)—Some indeed think, that the water was used in a kind of baptismal ablution or purification; others, that it was an expression of their holy joy in God; and others, that it was intended to purify the ground on which the altar was built.—On this occasion Samuel began publicly to act as judge, or chief magistrate, in settling differences; and perhaps in punishing criminals and obstinate idolaters: though he seems to have previously exercised authority in a more private manner.—Fasted. (6) Notes, Judg. 20:26—28. 2 Chr. 20:3,4.

V. 7. The Philistines considered this general convention of Israel, as the signal of war; and therefore determined immediately to attack them, before they were prepared for resistance; in consequence of which the Israelites were at first alarmed: but deep repentance of sin, attended by fruits meet for repentance, and earnestness in serving the Lord, formed their best preparation; and the event shewed their enemies the difference, between attacking them while thus employed, and when impenitent and buoyed up with presumption. (Notes, 4: 2 Chr. 19:2—11. 20:1—25.)

V. 9. Samuel was not a priest; but he acted by an extraordinary authority in this and in many other instances, as a prophet of the Lord, and under his immediate direction. (Marg. Ref. q. Notes, 17. 10:8. Judg. 6:25,26.) This single lamb, offered in humble faith, was immensely more acceptable, than the most costly sacrifices offered in pride and hypocrisy.

V. 10, 11. It does not appear, that the people came armed to Mizpeh: and it is probable, that they smote the Philistines with the swords of those, who had been killed by the lightning. (Notes, 2:10. Ex. 14:26—30. Josh. 10:11. 2 Sam. 22:7—16. Rev. 16:17—21.)

12 Then Samuel [u] took a stone, and set it between Mizpeh and Shen, and called the name of it * Eben-ezer, saying, [x] Hitherto hath the LORD helped us.

13 ¶ So the Philistines were [y] subdued, and they [z] came no more into the coast of Israel: and the hand of the LORD was [a] against the Philistines all the days of Samuel.

14 And the cities which the Philistines had taken from Israel were restored to Israel, from Ekron even unto Gath; and the coasts thereof did Israel deliver out of the hands of the Philistines: and there was [b] peace between Israel and the Amorites.

15 ¶ And Samuel [c] judged Israel all the days of his life.

16 And he went from year to year † in circuit to Beth-el, and Gilgal, and Mizpeh, and judged Israel in all those places.

17 And [d] his return was to Ramah; for there was his house; and there he judged Israel; and there [e] he built an altar unto the LORD.

V. 12. The transgressions and chastisements of Israel had been many; they had repeatedly humbled themselves before God and obtained deliverance; and they had again relapsed into sin, and fallen into distress: but they had not been given up to total apostacy, or to utter ruin; and they had now once more been brought to repentance, and made partakers of a singular deliverance, by the immediate interposition of the Almighty. This Samuel and the people acknowledged with gratitude; and set up this stone to be a monument of the Lord's goodness, for his glory, and the encouragement of their descendants, to future ages. (Notes, Josh. 4:3—9,20—24. P. O.) The word Eben-ezer, signifies the stone of help.—The same place was before-mentioned by anticipation, with reference to the name given it on this occasion. (4:1. 5:1.)

V. 13, 14. After this success, the Philistines were constrained to restore such cities of Israel as they had seized, even those which were situated in the neighborhood of Ekron and Gath.—It is not probable, that the Israelites entered into treaty with the Amorites who dwelt among them; but they also were so kept under as to create them no disturbance. This peaceful state, within the land, was preserved till the people rejected Samuel, and Saul was made king; and the Philistines were constantly defeated by Israel, till after the death of Samuel. (Marg. Ref.—Notes, 13: 14: 28:3. 31:)

V. 15. Probably Samuel retained considerable influence as a magistrate, as well as a prophet, during the reign of Saul, especially in the neighborhood of Ramah. Some, however, understand the passage as meaning, that Samuel was so diligent in the discharge of his office, that he sat to judge causes every day. (16. Notes, 12:23. Ex. 18:13—23.)

V. 17. It is very remarkable, that in this great revival of religion, the ark was neither removed to Shiloh, nor placed with the tabernacle in any other situation.—It is uncertain whether or not the sanctuary-service was carried on at Shiloh, or Nob, or elsewhere, during all this period; but probably it was either neglected, or very improperly conducted. As the ark, the glory even of the tabernacle, was departed, the more pious Israelites seem to have disregarded it; and to have preferred joining with Samuel in the sacrifices and worship, which, doubtless by divine direction, he performed near his own house. This disregard to the Levitical institutions clearly intimated, that the typical meaning formed their chief use; and, when this was overlooked, they became a lifeless carcass, by no means to be compared with repentance, faith, and love to God and man. (Notes, 9:12—14. 2 Kings 3:20. Ps. 50:7—15.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—6.

When the stated ministers of God's word neglect their duty and disgrace their profession, he will render them contemptible in the eyes of the people, (Mal. 2:8,9.) and employ others to reform religion, and uphold his worship: for it is better that external institutions should be dispensed with, than that irreligion should be permitted to diffuse its baneful influence.—The truths and ordinances of God are dangerous to those alone, who despise and abuse them, and are always profitable to the humble believer: the threatenings therefore of his word, and the judgments, which he has executed on such as profaned his sacred institutions, should not induce us to neglect them; but make us more circumspect and jealous of ourselves in attending on them. (P. O. 1 Cor. 11:23—34.)—When the cause of God is deserted in one place, it will be supported in another: and, though the public and regular administration of divine ordinances is highly desirable; yet the same blessing may redound to individuals, when they are unavoidably driven into corners, and confined to private houses.—The word of God may be faithfully preached, and other proper means used, for a long time, without producing visible or extensive effects: but those who are employed in this important service, should sow the seed in faith and hope, and water it with prayers and tears: they should be "instant in season and out of season;" persevere without weariness or yielding to despondency, and wait the Lord's time; and their labor will not be in vain. (Note, 1 Tim. 4:11—16.) Nay, perhaps the seed, which has been long sown and considered as lost, will at length spring up with so large an increase, as to exceed their own most sanguine expectations.—It is a pleasing prospect to the faithful laborer, when he perceives men deeply convinced of their sins, and mourning under the tokens of the Lord's displeasure: and this will also afford him the long desired opportunity, of still more closely and particularly addressing their consciences; that such good impressions may not wear off through procrastination, or produce only a partial or external reformation; but that the people may be prevailed upon, to "return to the LORD with all their hearts, and to serve him only:" ex

Samuel, when old, makes his sons judges; who behave ill, and give the people an occasion of desiring a king, 1—5. They persist in their request; and Samuel by divine direction yields to them, 19—22.

pecting all their salvation and comfort from him, and renouncing every false dependence and worldly idol. This blessed frame of mind is the effect of divine grace, but it is our duty; and in the use of means, we are required to prepare our hearts, and arm our souls with a stedfast determination thus to trust and serve the Lord. (Notes, Acts 11:23,24. 1 Pet. 4:1,2.)—When in the first place every one has "taken heed unto himself," he ought next to employ his best endeavors to engage his family, and his neighbors also, in the service of God: and when those in high stations and public employments unite in using their influence and authority, in a mild, intelligent, and scriptural manner, for these purposes, the most extensive blessings may be expected. (Note, 2 Chr. 30: 12.)

"The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much:" and the more men know of God and of themselves, the more earnestly will they desire and value the prayers of every Christian, especially of those who are most eminent for faith and holiness, and particularly in seasons of temporal or spiritual distress.—Blessed be God, that Jesus ever lives to intercede for us, and pleads his own atoning blood in behalf of "all who come to God by him:" and through his sacrifice and mediation all our prayers, for ourselves and others, are accepted by the Father. But neither his merits, nor the intercessions of his servants, supersede the necessity of our personal repentance, confessions of sin, cries for mercy, and holy obedience: and seasons of deep humiliation, and prayer for special blessings, are very properly attended with fasting, and other indications of self-displacency, and disregard to animal indulgence; that we may "pour out our souls before the LORD," without having our attention distracted by any outward concern. When we are thus employed in earnest devotion, Satan and his agents may be especially excited to assault us, as both hating our holy engagements, and envying our felicity: but they can do us no harm, unless they can affright us from our duty. Nor can any hostile preparations prevail against that nation, which, in a spirit of true repentance and reformation, and the fervent prayer of faith, has intrusted itself to the Lord's protection.—Through successive generations the church of God has had occasion to set up EBENEZERS for renewed deliverances: for neither outward persecutions, nor internal corruptions have yet prevailed against her; because "hitherto the LORD hath helped her;" and he will help her even unto the end of the world.—Every believer should review the records of this preservation, and these deliverances, with admiring gratitude and joyful love; and then looking back on his own experience, he will find an abridgment of the same history. Notwithstanding temptation and outward opposition; notwithstanding the deceitfulness of his own heart, and the power of his inbred lusts; through many transgressions, corrections, deliverances, and relapses; through many fears, conflicts, and difficulties, he has still been preserved from apostacy, and perhaps from disgracing his profession; for "hitherto hath the LORD helped him." (Note, 2 Cor. 1:8—11.) If this be our happy case, let us raise up our Ebenezers in rendering him our unreserved praise; let us renew our application to God our Savior for increasing strength in our soul, and power against our enemies: let us speak to the encouragement of others concerning his love and truth, that they may be animated to trust and rejoice in him: let us push still farther every advantage against our enemies, aspiring after entire liberty and complete deliverance: let us submit to those, who have approved themselves faithful, and have been made useful to us, in watching for our souls: let us keep close to the means of grace, and the worship of God, diligently improve our talents, and lay ourselves out for the good of all around us.—At stated seasons, as at the conclusion of the year, when about to approach the Lord's table, or when we have received some remarkable mercy, we shall find it peculiarly useful thus to review our ways, and to wait upon the Lord to renew our strength: and in so doing we may hope ere long to set up our last Eben-ezer in the realms above, and to begin our eternal songs of joyful praise to him, who hath helped us quite through, and made us more than conquerors.

NOTES.

CHAP. VIII. V. 1—5. It is not known how old Samuel was at this time: but it is probable, that he felt himself incapable of making the accustomed circuits through the whole land: (7:16.) and therefore, residing at Ramah, he superintended the northern division of it, while his sons, being stationed at Beer-sheba, had the charge of the southern.—As we do not find that either God or the people censured him, for "making his sons judges in Israel;" we may infer, that he had properly educated them, and that they appeared well qualified for the office, and were appointed to it for the good and by the approbation of the people; though they deceived these expectations, and through love of money became unjust judges. (Marg. Ref.—Notes, Ex. 23:6—9. Prov. 17:8,23. Am. 5:10—13. Mic. 3:8—12. 7:1—4.) This was Samuel's affliction, even more than Israel's grievance; and had the elders conferred with him, he

6 But the thing * displeased Samuel, when they said, Give us a king to judge us. And Samuel [h] prayed unto the LORD.

7 And the LORD said unto Samuel, [i] Hearken unto the voice of the people in all that they say unto thee: for [k] they have not rejected thee, but they have rejected me, that I should not reign over them.

12 And he will [q] appoint him captains over thousands, and captains over fifties, [r] and will set them to ear his ground, and to reap his harvest, and to make his instruments of war, and instruments of his chariots.

13 And he will take your daughters to be confectionaries, and to be cooks, and to be bakers.

14 And he will [s] take your fields, and your vineyards, and your olive-yards, even the best of them, and [t] give them to his servants.

would doubtless have agreed to deprive and censure his sons, and to appoint more upright judges. (Notes, 2:23—25,29.) But the people appear to have been more displeased at this small injury to their temporal interests, than they had been by all the dishonor done to God by the impiety and licentiousness of Eli's sons. —It is probable, that the people in general, and especially the superior persons, were grown weary of being ruled by pious judges and prophets, raised up by God to reform religion; and that they wanted to appear great and powerful in the eyes of the surrounding nations; as they vainly supposed they should do, when governed by a king, attended with the grandeur of a court, and commanding their armies. (Note, 13:22.) So that the misconduct of Samuel's sons merely served them for an occasion of proposing this measure to Samuel.

V. 6—9. Israel never had so much reason to be satisfied with the government of judges, as under Samuel, who had been the instrument of exceedingly great advantages to them in all respects: and he was therefore much grieved and displeased to see them actuated by an impatient, discontented spirit. "It was evil in his eyes:" (marg.) he greatly disapproved of the proposal; and probably felt, with great sensibility, their ingratitude to himself. He did not, however, express his displeasure by reproaches, but in prayer; not knowing what answer to return to their demand, till he was instructed by the Lord: for if he had endeavored to dissuade them from their purpose, they might have ascribed it to ambition. Accordingly the Lord reminded him, that in rejecting the judge, who had been raised up to rule over them, they actually rejected his divine authority, who as King appointed their judges: that this was no more than a continuation of all their former rebellions and apostacies: and as they had ever been prone to forsake God to worship the idols of the Gentiles; it could not reasonably be wendered at, that they preferred the government of kings, like the surrounding nations, to that of the LORD, by judges. It was therefore proper that they should have their choice, that they might be corrected for their perverseness. (Note, Hos. 13:10,11.) Yet Samuel must first solemnly protest against the measure, as resulting from ingratitude and rebellion against God; and also shew them the manner, in which kings in general exercised their authority. (Note, Deut. 17:14.)

V. 10—18. Under the government of Moses, Joshua, and the judges, the people had been exempt from oppression, nay, as far as can be learned by the history, even from taxes of all kinds: (Notes, 12:2—7. Num. 16:15. 31:47.) but kingly government like that of the nations, could not possibly be thus supported. "The manner of the king" does not, however, mean, 'the way in which kings ought to rule;' but 'the 'way in which the monarchs of the east actually 'governed.' (Note, Deut. 17:16.) In general, they supported their luxury and magnificence, and performed their ostentatious works, and kept up their military force, by burdensome

19 Nevertheless, the people [y] refused to obey the voice of Samuel: and they said, Nay, but we will have a king over us;

exactions and cruel oppressions; perverting authority into tyranny, and changing subjection into slavery. (Marg. Ref.) And as these are the natural effects of absolute authority intrusted with a fallen creature prone to selfishness and folly; we ought consequently to prefer those limitations and restrictions, which are equally beneficial to the governors and the governed.—Run before his chariots. (11) Notes, 2 Sam. 15:1—6. 1 Kings 1:5,6.

V. 19—22. The elders of Israel were so resolutely bent on their own measures, that even this solemn protestation from their aged prophet, by the command of God himself, produced no effect! Not perceiving that it was their peculiar privilege to be unlike other nations, especially in this respect; they were bent on having a king, in order to become like them. (Note, Num. 23:9. Rom. 12:2.)—Amidst the sin and folly of this conduct, it should however be noted to their commendation, that they shewed great respect to Samuel. They did not attempt to set up a king of their own choosing, but sought his counsel and concurrence: and on an intimation from him, that their request would be granted, they put such entire confidence in him, that they departed quietly to their own houses. The history of the world cannot produce another instance, in which a public determination was formed to appoint a king; and yet no one proposed either himself or any other person to be king, but referred the determination entirely to God. (Note, Deut. 17:15.) Ambition of royal authority certainly was not the motive, in the leading men who supported this measure. The whole of their proceedings, even in this highly improper determination, shewed, how fully they were convinced, that the law of Moses was from God; and that, even in appointing a king, his directions must be observed, or rather that the decision must be referred implicitly to God himself.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Our lives are so short, and our faculties so soon impaired, that we ought to be active in the service of God, while we possess health of body and vigor of mind: and then, under disqualifying infirmities, it will be our comfort to reflect, that our youth and strength were spent to some useful purpose.—No instructions or examples can overcome the bias of our fallen nature to evil; and the Lord communicates his sanctifying grace by wise and righteous rules, of which he does not deign to inform us: duty is our part, and consequences must be left with him.—External restraints may produce appearances which impose on the most discerning; yet when they are withdrawn, and temptations occur, the evil heart will discover itself; and prosperity has a natural tendency to increase bad propensities. Parents should therefore prepare to bear with resignation disappointments in their children, and not be anxious to prefer or enrich them lest they should assist in inflaming their passions —"The love of money is the root of all evil," and peculiarly odious and mischievous in magistrates and ministers. (Note, 1 Tim. 6:6—10. P. O. 6—12.)—Those who have been most active, disinterested, and useful, must expect to meet with ingratitude and neglect, as their recompense from man for their services; but every loss and injury will prove a real gain to those, who expect their gracious recompense from God alone. And surely we may cheerfully submit to be rejected, despised, and hated by those who reject, despise, and hate the Lord: nay, we should consider it as an honorable testimony, that we are acknowledged to stand on his part. (Note, 1 Pet. 4:12—16.)—Grace subdues and mortifies, and convictions restrain, human depravity; but in itself it is the same from generation to generation. Discontent, fondness of change, a desire of conformity to the world and of outward splendor, are natural to man, and follow him from the cradle to the grave, unless regenerated and new created by the Holy Spirit. No change of circumstances can cure these diseases; the dissatisfaction of the present situation is impatiently felt, the comfort of some other is eagerly and ignorantly conceived; and neither the counsels of wise men, nor the testimony of God, will suppress these inordinate desires. When the mind is thus disposed, the slightest circumstance serves as a pretext for rushing upon gratification; yet a pious man would grieve to give others by his conduct even an occasion of sin.—The Lord requires his servants rather to yield to the unjust and unreasonable desires of men, than to seem attached to earthly objects. And he frequently gives men their wishes in anger, to chastise their iniquity, and convince them of their folly.—When our grief or displeasure leads us to more fervent prayer and intercession in behalf of those who grieve us, nothing can injure or even long distress us; for the consolation of God will richly repay the injuries of men.—Under the troubles which Providence has allotted us, we may expect the supports of grace: but if we resolutely persist in choosing for ourselves; when we have exchanged slight inconveniences for real grievances, we shall have the aggravation of an accusing conscience and the divine rebuke. And this will often be the case; for those things which at a distance look pleasant, are generally most bitter when in actual possession.—The law of God, and the manner of men, are widely different; the former should be the rule of our conduct in the several relations of life; the latter the measure of our expectations from others.—As magistracy is the appointment of God and a great blessing, and as every form is liable to abuses; it is our wisdom to be thankful for the advantages, and patient under the inconveniences, of that government under which we live: and it is our duty to pray continually for our rulers, that they may govern us in the fear of God, and that we may

The ancestry and personal qualifications of Saul, 1, 2. He is sent to seek his father's asses; but not finding them, he, by the counsel of his servant, purposes going to Samuel, 3—10. He is directed by young maidens where to find him, 11—14. Samuel, prepared by a revelation from God, expects him, and entertains him with great respect, 15—24. On the morrow he privately discourses with him, and brings him on his way, 25—27.

NOW there was a man of Benjamin, whose name was [a] Kish, the son of Abiel, the son of Zeror, the son of Bechorath, the son of Aphiah, [*] a Benjamite, a mighty man of [†] power.

2 And he had a son whose name was Saul, a [b] choice young man, and a goodly: and there was not among the children of Israel a goodlier person than he: [c] from his shoulders and upward he was higher than any of the people.

8 And the servant answered Saul again, and said, Behold, [‖] I have here at hand the fourth part of a shekel of silver; that will I give to the man of God, to tell us our way.

live in all godliness and honesty; thus "honoring God and the king, and not meddling with them that are given to change," or disposed, upon every imaginary grievance, or indeed on any account, to speak evil of the ruler of the people. And it is a hopeful symptom even in the evidently distempered state of individuals or collective bodies, when their desires of worldly objects can brook delay; and they can refer the time and manner of their being granted to the determination of Providence.

NOTES.

CHAP. IX. V. 1, 2. (Marg. Ref. a.) It is wonderful, that some chief of the tribe of Judah did not now advance a claim to the kingdom, in virtue of Jacob's blessing: (Notes, Gen. 49:8—10.) but "it was of the LORD," that he might first give the Israelites such a king as they had set their hearts on, before he raised up for them a king after his own heart. (13:14. Note, 8:19—22.) The tribe of Benjamin, by the fatal catastrophe of Gibeah's wickedness, was reduced to be the least in Israel; but the individuals were enriched in proportion. (Judg. 20: 21: Note, 21:16—18.) Even, if Kish was of an inferior family in this tribe (21), he might be very wealthy; and his son was possessed of all external accomplishments, suited to that carnal principle which had dictated Israel's request.—The words translated "a choice young man, and a goodly," may literally be rendered, a chosen and goodly person, there being nothing in the original for young: and Saul had sons grown up to man's estate at this time. (13:1,2.)

V. 3—5. Marg. Ref.

V. 6—10. The servant of Saul seems to have known more of Samuel than Saul himself did; and he spoke very respectfully of him: yet both Saul and he looked on him rather as a diviner, or fortune-teller, than as a prophet, whose office it was to instruct them in the truth and will of God. It was no doubt customary in those days, to shew respect to prophets, and even to princes, by a present; but when they concluded, that Samuel would not be approached without some gift, they appeared to have judged of him by the mercenary diviners or magicians. (Num. 22: 7.)—The ninth verse was evidently inserted, as a comment, in after ages, perhaps by Ezra, who is supposed to have set forth a correct edition of the Scriptures then extant, under the superintendence of the Spirit of prophecy. In the days of Samuel, prophets were emphatically styled Seers, or men who are enabled to see divine things, that they may shew them to others. The word prophet had been used of Abraham: (Gen. 20:7.) but in the time of Samuel, in common conversation, the word Seer was more used: for the men of God were also called prophets. (3: 20.) And at length, the name Seer sunk into disuse.

11 ¶ And as they went up *the hill to the city, they [q] found young maidens going out to draw water, and said unto them, Is the seer here?

12 And they answered them, and said, He is; behold he is before you: make haste now, for he came to-day to the city; for there is a †sacrifice of the people to-day in [r] the high place.

13 As soon as ye be come into the city, ye shall straightway find him, before he go up to the high place to eat: for the people will not eat until he come, because [s] he doth bless the sacrifice; and afterwards they eat that be bidden. Now therefore get you up; for about ‡this time ye shall find him.

14 And they went up into the city: and when they were come into the city, behold, Samuel came out against them, for to go up to the high place.

15 Now [t] the LORD had ‡told Samuel in his ear a day before Saul came, saying,

16 To-morrow about this time I will send thee a man out of the land of Benjamin, and [u] thou shalt anoint him to be captain over my people Israel, that he may save my people out of the hand of the Philistines: for I have [x] looked upon my people, because their cry is come unto me.

17 And when Samuel saw Saul, the LORD said unto him, [y] Behold the man whom I spake to thee of: this same shall ‖reign over my people.

18 Then Saul drew near to Samuel in the gate, and said, Tell me, I pray thee, where the seer's house is.

19 And Samuel answered Saul, and said, I am the seer; go up before me unto the high place; for ye shall eat with me to-day, and to-morrow I will let thee go, [z] and will tell thee all that is in thine heart.

20 And as for thine asses that were lost ¶ three days ago, [a] set not thy mind on them, for they are found. And [b] on whom is all the desire of Israel? is it not on thee, and on all thy father's house.

21 And Saul answered and said, Am not I [c] a Benjamite, of the smallest of the tribes of Israel? and [d] my family the least of all the families of the tribe of Benjamin? wherefore then speakest thou  so to me?

22 And Samuel took Saul and his servant, and brought them into the parlor, and made them sit [e] in the chiefest place among them that were bidden, which were about thirty persons.

23 And Samuel said unto the cook, [f] Bring the portion which I gave thee, of which I said unto thee, Set it by thee.

24 And the cook took up [g] the shoulder, and that which was upon it, and set it before Saul. And Samuel said, Behold that which is †† left, set it before thee, and eat; for unto this time hath it been kept for thee, since I said, I have invited the people. So Saul did eat with Samuel that day.

V. 12—14. (Note, 7:17.) Shiloh, the place which God first chose to place his name there, had forfeited that distinction: no other place was appointed: the tabernacle, wherever it was at this time situated, did not contain the ark; and there was no tabernacle or altar at Kirjath-jearim, where the ark remained. (Note 7:1,2.) These circumstances occasioned a kind of temporary suspension of the law against sacrificing in any other place, than that which the Lord had chosen: (Notes, Lev. 17:3—7. Deut. 12:5—7.) and the cities of the priests and Levites, where the people resorted for instruction, seemed the most proper for that purpose. The highest parts of these cities were generally selected: and from this circumstance, the subsequent pertinacious attachment of the Israelites to the 'high places" seems to have been derived.—Samuel, having burned upon the altar the appointed portion of the peace-offerings, previously to the sacred feast upon the remainder, poured out fervent prayers to the Lord for acceptance, and for his blessing on the service, as a religious ordinance to the good of the souls, as well as on the food for the refreshment of the bodies of those present. The simple manner, in which these circumstances are stated to strangers by the young maidens, implies that this was Samuel's constant practice on these occasions, and doubtless it was the general observance, in all the sacrifices at the tabernacle and temple, when true religion flourished; though at other times it would degenerate into a mere ceremony.

V. 16. (Marg. Ref.)—Save, &c.] When Israel grew slack in serving God, the Philistines recovered their authority: and though Saul did not reform the religion of Israel, yet in many instances he successfully fought their battles. (14: 17:)

V. 17—24. (Marg. Ref.) Samuel, as superintending the sacred feast, seems to have allotted to each guest his portion; but he expected, according to the divine monition, other guests besides those who had been previously invited. He had therefore given orders that the left shoulder, as the prime portion, (for the right belonged to the priest,) should be reserved, in case these guests should not come in time.

25 And when they were come down from the high place into the city, Samuel communed with Saul upon [h] the top of the house.

26 And they arose early: and it came to pass about the spring of the day, that Samuel called Saul to the top of the house, saying, [i] Up, that I may send thee away. And Saul arose, and they went out both of them, he and Samuel, abroad.

27 And as they were going down to the end of the city, Samuel said to Saul, [k] Bid the servant pass on before us, (and he passed on,) but stand thou still * a while, [l] that I may shew thee the word of God.

CHAP. X.

Samuel anoints Saul, and dismisses him with directions, and with tokens which came to pass accordingly, 1—13. Saul answers the inquiries of his uncle, but conceals the matter of the kingdom, 14—16. Samuel convenes the people at Mizpeh, where Saul is chosen king by lot, 17—15. A few honorably attend him, but others despise him, 26, 27.

THEN Samuel took [a] a vial of oil, and poured it upon his head, and [b] kissed him, and said, Is it not because the LORD hath anointed thee to be [c] captain over [d] his inheritance?

V. 25—27. Samuel conferred with Saul, and shewed him the intentions of God concerning him, privately, on the top of the house, (Marg. Ref. h,) to prepare him for the time, when he would be publicly, by lot, appointed to the kingdom. (Note, 10:17—22.)—All the circumstances of these transactions were calculated to prepare Saul's mind for what followed, and to shew him the interposition of God in it. (Notes, 2 Kings 9:1—13.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

We are never more likely to be unhappy, than when we have our outward portion or connexions, according to the choice of our own hearts: we ought therefore to beg of God in every thing to choose for us, and to teach us to acquiesce in his appointment.—True excellence of character does not result from external accomplishments; nor true felicity, from prosperous circumstances and outward splendor: and inattention to these obvious truths occasions the most fatal mistakes.—Diligence in business, and good behavior in relative life, are commendable, but no sure tokens of genuine piety, or acceptance with God.—We sensibly feel our temporal losses, and bestow much pains to retrieve them: but how little do we attempt the salvation of our souls, and how speedily are we weary in seeking it! Nay, if ministers could inform men how to secure their property, or recover it when lost, or to acquire wealth, they would be much more respected and consulted than they now are, when employed in teaching them how to escape eternal misery and to obtain eternal life! Indeed we all are naturally far more desirous to learn our fortune, than our duty: so that curiosity and worldly motives are frequently the first means of bringing men acquainted with the ministers and the word of God. And poor servants and mechanics are often better acquainted, than the rich and great are, with Seers, the holy men of God, who teach the way of eternal salvation: nay, in general, they have more respect for them, as they have not so many things to occupy their thoughts, or prejudice their hearts against the truth. But many will speak of ministers as men of God, and honorable men whose words will certainly come to pass, who neither comply with their exhortations, nor imitate their examples: and, being conscious that they do not choose to be at any expense in religion, they suspect, that the servants of God teach for hire, and will do nothing without pay. Indeed there have always been so great a majority of this character, that inattentive observers cannot readily understand the difference between mercenary diviners, and those who "seek not theirs but them;" or between blind watchmen and guides, and those who are Seers indeed. But the seeing eye and the hearing ear are, in this sense also, from the Lord; and to those that wait on him he will communicate the truths, which he would have them communicate to the people. But how shall those who are blind themselves, be seers for other men; or point out to them that Savior, of whom they have no knowledge? (Notes, Is. 56:9—12. Matt. 15:12—14.)—True grace teaches us to honor those whom God has honored, though their advancement be attended by our degradation; but that respect should be shewn in such a way, as may best tend to bring them acquainted with the truths and worship of God.—Without fervent prayer and praise, springing from a penitent, believing heart, a solemn sacrifice would have degenerated into a profane meal; and with them an ordinary meal becomes a spiritual sacrifice: but those who eat their food without thanking the Lord for it, or seeking his blessing on it, are scarcely distinguishable from brutes, or from Atheists; and the examples of eminent persons, in such matters as these, may have a salutary effect on those around them.—"Before honor is humility," and they who have well learned to obey, are most likely to be advanced to command, and to rule properly.—But how different are the Lord's purposes concerning us, from our intentions for ourselves! Perhaps Saul was the only man of the whole human race, who set out to seek asses, and literally found a kingdom: but many have taken long voyages and journeys, or moved their habitations, to seek riches and pleasures, who have been guided to places, where they have found the salvation of their souls; having met with those who addressed them, as if informed of the secrets of their lives and hearts; and having been thus led seriously to regard the message of the Lord delivered by them. If this has been our case, though our worldly projects have all been frustrated, let us cease caring about it; for the Lord has given us that which is infinitely better.

NOTES.

CHAP. X. V. 1. In the conversation of the preceding evening and of that morning, Samuel had doubtless given Saul all needful information, preparatory to this significant ceremony; and he probably joined with it exhortations, counsels, and prayers. (Marg. Ref. a. Notes, 2:35, 36. 16:13.)—The priests were anointed to their office, as types of Christ, and as implying their need of the communication of the Holy Spirit,

2 When thou art departed from me to-day, then thou shalt find two men by [f] Rachel's sepulchre, in the border of Benjamin, at [g] Zelzah; and they will say unto thee, [h] The asses which thou wentest to seek are found: and, lo, thy father hath left the * care of the asses, and sorroweth for you, saying, What shall I do for my son?

3 Then shalt thou go on forward from thence, and thou shalt come to the plain of [i] Tabor, and there shall meet thee three men going up to God to [k] Beth-el, one carrying [l] three kids, and another carrying three loaves of bread, and another carrying a bottle of wine.

to furnish them for their sacred work; and for the same reason the kings also were anointed. (Note, Ex. 29:1—7.) In performing this sacred rite, Samuel assured Saul of the Lord's choice of him to be king of Israel, and of his own hearty concurrence: and the kiss denoted affection and subjection, and loyalty to him, as the LORD's anointed. (Notes, Ps. 2:10—12.)—The law of Moses is silent as to the anointing of kings: but it seems to have been an ancient custom; (Judg. 9:8.) and when prophets conformed to it by divine command, it obtained the force of a law. —It does not appear, that Samuel used the holy oil of the sanctuary on this occasion, or even when he anointed David, but rather common olive-oil: for he was at a distance from the tabernacle. (16:1,13.)

V. 2. We may suppose, that Saul was exceedingly surprised, and scarcely able to believe what Samuel had said to him: to convince him therefore that the matter was from the Lord, Samuel prophetically, and very particularly, informed him of some incidents which he would meet with in his return. (Notes, Mark 11:1—11. 14:12—16.)

V. 3, 4. (Note, 9:12—14.) There seems to have been a high place at Beth-el, where priests attended to receive oblations, and to minister in their office: and these three men were going thither, in order to present peace-offerings; but, meeting Saul, they were secretly disposed by the Lord, to give him two loaves of bread, as a present, or tribute paid him after he had been anointed king.

Plain of Tabor. (3) Tabor, in the lot of Zebulun, or Issachar, (Marg. Ref. i,) in the northern part of the land, lay so remote from Saul's journey from Ramah to Gibeah, (26. 1:1. 9:5.) that it is most likely some place in the neighborhood of these cities was called "the plain of Tabor," from its resemblance to the vicinity of mount Tabor.

V. 5, 6. The hill of God, which was kept by a garrison of the Philistines, seems to have been at or near Gibeah, where Saul lived; and a high place for the worship of God was situated there (13).—From the time of Samuel, there appear to have been seminaries, where pious young men were educated, under the tuition of some approved prophets, in the knowledge of divine things; upon whom God was frequently pleased to bestow the Spirit of prophecy: and they were very useful in preserving some sense of true religion in the land, when the priests and Levites neglected their duty; as it must be concluded that they generally did at this time. (Notes, 1 Kings 19:20,21. 2 Kings 2:1,3. 4:1.) The garrison of the Philistines did not, it seems, disturb them in their devout studies and exercises.—The prophets frequently used solemn music, to compose their minds for the illapses of the Spirit of God; and many think, that they were immediately inspired to praise God in suitable hymns accompanying the music. (Notes, 2 Kings 3:15. 1 Cor. 14:26—33.) In these Saul was supernaturally enabled to join; as well as endued with extraordinary prudence and courage, qualifying him to govern the people of God. (Note, 1 Kings 3:5—14.)

V. 7. When Saul had by these signs been assured of his appointment to the kingdom, and especially when the Spirit of God had powerfully come upon him, and he was "turned into another man;" (Note, 9.) he must be left, without further particular directions, to act in general as circumstances required; depending on God for wisdom, assistance, and success. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 8. The deliverance of Israel from the Philistines, though one great end of Saul's appointment to the kingdom, was not attempted till the second year of his reign. And at that time, Saul at Gilgal neglected to wait for Samuel, according to directions given him, which in some respects correspond with these. (Notes, 13:8—15.)—Saul was confirmed in the kingdom

9 ¶ And it was so, that when he had turned his * back to go from Samuel, God † gave him [x] another heart: and [y] all those signs came to pass that day.

10 And when [z] they came thither to the hill, behold, a company of prophets met him; and the Spirit of God came upon him, and he prophesied among them.

11 And it came to pass, [a] when all that knew him before-time saw that, behold, he prophesied among the prophets, then the people said ‡ one to another, [b] What is this that is come unto the son of Kish? [c] Is Saul also among the prophets?

12 And one § of the same place answered and said, But [d] who is their Father? Therefore it became a proverb, Is Saul also among the prophets?

13 And when he had made an end of prophesying, he came to the high place.

14 And Saul's uncle said unto him and to his servant, Whither went ye? [e] And he said, To seek the asses: and when we saw that they were [f] no where, we came to Samuel.

15 And Saul's uncle said, Tell me, I pray thee, what Samuel said unto you?

16 And Saul said unto his uncle, He told us plainly that the asses were found. But [g] of the matter of the kingdom, whereof Samuel spake, he told him not.

[Practical Observations.]

17 ¶ And Samuel called the people together [h] unto the LORD to Mizpeh:

18 And said unto the children of Israel, [i] Thus saith the LORD God of Israel, I brought up Israel out of Egypt, and delivered you out of the hand of the Egyptians, and out of the hand of all kingdoms, and of them that oppressed you.

19 And [k] ye have this day rejected your God, who himself saved you out of all your adversities and your tribulations: and ye have said unto him, Nay but set a king over us. Now therefore present yourselves before the LORD [l] by your tribes, and by your thousands.

20 And when Samuel had [m] caused all the tribes of Israel to come near, the tribe of Benjamin was taken.

21 When he had caused the tribe of Benjamin to come near by their families, the family of Matri was taken, and Saul the son of Kish was taken, and when they sought him he could not be found.

22 Therefore they [n] inquired of the LORD further, if the man should yet come thither. And the LORD answered, Behold, he hath [o] hid himself among the stuff.

23 And they ran and fetched him thence: and when he stood among the people, [p] he was higher than any of the people, from his shoulders and upward.

at Gilgal, when Samuel was present: (11:14,15.) and it is probable, that Samuel purposed to seek direction, and a blessing from God, by solemn sacrifices, before Saul made war upon the Philistines; but he was prevented by Saul's precipitancy.—Perhaps the instruction was intended as a general rule, on every great emergency. (Note, 15:1—3.)

V. 9. Another heart.] Saul was inspired with fortitude and resolution; and his mind was enlarged to great designs of governing and delivering Israel, and subduing their enemies, and thus promoting the welfare of his people: he was also brought under religious impressions; and indeed his conduct, for a season, appeared very promising, though he afterwards became atrociously wicked. (Notes, Matt. 12:43—45. 2 Pet. 2:20—22.) He was "turned into another man:" but it is not said, that he was made "partaker of a new heart, and a right spirit." The effects and nature of the change which took place in Saul at this time, will be viewed by readers in general according to their different sentiments on some points of doubtful disputation; which after all can never be decided by this, or any other example; but from a comprehensive knowledge of the sacred oracles, and the nature and securities of God's everlasting covenant. (Notes, 2 Sam. 23:5. Is. 55:4,5. Jer. 32:38—41.)

V. 10—13. When Saul came among the prophets, the Spirit of the Lord came upon him, and he spake so pertinently and fluently in divine things, or so earnestly joined in their adorations and hymns of sacred praise, that those who before had known him were astonished to hear him: and one said, "But who is their Father?" 'Is not God the Father of prophets? Why 'need you then be surprised to see Saul, though 'before an unlikely person, become one of them?' Or, 'Is not Samuel the father or institutor of this 'seminary? and Saul has been all night with him, 'and is thus become one of them.' (Note, 19:19—24.)—It caused far greater astonishment many ages afterwards to see another Saul among the apostles of Jesus. (Note, Acts 9:17—22.)—When Saul had prophesied for a time he seems to have gone to the high place, to perform his devotions before he returned home.

V. 16. This may be ascribed to a commendable modesty and prudence, by which Saul would avoid ostentation, shun envy, and patiently wait the event. (Note, Judg. 14:5,6.)

V. 17—22. (Marg. Ref.—Notes, 8:1—9.)—This determination seems to have been made by casting lots. The appointment of a king was sen, that there is none like him among all the people? And all the people shouted, and said, *God save the king.

25 Then Samuel told the people [r] the manner of the kingdom, and wrote it in a book, and laid it up before the LORD. And Samuel sent all the people away, every man to his house.

26 And Saul also went home to [s] Gibeah; and there went with him a band of men, [t] whose hearts God had touched.

27 But the [u] children of Belial said, How shall this man save us? and they despised him, and [x] brought him no presents: but [†] he held his peace.

CHAP. XI.

Nahash, the Ammonite, encamps against Jabesh-gilead, and offers the inhabitants most cruel and disgraceful terms; who obtain seven days' respite, 1—3. They send messengers to Gibeah, and Saul delivers them, and smites the Ammonites, 4—11. Saul will not allow his despisers to be punished, 12, 13. He is made king in Gilgal, 14, 15.

THEN [a] Nahash the Ammonite came up and encamped against [b] Jabesh-gilead: and all the men of Jabesh said unto Nahash, [c] Make a covenant with us, and we will serve thee.

2 And Nahash the Ammonite answered them, [d] On this condition will I make a covenant with you, that [e] I may thrust out all your right eyes, and lay it for [f] a reproach upon all Israel.

3 And the elders of Jabesh said unto him, * Give us seven days' respite, that we may send messengers unto all the coasts of Israel: and then, if there be thus referred to God, by the interposition of his prophet, and not to a popular election. (Notes, 8:19,22. Deut. 17:14,15.) Yet the narrative implies, that the elders inquired of the Lord, either by the high priest, or by Samuel; and that they received an express answer (22).—Saul hid himself, probably from criminal diffidence and distrust of God; yet some suppose, he was alarmed by hearing, that the Lord was displeased with the people for asking a king.

V. 25. The manner of the kingdom.] Probably this writing contained the rules of the government; or, in modern language, the prerogatives of the prince, and the privileges of the people. "The manner of the kingdom" would differ considerably from "the manner of the king," before mentioned: the one being the appointment of God, and the other the effect of human depravity, when intrusted with absolute authority. (Notes, 8:10—18. Deut. 17:14—18.)

V. 26, 27. The people in general seem to have treated the matter with great indifference, notwithstanding the earnestness with which they had demanded a king. And Saul modestly went home to his own house, leaving for the present Samuel to manage public affairs, as he had before done. Yet he was attended by a band of men whose hearts God disposed to support his authority; while others contemptuously rejected him, and would not acknowledge him as king. But he prudently held his peace, and did not resent their affronts; and thus civil discords and unpopular measures were prevented. (Notes, Judg. 8:1—3. 12:1—7.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—16.

Many are employed in outward services to the Lord's people, who have not the unction of his sanctifying grace: yet the most eminent Christians and ministers must honor and obey God's authority in them.—The attentive believer, comparing the dispensations of Providence with the word of God, will perceive his hand in the most ordinary concerns of life, as fulfilments of the Scripture, answers of prayer, and evidences of the Lord's peculiar kindness.—A superior care, in common life, swallows up an inferior one: and the tender parent ceases from anxiety about his property, when solicitous for the welfare of his son. Children therefore should take heed not to distress such kind friends: but we are especially reminded, that a due concern about eternal things would moderate our care about the interests of this life.—Many changes may take place in the language, conduct, and disposition of him, who is not born of God: another man he may become, and yet not a new creature; another heart he may have, but not a holy heart: he may be qualified for ruling or preaching, and yet not be "made meet for the inheritance of the saints in light;" nay, he may prophesy and work miracles, and yet be a child of the devil.—Sudden changes are generally to be suspected: but when we consider who makes the Christian and the prophet, we need not be offended, should we number among professors and even preachers of the gospel, some Saul who was one of our former ungodly acquaintance: for true conversion makes so great a change in a man's character, that former friends can scarcely believe him to be the same; whether they admire and love, or despise and hate it.—When we depend on the guidance of the Holy Spirit, we may regulate our general conduct as circumstances require, and act with humble confidence in perplexing situations, being assured that "God is with us:" but we should enter on every enterprise, with reference to his authority and worship, and carefully observe his directions, and wait his time.—We may freely speak of those things which are honorable to others; but in general it is best to be silent, as to those transactions which tend to our own reputation.

V. 17—27.

The Lord will bring to a seasonable determination those affairs, which are referred to him: but the gratification of inordinate desires is short-lived and expires in disappointment and vexation. It is good to be conscious of our unworthiness and insufficiency for the services to which we are called; and to avoid ostentation, and whatever may excite envy and opposition: but we should be careful not to run into the opposite extreme, by refusing the employments to which the Lord calls us, through meanness of spirit and unbelief. Indeed, high stations are heavy burdens, when the duties of them are conscientiously attended on: and the comfort of them is but small; for the heart of man is prone no man to save us, we will come out to thee.

4 Then came the messengers to [g] Gibeah of Saul, and told the tidings in the ears of the people: and all the people [h] lifted up their voices and wept.

5 And, behold, Saul came [i] after the herd out of the field; and Saul said, [j] What aileth the people that they weep? And they told him the tidings of the men of Jabesh.

6 And the [k] Spirit of God came upon Saul when he heard those tidings, and [l] his anger was kindled greatly.

7 And he took a yoke of oxen, and [m] hewed them in pieces, and sent them throughout all the coasts of Israel by the hands of messengers, saying, [n] Whosoever cometh not forth after Saul and after Samuel, so shall it be done unto his oxen. And [o] the fear of the LORD fell on the people, and they came out [*] with one consent.

8 And when he numbered them in [p] Bezek, [q] the children of Israel were three hundred thousand, and the men of Judah thirty thousand.

9 And they said unto the messengers that came, Thus shall ye say unto the men of Jabesh-gilead, To-morrow, by that time the sun be hot, ye shall have [†] help. And the messengers came and shewed it to the men of Jabesh; and they were glad.

10 Therefore the men of Jabesh said, [r] To-morrow we will come out unto you, and ye shall do with us all that seemeth good unto you.

11 And it was so [s] on the morrow, that Saul put the people [t] in three companies, and they came into the midst of the host in the [u] morning-watch, and [x] slew the Ammonites until the heat of the day: and it came to pass, that they which remained were scattered, [y] so that two of them were not left together.

12 ¶ And the people said unto Samuel, [z] Who is he that said, Shall Saul reign over us? bring the men, that we may put them to death.

13 And Saul said, [a] There shall not a man be put to death this day: for to-day [b] the LORD hath wrought salvation in Israel.

14 Then said Samuel to the people, Come, and [c] let us go to Gilgal, and [d] renew the kingdom there.

to envy all who are preferred. (Notes, 18:6—9. Ec. 4:4—6.) Our natural enmity to God disposes us to despise and oppose the instruments which he selects for the government of states, and for promoting his cause: and if some approve, honor, and help them, they will be reviled and contemned by others. But we should wait his will with patience, and without discouragement; bear scorn and malice in silent meekness; and attend to the duties of our station, according to the manner of it: thus the fatal effects of discord will be prevented, and in due season the Lord will plead our cause, and all opposition will fall before us.—Men seldom receive that with thankfulness, which they sought with too great eagerness: for their expectations are not exactly answered, and this occasions dissatisfaction and sullen discontent. And when any welcome with gratitude the appointments of God, and set themselves cordially to promote his cause; (even the cause of Christ our anointed King, whom so many "children of Belial" despise;) they are those alone, whose hearts he has touched by his grace; and to him all the praise belongs. (Notes, Ezra 1:1—4. John 6:41—46.)

NOTES.

CHAP. XI. V. 1—3. Jabesh-gilead had been desolated by the Israelites some time before: (Note, Judg. 21:9—12.) but being now replenished, it was assaulted by the Ammonites on whose borders it was situated; who, it is probable, renewed the claims which had been made in the days of Jephthah. (Notes, Judg. 11:12—23.) And the inhabitants, when they offered to capitulate, could obtain no better terms, than for every man to have his right eye put out.—It is probable, that their enemies would not have consented to the respite even of a few days, but in confidence that they would not be helped, and that in consequence the nation of Israel would be the more deeply disgraced. (Notes, 2 Sam. 10:2—4.) Some apprehension of this war had induced the Israelites to desire a king: (Note, 12:11—13.) but the unsettled state of affairs both encouraged the Ammonites, and disheartened the men of Jabesh-gilead.

V. 4, 5. Saul, finding himself despised by some of the Israelites, and neglected by others, returned quietly to his former occupations, and left the matter entirely to Providence. (Note, 10:26,27.)—In this chapter he looks as great as the much celebrated Roman dictator from the plough, and indeed greater. For Saul followed his herds, after he was appointed to the kingdom by God himself; yet when called forth to action, his vigor and success were not at all inferior to those of the renowned Roman.

V. 6—11. Saul, excited by the Spirit of God, and fired with a generous indignation at the indignity offered to Israel, in a very spirited, yet modest and clement manner, summoned the attendance of the people; assuming regal authority, yet adding the name of Samuel, doubtless to avoid needless offence: and, through the immediate influence of God upon their hearts, a very great multitude assembled with surprising celerity. Upon this they undertook and per-

CHAP. XII.

Samuel, before Israel, avows his integrity, and the people fully justify him, 1—5. He expostulates with them, for their ingratitude, in rejecting the government of God, and warns them against disobedience, 6—15. To shew their guilt in asking a king, he calls for thunder and rain in time of harvest, which greatly dismays them, 16—19. He promises to instruct and pray for them, and encourages them to cleave to the service of God, and to trust in his mercy, 20—25.

AND Samuel said unto all Israel, Behold, [a] I have hearkened unto your voice in all that ye said unto me, and [b] have made a king over you.

2 And now, behold, the king [c] walketh before you: and [d] I am old and greyheaded; and, behold, [e] my sons are with you: and [f] I have walked before you from my childhood unto this day.

formed a march perhaps of forty or fifty miles, within the space of about twenty-four hours; and by this despatch arrived in time to rescue their trembling brethren at Jabesh, and unexpectedly to destroy or totally scatter their insulting enemies. In this public service, it is said, that "the Spirit of God came on Saul," and in this alone. (Notes, 10:5—7. 16:13,14.)

V. 12—15. Saul's extraordinary success went further with the people, than either the Lord's appointment, or Samuel's anointing of him, or his personal accomplishments; so that they received him as their king, with sacrifices and great joy. And now "the sons of Belial" were saved from death, as well as Israel from the Ammonites, by him whom they despised as unable to save them. (Note, 10:26,27.) Saul's answer likewise gave the glory of the victory to God, who alone had saved his people. In all this, his conduct was unexceptionable; and the whole concludes with such humanity and apparent piety, as promised far better effects than those which followed. (Marg. Ref.—Note, Ps. 36:3,4.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Hasty settlements among bad neighbors often produce multiplied calamities: (Note, Num. 32:29.) and when professed Christians act inconsistently with the covenant of God, they will probably be forced to the basest subjection to man; for God will disgrace those who dishonor him, and make them a reproach to their enemies.—To save their lives men often part with their liberty, and will even consent to lose their eyes: how much more then is it our wisdom, to part with our right eye, rather than to be cast into hell-fire! (Notes, Matt. 5:29,30. Mark 9:43—50. P. O. 30—50.) Indulgences or interests most dear to our carnal hearts, must be crucified, if we would covenant with God for the life of our souls; and, whatever respite he may give, none can save us out of his hand: we must consent to his proposals or perish for ever. But tender mercy is couched under this apparently severe requisition; the dreaded operation will not be so painful as men suppose, the advantages are immense, and the service of God is perfect freedom.—The Lord, in providence, will make way for those, whom he has designed and prepared for usefulness: nor shall any repent of humbly waiting in obscurity and honest industry, till he is pleased to call them forth; for pride and impatience alone can conclude, that the only wise God has lighted a candle to leave it under a bushel.—The reproach of the gospel, the distresses of the Lord's people, and the insulting triumphs of their enemies, should not only excite our sympathizing sorrows, but our most decisive exertions in our several stations, yea, our warm and generous indignation. But magistrates in all cases should be sparing of the lives of their subjects, and only punish them in their property, where that can be made effectual.—When zeal for the glory of God, and love for their brethren, prompt men to earnest and vigorous efforts, and when he is pleased to concur, great effects are speedily produced; but in critical junctures ordinary measures of despatch are insufficient.—Deliverance in extreme distress is doubly welcome, and it is often vouchsafed to the true Christian: but the destruction, which commonly overtakes the wicked in the height of their triumphs and security, is inexpressibly dreadful.—Humility and clemency add superior lustre to the most splendid actions; he who forgives his enemies, when he has them in his power, obtains the noblest victory; (Note, Prov. 16:32.) and by giving the praise of illustrious exploits to God, a man acquires the most solid honor.—The Lord delights to plead the cause of those, who are dumb under injuries, and who do not plead for themselves; to put to silence those who contend with his servants; and to work by instruments which man contemns.—Thus the despised Savior will at length be universally acknowledged as the Lord's anointed King, with songs of triumph and praise: at present, before the mercy-seat, he receives the submissions and pleads the cause of rebels, who are willing that he should reign over and save them; but shortly from his righteous tribunal he will condemn to everlasting ruin all those, who persist in contempt of him and opposition to him.

NOTES.

CHAP. XII. V. 1. The elders of Israel, being convened at Gilgal, where they had celebrated the late victory with sacrifices, and con-is witness this day, that [n] ye have not found ought [o] in my hand. And they answered, He is witness.

6 And Samuel said unto the people, [p] It is the LORD that * advanced Moses and Aaron, and that brought your fathers up out of the land of Egypt.

7 Now therefore stand still, that I may [q] reason with you before the LORD, of all the [†] righteous acts of the LORD, which he did [‡] to you and to your fathers.

8 When [r] Jacob was come into Egypt, and your fathers [s] cried unto the LORD, then the LORD [t] sent Moses and Aaron, which [u] brought forth your fathers out of Egypt and [x] made them dwell in this place.

9 And when they [y] forgat the LORD their God, [z] he sold them into the hand of Sisera, captain of the host of Hazor, and into the hand [a] of the Philistines, and [b] into the hand of the king of Moab, and they fought against them.

10 And [c] they cried unto the LORD, and said, We have sinned, because we have forsaken the LORD, and have served [d] Baalim and Ashtaroth: but now [e] deliver us out of the hand of our enemies, and we will serve thee.

11 And the LORD sent [f] Jerubbaal, and [g] Bedan, and [h] Jephthah, and [i] Samuel, and delivered you out of the hand of your enemies on every side, and ye dwelled safe.

12 And when ye saw that [k] Nahash, the king of the children of Ammon, came against you, ye said unto me, [l] Nay, but a king shall reign over us; [m] when the LORD your God was your King.

13 Now therefore [n] behold the king [o] whom ye have chosen, and whom ye [p] have desired! and, behold, the LORD hath set a king over you.

14 If [q] ye will fear the LORD, and serve him, and obey his voice, and not rebel against the [§] commandment of the LORD, then shall both ye, and also the king that reigneth over you, [‖] continue following the LORD your God.

firmed the kingdom to Saul; (Note, 11:12—15.) Samuel embraced the opportunity of appealing to the people, and to their king, concerning his integrity and disinterested conduct, as their judge, when about to divest himself of his authority. By this he doubtless means not only to clear his own character, but likewise to set before Saul an instructive example; and especially to convince the people of their ingratitude to God, as well as to him. (Notes, Acts 20:18—35.)

V. 2—7. Samuel might be about eighteen years of age when Eli was slain, and thirty-eight when he assembled the people at Mizpeh, (Notes, 7:1—12.) and perhaps sixty at this time. —From a child he had been laboring assiduously for the good of his people, and was grown grey in their service; yet they had at last rejected him! His sons had indeed misbehaved; and, having been reduced to a private station, they were there present, if the people chose to call them to an account: but for himself he could appeal to the Lord, and to their consciences, and was even willing that their anointed king should decide, whether he had not acted with entire equity, impartiality, and disinterestedness, during his whole administration. (Notes, Num. 16:15. 2 Cor. 1:12—14. 12:14—21. 1 Thes. 2:1—8.) When they had in consequence fully attested his integrity, he expostulated no further with them concerning their conduct towards him; but endeavored to convince them of their wickedness in the sight of God; who had brought their fathers out of Egypt by a prophet and a priest, and not by a king like those of the surrounding nations. (Notes, 8:1—5. Deut. 17:14. Hos. 12:12—14. 13: 10,11. Acts 7:30—36.)

V. 8—10. Jacob, by going down into Egypt, made way for that oppression, which caused his posterity to cry unto the Lord; and the deliverance from Egypt by Moses and Aaron, made way for the settlement of Israel in Canaan: and their subsequent rebellions, and chastisements prepared the way for renewed deliverances, not by kings, but by judges, raised up by the Lord for that gracious purpose, as Samuel himself had been. (Marg. Ref.—Notes, Ex. 3:7. 4: 5: Judg. 2:11—14. 3:12—30. 4: 5:)

V. 11—13. (Marg. Ref.—Notes, Judg. 6:—11:) Bedan may be considered as a contraction of Ben-dan, or the son of Dan; and it is probable that Samson is intended. (Notes, Judg. 13:—16:) The Septuagint has Barak.—Samuel joins himself to the number of those, by whom the Lord had delivered the people; to impress more deeply on their minds the conviction, that in rejecting him, they had refused to continue any longer under the immediate government of God, by judges of his appointment, which had been their honor and happiness.—When Nahash prepared to war against them, it seems Samuel gave them some intimations that God would raise them up a deliverer, or he offered to lead them to battle; but they refused his proposals, saying, "Nay, but a king shall reign over us:" and accordingly God had appointed a king over them. the LORD, but rebel against the commandment of the LORD; then shall the hand of the LORD be against you, as it was [s] against your fathers.

16 Now therefore [t] stand and see this great thing, which the LORD will do before your eyes.

17 Is it [u] not wheat-harvest to-day? [x] I will call unto the LORD, and he shall send thunder and rain; that ye may perceive and see that [y] your wickedness is great, which ye have done in the sight of the LORD, in asking you a king.

18 So Samuel called unto the LORD; and the LORD [z] sent thunder and rain that day and all the people greatly [a] feared the LORD and Samuel.

19 And all the people said unto Samuel, [b] Pray for thy servants unto the LORD thy God, that we die not: for we have added unto all our sins this evil, to ask us a king.

20 And Samuel said unto the people, [c] Fear not: (ye have done all this wickedness: yet turn not aside from following the LORD, but serve the LORD with all your heart;

21 And [d] turn ye not aside: for then should ye go after [e] vain things, which [f] cannot profit nor deliver; for they are vain:)

22 For [g] the LORD will not forsake his people [h] for his great name's sake; because [i] it hath pleased the LORD to make you his people.

23 Moreover, as for me, [k] God forbid that I should sin against the LORD * in ceasing to pray for you: but [l] I will teach you [m] the good and the right way.

24 Only [n] fear the LORD, and serve him [o] in truth with all your heart: for [p] consider † how great things he hath done for you.

V. 14, 15. The Israelites might perhaps suppose, that under a king, who would always be at hand to succor them, and fight against their enemies, their affairs would not be exposed to such vicissitudes as before. But Samuel assured them, that there would be no difference in that respect: for their privileges as the Lord's peculiar people would still be continued to them, while they adhered to his service, and withdrawn, if they forsook it, even as in times past. (Marg. Ref.)

Following, &c. (14) Depending on God, adhering to his worship and service, and protected by him; and so, a holy and happy people. (Notes, 15:11. Num. 14:24. Hos. 6:1—3.)

V. 16—19. Even rain was uncommon during the wheat-harvest, and doubtless this thunderstorm was very violent. Having likewise been predicted and called for, it formed a useful attestation of Samuel's word, and was entirely suited to produce conviction and alarm in the consciences of the people.—Being, therefore, terrified with the displays of the divine power, which were made in answer to Samuel's prayer, and perceiving how much he was honored by God, they were afraid of some immediate judgments, such as were inflicted on their forefathers for rebelling against Moses and Aaron; and they earnestly begged of him to pray for them. (Notes, Num. 11:1—3. 16:28—35,41—50. 21:4—9.) They likewise acknowledged that, n addition to all their other rebellions, they ad heinously sinned in desiring a king.—It hould here be observed, that their guilt did not consist in preferring the authority of kings to any other kind of government; but in rebelliously and ungratefully determining to be governed in a different manner, from that which God himself had chosen for them. And if afterwards, when God had expressly appointed David to rule over them, the people had required a change of government, and wanted again to be ruled by judges as their fathers had been, they would have been guilty of a similar rebellion. (Note, 1 Kings 12:16.)

V. 20. Fear not, &c.] Samuel repeatedly exhorted the people to "fear the LORD;" (14, 24.) yet here he exhorted them not to fear; that is, not to be dismayed by the dread of immediate destruction. (Note, Ex. 20:18—20.)—Reverence of the majesty and authority of God, and fear of his displeasure, when counterpoised by the hope of his favor, quicken men in seeking and serving him: but such a fear of wrath, as occasions despondency and hard thoughts of him, drives men from their duty, and exposes them to manifold temptations. (Notes, Gen. 45:5. Ps. 130:3,4. 2 Tim. 1:6—8. 1 John 4:18.)

V. 22. In preferring the seed of Jacob to other families, to be his people, the Lord acted as a Sovereign, who is not bound, and does not deign, to assign his reasons: but having made them his people, the honor of his perfections required, that he should not entirely forsake them till the promised Seed arose, however severely he corrected them; nor even then, finally and absolutely: and this consideration was suited to excite and encourage their obedience. (Marg. Ref. —Notes, Ps. 94:12—14. Is. 41:8,9. Jer. 33:23—26. Rom. 11:1—10,25—32.)

V. 23. The people had no occasion to fear Samuel's resentment: for he deemed himself bound in duty to persevere in praying for them, notwithstanding the affront which they had put upon him. And though he was no longer their chief magistrate; yet he promised still to devote the remnant of his life to their service, as their instructer in religion, and in promoting their peace and happiness. In these respects he judged them all the days of his life. (Note, 7:15.)

25 But [q] if ye shall still do wickedly, ye shall be consumed, both [r] ye and your king.

Saul chooses a select band, and dismisses the people, 1, 2. Jonathan, his son, smites a garrison of the Philistines, and Saul summons the people to Gilgal, 3, 4. The Philistines gather a great army; and Israel is distressed and scattered, 5—7. Saul, weary of waiting for Samuel, sacrifices, 8, 9. Samuel comes and reproves him, and shews that God has rejected him; while Saul in vain excuses himself, 10—14. A small company attend Saul; and three bands of Philistines waste the land, 15—18. —Nothing can be well imagined, more expressive of genuine excellency of character, and a right state of heart, than this simple but solemn declaration. Though ungratefully rejected by Israel, and degraded from his high station; he would yet think himself most criminal before God, should he decline any service, which he was in his inferior station capable of rendering them. This entirely coincides with St. Paul's avowal to the Corinthians. (Note, 2 Cor. 12:14, 15.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The favored few, who have walked before God from childhood to old age, while they look back on their past lives with gratitude, as the sure evidence of acceptance, and as confirming their expectation of eternal glory; may receive this satisfaction, and the "rejoicing in the testimony of their consciences," as a gracious recompense from the Lord; and may speak of them, in order to induce young persons to seek and serve him without delay.—There are seasons, when we are called on to vindicate our own characters and conduct before men, and to shew them how conscientiously we have acted towards them: but it should be always done in subserviency to their conviction and edification. We may very properly touch on this subject, when we can thus convey useful instructions to our juniors or successors: and men may recede from public stations with comfort, when they can extort even from their opposers and despisers a testimony to their integrity.—The honor, rendered to those who are concluding their course, differs widely from the applause and congratulation which many receive, when they first step forth before the public eye. This indeed often terminates in disgrace and contempt: it is therefore unworthy of our wishes, and ought surely never to move a wise man's envy or discontent, though rendered to others at his expense. (Notes, 2 Sam. 15. 1—6. 18:9—18. 1 Chr. 29:20,26—28.)—Prosperity in sin is no proof of impunity; and sinners never more need to be warned, than when successful in their undertakings.—But the servants of God, though ill treated, should be careful not to expostulate too much with those by whom they have been injured; but to "reason with them of the righteous acts of the Lord," of his truth and mercy, and of their conduct towards him, for their humiliation.—Our safe and happy state consists in a willing dependence on God, and subjection to him: but we are apt to affect independence, and to refuse obedience, by which we exchange substantial good for an empty shadow: for the greatest outward prosperity contributes nothing to our felicity, except when it induces us to fear and serve God, and to obey his voice; and is improved as a talent in doing good to men.—Disobedience ensures misery from generation to generation, whatever be our station or circumstances in life: and to continue "following the Lord," as his accepted servants, is the highest privilege we can enjoy.—The most useful benefactors of mankind, who have spent their lives, and worn out their constitutions, in unceasing labors for the good of others, must not be surprised, if they are at length cast off with neglect and ingratitude: but when the perverseness of their brethren prevents them from doing all that good which they desired to do, they should still do all the good they can. This is a general rule for all: those who cannot rule may teach, and those who cannot teach may pray, and set an edifying example; and no provocations should tempt us to sin against God in ceasing to pray for our children, relations, friends, people, fellow-sinners, or even our inveterate enemies. Yet the prayers of the church, and the intercession of Christ, will in the event appear to have been united against impenitent sinners; yea, the elements and the whole creation will shortly be armed against them to their destruction. The belief of this alarming truth should "warn them to flee from the wrath to come," to confess their sins, to obey the gospel, and to desire the prayers and counsels of its ministers. But when sinners are deeply convinced of their guilt and danger, they need encouragement, lest their fear should lead to despondency. (Note, 2 Cor. 2:5—11.)—In the day of judgment all those things which men have inordinately loved, and for which they have forsaken God, will be found "vain, and such as cannot profit or deliver," even though they were "the kingdoms of the world and the glory of them." Happy then are they, whom the Lord has pleased to make his people! "he will never leave nor forsake them," but will glorify his great name in their eternal salvation. None, however, can know assuredly, that these blessings belong to them, except they attend to "the good and the right way, and fear the Lord, and serve him with all their heart:" (Notes, Jer. 32:38—41. John 10:26—31. 1 Pet. 1:3—5.) and if "we consider what great things he hath done for us," especially in the work of our redemption and regeneration, we cannot want motive, or encouragement, or assistance for so doing.

NOTES.

Chap. XIII. V. 1, 2. The language in the original, "Saul was the son of one year in his reigning; and when he had reigned two years over Israel," (marg.) is differently interpreted: but probably it only means, according to the Hebrew idiom, that during the first year nothing remarkable occurred; but after two years, (or in the second year of his reign,) the subsequent events took place. The passage seems to refer to the transactions at Gilgal recorded in the former chapters. Perhaps those events did not take place, till the second year after he had been first appointed by the Lord to be king over Israel. (Notes, 10:1,17—27. 11:6—15. 12:1.) When he dismissed the rest of the multitude, he retained three thousand chosen men, for his own defence and that of his country; which he divided between himself and his son Jonathan.

V. 3, 4. After Saul had defeated Nahash, and had been confirmed in the kingdom; and after he had joined with Samuel in offering sacrifices, and had obtained the benefit of his prayers; it must be concluded that he ought to have marched directly with his victorious army against the Philistines, who possessed strongholds in the land, and had become very formidable; and that true policy required this of him. (Notes, 9:16. 11:12—15.) But it is probable, that he was elated with success, pleased with the shew of royalty, and disposed to ease and indulgence. Thus the favorable opportunity was lost, the ardor of his followers was suffered to abate, and perhaps some of them were disgusted: and the Philistines, doubtless learning that a king had been chosen, with a view to deliver Israel from their power; assiduously employed the time given them, in preparing for war, and in weakening and disarming the Israelites. In the mean while Jonathan, probably by Saul's command, smote a garrison of the Philistines; so that "Israel was had in abomination by the Philistines," who resented it as an indignity, and probably regarded it as an act of rebellion against their authority: thus they were exceedingly exasperated; and when Saul at length sounded the alarm, the people either did not come to him, or they speedily deserted him.—In all these measures Saul seems to have been very impolitic: (Note, 11:12—15.) but the Lord intended to chastise the people for their sins, to expose their folly in expecting that a king could save them, and to prepare the way for a glorious deliverance which he intended to effect for them. (Notes, 12:14,15. 14:11—23.)

V. 5. Thirty thousand chariots.] The Philistines had doubtless collected troops on this emergency from all the surrounding nations; but the number of chariots of war here stated is immensely large beyond all example, (Ex. 14: 7. Judg. 4:3. 2 Sam. 10:18. 1 Kings 10:26. Ps. 68:17.) and wholly disproportioned to the number of their horsemen. Commentators therefore conjecture, that their carriages for baggage and all other uses are included.

V. 6, 7. The numerous and well appointed army of the Philistines so terrified the people, that most of them deserted, and either hid themselves, or passed over Jordan, to be out of the reach of the enemy; while the few who remained with Saul, trembled as they followed him. (Notes, Deut. 20:5—9. Judg. 6:2,3. 7:2,3. Is. 42:22—25.)

V. 8, 9. (Note, 10:8.) According to the direction before given, and perhaps since repeated, Saul waited for Samuel till the close of the seventh day: but, being impatient of his situation; displeased perhaps with Samuel for not coming sooner, and attributing the people's terror and desertion to his absence, and the want of some token of the Lord's presence; and fearing lest the others also should leave him; he proceeded to offer sacrifices. This was contrary to the express injunctions, which had been laid upon him to wait for Samuel; who, having presented burnt-offerings and peace-offerings, with solemn prayers and supplications, would have shewn him how he ought to proceed, in the present difficult emergency, that he might ensure success. —As no priest is mentioned, it has been thought that Saul, presuming on his kingly authority, usurped the priesthood also: but this is doubtful. It is certain, however, that he took too much upon him, and thought it was fit the prophet should wait

12 Therefore [s] said I, The Philistines will come down now upon me to Gilgal, and I have not * made supplication unto the LORD: [t] I forced myself therefore, and offered a burnt-offering.

13 And Samuel said to Saul, [u] Thou hast done foolishly: [x] thou hast not kept the commandment of the LORD thy God, which he commanded thee: for now would the LORD have established thy kingdom upon Israel for ever.

14 But [y] now thy kingdom shall not continue; [z] the LORD hath sought him a man after his own heart, and the LORD hath commanded him to be [a] captain over his people, because thou hast not kept that which the LORD commanded thee.

15 And Samuel arose, and gat him up from Gilgal unto Gibeah of Benjamin. And Saul numbered the people that were † present with him, [b] about six hundred men.

16 And Saul, and Jonathan his son, and the people that were present with them, abode in ‡ Gibeah of Benjamin: but the Philistines encamped in Michmash.

17 ¶ And the spoilers came out of the camp of the Philistines, [c] in three companies: one company turned unto the way that leadeth to [d] Ophrah, unto the land of [e] Shual:

18 And another company turned the way to [f] Beth-horon: and another company turned to the way of the border, that looketh to the valley of [g] Zeboim, toward the wilderness.

19 Now [h] there was no smith found throughout all the land of Israel: for the Philistines said, Lest the Hebrews make them swords or spears:

20 But all the Israelites went down to the Philistines, to sharpen every man his share, and his coulter, and his axe, and his mattock.

21 Yet they had ◊ a file for the mattocks, and for the coulters, and for the forks, and for the axes, and to ‖ sharpen the goads.

V. 10—12. When Samuel came, Saul went out to "salute" or bless him, as one well satisfied with what he had done. (Notes, 15:13,14. Ps. 36:2.) But when he perceived by Samuel's pointed question, that he disapproved of his conduct, (Marg. Ref. q. Notes, Gen. 3:9—13. 4:10—12.) he attempted to excuse himself by the plea of necessity; and stated that being in such circumstances of extreme peril and distress, he had, with much reluctance proceeded to offer sacrifice, lest the Philistines should attack him before he had performed his devotions.—He might, however, without blame and with great propriety, have poured out his prayers to God, and thus have waited for Samuel.

V. 13—15. This commandment of the Lord by Samuel, was probably intended as a test of Saul's disposition: and his transgression proved, that he did not regard the word of God, when it greatly interfered with his own inclinations or sentiments; by which it appeared that he was unfit to rule as the vicegerent of the Lord over his people. He was "weighed in this balance, and found wanting." Had he behaved properly, the kingdom would have been permanently confirmed in his family; and it is probable that Samuel came to Gilgal, expecting to make this settlement of the kingdom by divine authority: but now, Saul was sentenced to be removed, to make way for one of a more obedient disposition. This the omniscient God foresaw: but his secret purpose was not the motive of Saul's conduct; which to the Searcher of hearts doubtless appeared much more aggravated than it does to us. (Notes, Gen. 2:16,17. 3:6.)—Samuel on this occasion departed from Saul; yet, as he went to Gibeah of Saul and not to Ramah, and as he came to him afterwards, (15:1,13,34,35.) it is conjectured that the sentence was not irreversible; but that, if Saul had repented of this sin, and been more obedient in future, he might notwithstanding have been continued in the kingdom.—When no more than six hundred men remained with Saul, and even these "followed him trembling," he must have been greatly affected with the alteration which had taken place, since he was followed by three hundred thousand men of Israel, and thirty thousand of Judah, in warring against Nahash. (Note, 11:6—11.)—A man after his own heart. (14) Marg. Ref. z.

V. 17, 18. (Marg. Ref.) These invaders and plunderers, going in three different directions, would exceedingly harass and distress all the towns and villages of Israel, now left open to their incursions, without the least defence; so that the miseries, which the people endured, must have been much greater than at first glance it may appear.

V. 19—21. During all the forty years' oppression by the Philistines, they seem to have used the policy of forbidding the Israelites to practise the trade of smiths; (Note, Judg. 5:8.) as the Chaldeans afterwards carried the smiths captive out of the land. (2 Kings 24:14. Jer. 24:1.) And after the termination of that entire slavery, the Israelites did not readily re-assume the trade; but, as the Philistines had garrisons in many parts of the land, they were accustomed to go to the smiths resident in them, for such work as needed to be done: and these would doubtless exact an exorbitant price for their labor, and also exert themselves in preventing the Israelites from learning or practising their trade. Thus the Philistines had artfully obtained a most important advantage: and, it is probable, they had been more assiduous than common, while they expected that Saul would make war on them; so that at the important

CHAP. XIV.

Jonathan, attended only by his armor-bearer, smites the garrison of the Philistines, 1—14; who are seized with terror, and destroy one another, 15, 16. Saul, seeing the tumult, inquires of God: but without waiting for an answer, he assaults the Philistines; being joined by the Hebrews who had deserted or hid themselves, 17—23. His rash curse, against such as ate that day, hinders the completion of the victory; and Jonathan, not knowing what had passed, violates it, 24—30. The people fly upon the spoil, and are hardly restrained from eating with the blood, 31—34. Saul builds an altar; and asks counsel of God, but is not answered, 35—37. Jonathan, taken by lot and sentenced to die, is rescued by the people, 38—46. Saul's victories and family, 47—52.

NOW * it came to pass upon a day, that [a] Jonathan the son of Saul said unto the young man that bare his armor, Come, and let us go over to the Philistines' garrison that is on the other side: but [b] he told not his father.

crisis, the Israelites were almost destitute of armor.—The impolicy of Saul, and the abject spirit of the people, were thus manifested: but the Lord over-ruled it, to shew the greatness of his power in the deliverance and victory of his people, when thus circumstanced.—Many parts of the land were too distant from Philistia for the Israelites to go thither on every occasion, and the Philistines had garrisons in the land: so that the interpretation above given is most natural, as well as generally adopted.

V. 22. The Israelites used bows, slings, and javelins in war, and with these it is probable the people were armed. Perhaps the Philistines had seized the armor which they had used against Nahash, after they were dispersed: (Notes, 11:6—11.) and it is probable, that many who had armor had deserted. However, it was so ordered in providence, that none in the remaining little company, except Saul and Jonathan, had either sword or spear.—Thus the Israelites, who expected to look formidable under kingly government, were made to appear very contemptible: (Notes, 8:1—5.) not that the Lord had forsaken his people; but because he would humble them, and shew them, that the victory did not depend upon swords and spears, but upon the favor and assistance of the Almighty. (Notes, 14:1—15. Judg. 7:2—22.)

V. 23. It is supposed, that between Michmash and Gibeah, each situated on a hill, there was a valley, called "the passage of Michmash;" into which the garrison of the Philistines "went out," either to challenge the Israelites to battle, or in order to make an assault upon Gibeah. (15,16. 14:4,5.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Our sanguine expectations from creatures are sure to end in disappointment; and when we resolve to choose for ourselves, we shall certainly have cause to repent of our choice: indeed, when men are lifted up in self-sufficiency, they are often left to the most unaccountable infatuation.—The chief advantages of the enemies of the church are derived from the misconduct of its professed friends: for when these act inconsistently with justice and fidelity, religious people, without discrimination, are looked upon with abhorrence and contempt. Yet, while sinners are meditating revenge, the Lord often restrains their malice by invisible hindrances, and uses their machinations for the chastisement of his people.—Deep resentment and great power united, occasion much consternation; and men thus terrified, flee or hide themselves from their fellow-creatures, and for a time, and on some occasions, with success. How then will the terror of the Almighty appal the wicked, in the approaching day of his inevitable and intolerable wrath, when no way of concealment or escape will remain for them! (Notes, Rev. 6: 15—17.)—Those who in trouble are actuated by pride and impatience, involve themselves in still deeper guilt and misery, by their foolish expedients to extricate themselves.—Our observance of the Lord's directions, will always be proportioned to our simplicity of dependence on his promises, and submission to his will: and those who are most dilatory in doing their duty, are commonly the most impatient of delay in waiting his time of deliverance.—Our disposition to obey or disobey will often be decisively proved by our behavior in apparently small things: (Note, Gen. 3:6.) and such as most neglect the duties of their own station, are most forward to censure the supposed negligence of others. Men destitute of inward piety, are frequently most scrupulously attached to the forms of godliness: nay, they fancy that the Lord will accept them, because they force themselves to act contrary to their own inclinations, or even to the dictates of their natural conscience!—We are commanded not to "speak evil of rulers;" yet those who are called to address them in the name of God, must point out very plainly the folly and evil of their conduct, and remind them of his anger against the workers of iniquity, without respect of persons: for though a prince may not in this life forfeit his throne or his dignity, by his offences against God; yet if he die impenitent, he will certainly lose his soul in the world to come. How empty then are those distinctions, from which so many are hurried into everlasting misery!—We have, by sin, forfeited felicity; but unbelief and impenitence ratify that forfeiture: and those who have undeniably broken the commandments of God, and yet persist in excusing and justifying themselves, are evidently both impenitent and unbelieving. The trouble of all such as continue in this spirit, must certainly increase; and, as they refuse to submit to God, they must be reduced to the most abject misery in the slavery of sin. But, while the Lord "pours contempt upon princes, and brings to nought all the honorable of the earth," he will deliver his people by his own power: and while he shames such as trust in man, and aspire to greatness and pre-eminence in outward things; he will honor those who humbly and in faith expect help from him alone.

NOTES.

CHAP. XIV. V. 1. No doubt, Jonathan in this critical state of affairs in Israel was excited, by an immediate divine impulse, to assault the formidable oppressors of his people: and by the same admonition he was kept from informing the soldiers; and even from consulting his

4 And between [g] the passages by which Jonathan sought to go over to the Philistines' garrison, there was a sharp rock on the one side, and a sharp rock on the other side: and the name of the one was Bozez, and the name of the other Seneh.

5 The * fore-front of the one was situate northward over against Michmash, and the other southward over against Gibeah.

6 And Jonathan said to the young man that bare his armor, Come, and let us go over unto the garrison of these [h] uncircumcised: [i] it may be that the LORD will work for us; [j] for there is no restraint to the LORD, to save by many or by few.

7 And his armor-bearer said unto him, [k] Do all that is in thine heart: turn thee; behold, I am with thee according to thy heart.

9 If [m] they say thus unto us, † Tarry until we come to you; then we will stand still in our place, and will not go up unto them.

10 But if they say thus, Come up unto us; then we will go up: for the LORD hath delivered them into our hand: and [n] this shall be a sign unto us.

11 And both of them discovered themselves unto the garrison of the Philistines: and the Philistines said, Behold, the Hebrews come forth [o] out of the holes, where they had hid themselves.

12 And the men of the garrison answered Jonathan and his armor-bearer, and said, [p] Come up to us, and we will shew you a thing. And Jonathan said unto his armor-bearer, [q] Come up after me, for the LORD hath delivered them into the hand of Israel.

13 And Jonathan [r] climbed up upon his hands and upon his feet, and his armor-bearer after him: and they [s] fell before Jonathan; and his armor-bearer slew after him.

father, who might have opposed his design. Indeed Saul's transgression excluded him from sharing the honor of that deliverance, which God intended to vouchsafe to his afflicted people. (Notes, 13:13—15,22.)

V. 2, 3. (13:15,16. Note, 22.) After Samuel had left Saul, it seems that the latter sent for Ahiah, or Ahimelech, the great grandson of Eli, the LORD's priest in Shiloh. Ahitub was the elder brother of I-chabod; (Note, 4:19—22.) and his son was at this time high priest, and so wore the ephod, and the breast-plate of judgment with Urim and Thummim. (Marg. Ref.—Notes, Ex. 28:30. Num. 27:21.) Saul therefore having him in the camp, with his priestly garments; and, as it is probable, having fetched the ark thither also (18); appeared to himself and to the people, to have abundant tokens of God's presence with him: and he could now inquire of the Lord, without being liable to Samuel's sharp reproofs; hoping perhaps, that Ahiah would be more compliant to his inclinations. (Notes, 22: 13—16.)—The fate of Eli's sons, and the total defeat of Israel, when presumptuous measures of the same kind were resorted to, should have convinced him that this confidence of the favor of God was foolish and delusory. (Notes, 4:3—11.)

V. 4, 5. (Marg. Ref.) The hand of God was very visible, in restraining the very numerous army of the Philistines from assaulting the small company of the Israelites; (13:5.) so that they generally kept themselves entrenched in a fortified camp, in an almost inaccessible situation, as still fearing their enfeebled enemies.

V. 6—10. The faith of Jonathan was doubtless in general very strong, and his armor-bearer was a man of the same spirit as himself: but the thought of thus attacking this immense army was doubtless suggested to Jonathan's mind immediately from God, and his faith and expectation increased in proportion. He was enabled, with reference to his own conduct, to view the almighty power of God, as sufficient for his safeguard in the midst of the Philistines; and also to save Israel by him and his armor-bearer, as well as by the most numerous and powerful army. (Deut. 32:30,31. Notes, Judg. 3:31. 15:14—17. Is. 30:15—17.)—Considering the Israelites as the covenant-people of God, who were oppressed by the uncircumcised Philistines, he expected that the Lord would appear for them in the same wonderful manner, as he had done for their fathers in former times. (Note, 17:25,26.) But, for fuller satisfaction in this matter, he and his armor-bearer agreed upon a token, according to which their proceedings were to be determined: if warned by the Philistines to wait till they were attacked, they would consider it as a divine monition, to act only upon the defensive; but if they called to them to come up, they would take it as a signal to climb the steep rock and attack them. (Notes, Gen. 24:11—14. Judg. 7:13—15.)—Such extraordinary attempts and triumphs of faith, directed by immediate divine monition, are recorded for our admiration, and our encouragement in more ordinary services; and not for our imitation

15 And [t] there was trembling in the host, in the field, and among all the people; the garrison, and [u] the spoilers, they also trembled; and [x] the earth quaked: so it was a † very great trembling.

16 ¶ And the watchmen of Saul in Gibeah of Benjamin looked: and behold the multitude [y] melted away, and they went on [z] beating down one another.

17 Then said Saul unto the people that were with him, Number now, and see who is gone from us. And when they had numbered, behold Jonathan and his armor-bearer were not there.

18 And Saul said unto Ahiah, [a] Bring hither the ark of God. For [b] the ark of God was at that time with the children of Israel.

19 And it came to pass, while Saul talked unto the priest, that the ‡ noise that was in the host of the Philistines went on and increased; and Saul said unto the priest, [c] Withdraw thine hand.

20 And Saul and all the people that were with him ‡ assembled themselves, and they came to the battle: and behold [d] every man's sword was against his fellow, and there was a very great discomfiture.

V. 11—15. It is probable, that Jonathan and his armor-bearer left the camp of Saul, unobserved, during the night (3); and that early in the morning, they placed themselves in the view of the Philistines, who in contempt challenged them to "come up, and they would shew them a thing," meaning that they would cause them to repent of their audacity. This being the expected token from God, Jonathan assured his armor-bearer, that the Lord would deliver the Philistines by their means into the hands of Israel. Thus they both, without hesitation, climbed up the rock into the enemy's camp, apparently rushing into the jaws of destruction. 'Not in the view of the Philistines, but by some 'difficult way, which none was ever known to go. 'And so perhaps they came behind them and sur-'prised them.' Bp. Patrick. This might be the case; but the sacred historian does not mention it. However, by the immediate interposition of God, the Philistines were so confounded at the daring assault, that they fell down before Jonathan, and were killed by his armor-bearer; till twenty were slain in a small space, as it seems, without attempting either to fight or to flee. Upon which the whole army was seized with trembling and consternation; and an earthquake which took place at the same moment, increased their terror: so that it was "a trembling of God," (marg.) the whole being, not only very great, but altogether miraculous. In consequence of this terror, they supposed the Israelites to be in the midst of the camp, and began to kill one another in every part of it. The army being constituted, as it is supposed, of different nations; (20. Note, 13:5.) the confusion might excite mutual jealousies and suspicions, which proved the occasion of their common destruction. (Notes, Judg. 7:16—22. 1 Kings 20:14—21. 2 Chr. 14:9—15. 20:20—25.)

V. 16—22. This confusion in the camp of the Philistines being observed by the sentinels of Saul's army; and it being found on inquiry that none were absent from the camp of Israel, but Jonathan and his armor-bearer; the people were no doubt greatly astonished: and Saul prepared to consult the Lord, whether he ought to attack the Philistines or no. His impatient spirit, however, could no more wait for Ahiah's answer, than for Samuel's arrival: (Note, 13:8,9.) and perceiving the commotion still increasing, he hastily determined to march against the enemy; though he might justly have questioned, whether the Lord, who had begun the work without him, would accept of his assistance. At least there could be no need of such haste. (Note, 30:7—10.) It pleased the Lord indeed to employ Saul's army, as well as the deserters and fugitives, who joined in crushing the Philistines: (Note, Judg. 7:23—25.) yet Saul himself met with a very humiliating proof, that the divine interposition was not vouchsafed on his account. (Notes, 36—46.)—Probably the ark of the covenant was brought into the field on this occasion. Yet some think, that the coffer, or chest, in which the ephod and breast-plate were kept, is meant. (Notes, 4:4,5. 2 Sam. 11:10, 11.)

V. 23. The battle passed, &c.] 'The fight 'continued till they came to this place, which 'lay westward from Michmash;' (and nearer to Philistia;) 'and there the Philistines threw down 'their arms, and fled as fast as they could 'towards their own country.' Bp. Patrick.—Thus the Israelites would at once be supplied with arms in abundance. (Note, 13:22.)

V. 24—34. "The people were distressed," when they should have been full of joy and triumph. The absolute prohibition of all food to the soldiers, for the whole day, was very impolitic; though Saul might properly have cautioned them not to waste their time about food, on penalty of his displeasure. But to accompany this prohibition with that awful curse, by which the enemies of God were devoted to utter destruction, was profane and rash in the extreme, (Marg. Ref. i. Note, *Lev.*27:28,29.) and it was the more inexcusable, in that he did not say, 'that the LORD may avenge Israel on his ene-'mies.' but "that I may be avenged on mine enemies."—The people, fearing the curse, abstained, not only from the spoil of the Philistines, but likewise from the honey which was abundantly laid in their way, and with which they might have refreshed themselves without loss of time, and thus have been enabled to make a much greater slaughter of the Philistines: and in the evening, being almost fainting with labor and hunger, some were induced hastily to kill the cattle which they had taken, and to eat the flesh with the blood, directly contrary to the law; until they were restrained by Saul's authority. As Saul's precaution could do nothing to prevent the people eating the flesh raw, or only half roasted, as some explain it; "eating with the blood," must refer to the manner of slaughtering the cattle, without properly separating the blood. (Marg. Ref. u.) In the mean while, Jonathan, being ignorant of the curse, and almost ready to faint with fatigue, had eaten a little honey, by which he was sensibly and visibly revived; so that his eyes, which had been dim and languishing, were enlightened and looked lively. He however, thus found himself caught in a snare, and exposed to the most imminen danger of being put to death. He had therefore reason to complain, that his "father had troubled the land," (Notes, 1 Kings 18:17—20.) as his conduct in every way obstructed the complete success of Israel.

V. 35. It is probable that Saul converted the great stone, on which the cattle had been slaughtered, into an altar on which sacrifices were offered, before the people attempted to not a man among all the people that answered him.

40 Then said he unto all Israel, Be ye on one side, and I and Jonathan my son will be on the other side. And the people said unto Saul, [e] Do what seemeth good unto thee.

41 Therefore Saul said unto the LORD God of Israel, * Give a perfect lot. [f] And Saul and Jonathan were taken: but the people † escaped.

42 And Saul said, Cast lots between me and Jonathan my son. And Jonathan was taken.

43 Then Saul said to Jonathan, [g] Tell me what thou hast done. And Jonathan told him, and said, [h] I did but taste a little honey with the end of the rod that was in mine hand, and, lo, I must die.

44 And Saul answered, [i] God do so, and more also: for [k] thou shalt surely die, Jonathan.

45 And the people said unto Saul, Shall Jonathan die, [l] who hath wrought this great salvation in Israel? God forbid: as the LORD liveth, [m] there shall not one hair of his head fall to the ground; for [n] he hath wrought with God this day. So the people rescued Jonathan, that he died not.

46 Then Saul went up from following the Philistines: and the Philistines went to their own place.

V. 36—44. When the people had refreshed themselves, Saul proposed to them to pursue the army of the Philistines, in order to destroy it entirely; to which they readily consented. But Ahiah, having been before interrupted by Saul's impatience, very properly counselled them to inquire of the Lord; and when no answer was returned, Saul justly concluded that the Lord was offended, and desired to discover the cause. (Marg. Ref. x—b.) But, if he had been humbly sensible of the evil of his own past conduct, he would have concluded himself to be the culprit. (Notes, 28:6. Ez. 14:1—5. 20:1—3.) The Lord, however, was pleased, that the conduct of Jonathan, who had unwarily exposed himself to the curse denounced by his father, should be discovered, as the cause why he did not answer the high priest's inquiries: that the people might understand how much they were interested in the conduct of their king; and be convinced of their folly in rejecting the government of a pious prophet whose prayers brought down blessings, for that of a king whose curses brought down wrath upon them. (Notes, 7: 8:) In the same rash and profane spirit as in the former instance, Saul, before the lots were cast, sware by the Lord, that even if Jonathan were the offender, he should surely die; without knowing whether the crime committed deserved death, or whether it might not be expiated by a sin-offering. And after the lots had been cast, (with prayer, as probably was the constant practice,) and Jonathan was taken; Saul with affected sternness, without any humiliation for his own sin in thus rashly troubling Israel; as one who appeared zealous for the glory of God, and the obligation of an oath, while in reality tenacious of his own will and authority; and with execrations on himself, proceeded to denounce the sentence of death upon his own pious son! (Notes, 15:15. Gen. 38:24—26. 2 Sam. 12:26—31.)

Give a perfect lot. (41) "Shew the innocent." (Marg.)

V. 45, 46. The people judged rightly, that the guilt was contracted by Saul, and that the rebuke was intended for him, and not for Jonathan; and therefore they rescued him, by whom God had given them this extraordinary deliverance, from the hands of his severe father. Saul could not but desire the life of his son: yet considering him as decidedly preferred before himself, both by the Lord and by Israel; knowing that Jonathan's deliverance was a severe reproof of his rashness; and perhaps apprehending, as he had abundant cause to do, that his repeated curses would light on his own head; he returned home apparently dissatisfied and displeased. (Notes, 1 Kings 20:38—43.) Thus the opportunity of completing the destruction of the Philistines was lost: nor could it be expected, that an expedition, which was begun and conducted so very ill, should terminate without some evident tokens of the divine displeasure against Saul; though the Lord's love to Israel was displayed in an unparalleled manner, by means of the faith and courage of his pious son Jonathan.—Through Saul's misconduct, and as if in answer to his imprecations,

Jonathan was excluded from the kingdom, and slain with him by the Philistines, when "the LORD did unto him," as he intended to do to his son, "and more also;" having indeed devoted him to utter destruction. (44. Notes, 31:2—6.)

V. 47—52. After the decided victory gained over the Philistines, Saul's authority as king of Israel was re-established: and though the Lord was displeased with him, and purposed to set aside his family; yet he prospered him in the wars which he carried on against the several nations which oppressed Israel.—It is evident that many important transactions of his reign are passed over in silence; and that in general it was more active and successful, (in the former part of it especially,) than it appears at first sight to have been. But, to the end of his life, Saul was unable to prevail against the Philistines, having missed the opportunity which God had afforded him: so that, after having had sore war with him all his days, the three sons here mentioned fell at last by their hands, and he was driven to murder himself. PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.
V. 1—23.

The same principle, as induces men to seek relief from the accusations of conscience, by abounding in the externals of religion, will lead them to seek refuge from the warnings and reproofs of faithful ministers, by paying court to others, who, either out of mistake, timidity, or unfaithfulness, give them less disturbance in sin: but God will shew a marked disapprobation of such attendance on his own ordinances, or profession of his truths, as is intended to quiet the conscience, or support the credit, of sinners, who persist in disobeying the plain precepts of his holy word.—Hypocrites often detect their indifference, even about the religion which they professedly choose; for as it has no practical energy upon them, a small matter induces them to dispense with the useless form.—No warnings nor examples are sufficient to convince men of the folly and danger of trusting in the forms of godliness, while they neglect the power of it; but from age to age multitudes proceed in the same destructive path. (Note, 2 Tim. 3:1—5.) Yet, blessed be God, every age also produces illustrious instances of those, who being strong in faith give glory to God; and its triumphs are proportioned to its strength.—While we are obeying the commands of God, trusting his protection, and seeking his glory, neither the sense of our own weakness, nor the power of our enemies should dismay us; "for there is no restraint to the LORD to save by many or by few." We are not indeed warranted at present to expect miraculous interpositions: yet the feeblest instrument, who sincerely and in faith uses the appointed means, in order to subvert Satan's kingdom of ignorance, error, and wickedness, is authorized to expect considerable success; for "it may be that the LORD will work with him:" and then the weapons of his warfare will prove mighty, and no force of the enemies of our God and his Christ can stand before him. (Notes, 1 Cor. 1:20—25. 2 Cor. 4:7. 10:1—6.) At his frown the mightiest armies melt away, or prove instruments of each other's destruction: what then will be the consternation and horror, when the whole world shall be assembled before his tribunal, and "the wicked shall be cast into hell, and all the nations that forget God!"

V. 24—52.

In the midst of the most glorious success, "one sinner" often "destroyeth much good:" and rash zeal is as hurtful as timid inaction. It indeed becomes an Israelite to be superior to the cravings of his appetites: but there is neither prudence nor piety in restraining men from partaking of the bounty of Providence, when placed honestly within their reach; and when it is so used as to prepare them for his service, and encourage rather than hinder them in it. They are indeed "troublers of Israel," who prohibit such use of those good things which "God giveth us richly to enjoy:" the curses, with which they sanction their antichristian mandates, will fall on their own heads; and they will be answerable for all the consequences: for restraints from things lawful generally prove temptations to forbidden indulgences, and a superstitious zeal about externals has often hindered men from performing essential services to the church. (Note, 1 Tim. 4:1—5.)—When rulers, by authority, would withhold men from transgression, while they set them an example of disobedience to God, they cannot reasonably expect success.—We are too much in haste in our most important employments, if we do not allow ourselves time to consult the Lord and seek his blessing; and ministers should plainly remind those, who are running into this common mistake.—When our prayers are not answered, we may safely conclude that iniquity withholds good from us, and we should make diligent search for it: but we should always first suspect and examine ourselves; whereas an unhumbled heart suspects every other person, and looks every where but to himself, for the sinful cause of calamity!—Those who are indulgent to their own sins, are generally severe in animadverting on the faults of others: and such as most disregard God's authority, are most impatient when their own commands appear to be slighted, or their reputation eclipsed; and, by severity against minute deviations, real or supposed, they frequently endeavor to varnish over their own enormous transgressions.—Those who delight in cursing, are in extreme danger of falling under the awful curse of God: (Note, Ps. 109:6—20.) and the habit of swearing will certainly involve a man in the guilt of perjury, as well as of profaneness; for though now concealed, his iniquity will be "sure to find him out."—No oath can bind us to commit injustice: but the rash swearer should repent of his iniquity, and not add one crime to another; and all men should join to rescue the innocent from punishment.—In this world, if they who have "wrought with God," and have been remarkably useful to his people, es cape persecution and death as their recompense; they are more favored than those who have gone before them; and need not expect much advantage to themselves from their usefulness, till they get to heaven.—In the midst of mercy the Lord will rebuke his people for their sins; and by mismanagement men lose the comfort of their successes, and are discontented, and filled with vexation, in the midst of blessings.—But the Lord employs even wicked men as instruments of providential good to his people: in temporal prosperity they forget their sins and the threatened wrath of God: and thus they blaze for a moment, like a meteor, and then are put out in utter darkness. O Lord, let us rather be chastened here, than thus prosper and be condemned with the world!

NOTES.

CHAP. XV. V. 1—3. It is probable, that for some years Saul scarcely took any notice of Samuel, in his wars and successes; perhaps resenting the sharp rebuke which he had before given him: and Samuel did not intrude himself. But now, he was sent to Saul with an express command, to go and utterly destroy the Amalekites. (14:48.) In delivering his message the prophet reminded him, that he had been commissioned by the Lord to anoint him king, and that now he spake by the same authority: he seemed also to intimate, that unless Saul "hearkened to the voice of the words of the LORD," he should be authorized to denounce the sentence of rejection against him; and he gave him his instructions in the most explicit and particular manner. The Amalekites had long before been condemned; (Notes, Ex. 17:8—16. Deut. 25:17—19.) but the nation had been spared, till it had filled up the measure of its iniquities.—The righteous Lord certainly did no injustice to individuals; and the example was of a salutary tendency, to deter others in future ages from "meddling to their hurt" with the servants of the living God. (Marg. Ref.—Notes, Num. 31:2. Josh. 6:21.)

V. 4. The large army, which was collected when Samuel directed the enterprise, shews that the people had much more confidence in their rejected prophet, than in the king whom they had so inordinately desired. (13:5—15.) The disproportionate number of Judah, might perhaps be the effect of their dissatisfaction with a king of another tribe.—The armies of Israel at that time had no cavalry.

V. 6. Marg. Ref.—Notes, Num. 10:29—32. Judg. 1:16. 4:11.

V. 7. The region occupied by the Amalekites, lay between Havilah on the north-east, and Shur on the south-west: and Saul carried his victorious arms through the whole extent of this district. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 8, 9. The Lord had devoted all the Amalekites, together with their substance, to utter destruction, as a solemn sacrifice to his justice: and the commandment given to Saul, concerning the execution of this sentence, was express and particular (3); and probably intended as a test of his disposition to obey or disobey God. (Notes, 13:13—15. Deut. 7:25,26. Josh. 6:17—19. 7:1,10—26.)—But, while neither he nor his soldiers were induced to mitigate the severity of the injunction, by sparing any of the women or children; he, perhaps in complaisance to royalty, or to grace his victory, spared the king of Amalek; (Notes, 1 Kings 20:28—43.) and the people, doubtless by his concurrence, covetously reserved the best of the cattle and substance, destroy-from following me, and [x] hath not performed my commandments. And [y] it grieved Samuel; and [z] he cried unto the LORD all night.

12 And when Samuel rose early to meet Saul in the morning, it was told Samuel, saying, Saul came to [a] Carmel, and, behold, [b] he set him up a place, and is gone about, and passed on, and gone down to Gilgal.

13 And Samuel came to Saul; and Saul said unto him, [c] Blessed be thou of the Lord: [d] I have performed the commandment of the LORD.

14 And Samuel said, [e] What meaneth then this bleating of the sheep in mine ears, and the lowing of the oxen which I hear?

15 And Saul said, They have brought them from the Amalekites: [f] for the people spared the best of the sheep and of the oxen, [g] to sacrifice unto the LORD thy God; and the rest we have utterly destroyed.

16 Then Samuel said unto Saul, [h] Stay, and I will tell thee what the LORD hath said to me this night. And he said unto him, Say on.

17 And Samuel said, [i] When thou wast little in thine own sight, wast thou not made the head of the tribes of Israel, and [j] the LORD anointed thee king over Israel?

18 And the LORD sent thee on a journey, and said, Go, and utterly destroy [k] the sinners the Amalekites, and fight against them until * they be consumed.

19 Wherefore then didst thou not obey the voice of the LORD, but didst [l] fly upon the spoil, and [m] didst evil in the sight of the LORD?

20 And Saul said unto Samuel, [n] Yea, I have obeyed the voice of the LORD, and have gone the way which the LORD sent me, and [o] have brought Agag the king of Amalek, and have utterly destroyed the Amalekites.

21 But [p] the people took of the spoil, sheep and oxen, the chief of the things which should have been utterly destroyed, to sacrifice unto the LORD thy God in Gilgal. [Practical Observations.]

22 And Samuel said, [q] Hath the LORD as great delight in burnt-offerings and sacrifices, as in obeying the voice of the LORD? Behold, to [r] obey is better than sacrifice; and to hearken, than the fat of rams.

ing only the refuse which was of little value. Saul's conduct was evidently the effect of a proud rebellious spirit.—Many Amalekites escaped at this time, probably without his fault; and we read of them afterwards as a numerous people. (Notes, 27:8—12. 30:1—3.)

V. 11. (Note, Gen. 6:6,7.) The Lord's change of conduct towards Saul was similar to that change in our conduct, which springs from repentance; though by means of all he accomplished his own wise and righteous purposes.—Samuel had been soon reconciled to the people's rejection of him and his family, and had cheerfully anointed Saul: (Notes, 8:—10:) and from his first actions he had framed a favorable opinion of him. When he therefore was rejected, Samuel was exceedingly grieved; and he interceded all night for the reversal of the sentence. (Notes, Jer. 13:15—17. 18:19,20. Luke 19:41—44. Rom. 9:1—3.)

V. 12. Set him up a place.] Probably this was a trophy, or monument of the victory. The whole implies, that Saul took great state upon himself, and was not a little elated with his success. (Note, 2 Sam. 18:17,18.)

V. 13, 14. Perhaps Saul was in some degree conscious of having done wrong; and he therefore addressed Samuel in this respectful language, in order to conciliate his good will, and to ward off the rebuke which he feared. Some however think he was so insensible of having committed any fault, that he was disposed to boast of his obedience, and expected to be congratulated and commended by the prophet. But Samuel's answer shewed him at once that the very herds and flocks, which were driven along with him, fully convicted him of inexcusable disobedience. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 15. It is not probable, that either Saul or the people had fully purposed to sacrifice all the cattle which they had reserved: but even in that case, they opposed their own will and wisdom to the express command of God; and no doubt they intended to save their own cattle by means of them.—Saul took the merit of his obedience to himself; but he threw the blame of the disobedience on the people. Yet had he exerted his authority, with as much decision, in support of God's command, as he had done before in enforcing his own prohibition; and had he been as determined in the execution of Agag, as he was disposed to be in putting his son to death; it is not likely that any opposition would have been made to his orders. (Note, 14:36—44.)

be essential to true religion under every dispensation: but there is a great difference between the submission of a holy, and that of a sinful creature. External obedience, even to moral precepts, is good in the sight of God, only when it springs from a willing submission of the soul to the divine authority. To profess a belief of the gospel is good, only when it arises from submission to the divine teaching, to the justice of the condemnation under which sinners are concluded, and to the wisdom, suitableness, and grace of the method of salvation there revealed. All instituted worship derives its obligation from the express appointment of God, from the honor which it renders to his name, from the disposition of the worshipper, and from the grace and spiritual blessings which are communicated by it. Sacrifices especially declared the desert of the offender, and typified the sufferings of the Savior: their value resulted entirely from the appointment of God; and they were not acceptable, except offered in obedience to him, and with a penitent, believing, and pious mind. (Note, Jer. 7:21—23.) When therefore they were substituted in the place of true piety, or trusted in as meritorious; when the means were used to compensate for the neglect of the end, and the sign was exalted into the place of the thing signified; they became an abomination, however costly and numerous they were.—Had Saul offered thousands of bullocks and rams, not of the spoils of Amalek, but from his own herds and flocks, exactly according to the divine ritual, in an impenitent and self-confident disposition, God would have abhorred them: how much more then, when the animals to be sacrificed were spared, in direct disobedience to his express command!—Samuel did not therefore mean to exalt one part of external religion by depreciating another, as many seem to suppose; but to shew that a right state of the heart is essential to the acceptable performance of every service. (Marg. Ref.—Notes, Ps. 50:7—15. Prov. 15:8,9. Is. 1:10—15. Am. 5:21—24.)

V. 23. The heinousness of any sin is not to be judged of, by the magnitude of the object about which it is committed, or the grossness of the outward action; but from the deliberate and determined disobedience of the will, whence it takes. (Note, Gen. 3:6.) When the Lord expressly says, 'Thou shalt;' and his rational creature dares to persist in saying, 'I will not;' whether the contest be about an apple or a kingdom, it is stubbornness and rebellion, a contempt of the commandment of God, and a daring insult to his majesty and authority; and has in it all the essential malignity, which constitutes idolatry or witchcraft, or crimes punishable by death according to the divine law. Therefore Saul for this rebellion was condemned to lose his kingdom. (Note, 13:13—15.)

Witchcraft.] Probably Saul had before this shewn much zeal against those who practised witchcraft; (Note, 28:3.) and this circumstance would add poignancy to Samuel's reproof.

V. 24, 25. Saul could no longer deny his offence, or entirely excuse it; and therefore he confessed it, yet in such a manner as detected an unhumbled heart. He persisted in transferring the blame to the people; "for he feared them, and obeyed their voice:" yet he was not so timid, or obedient to them, when his own interest or authority were concerned. (Notes, Ex. 32:21—24. Matt. 14:8—11.) He seems to have been more disquieted because Samuel was offended, than because the Lord was angry with him: and he entreated Samuel to pardon his sin, as if he had possessed authority to reverse the sentence which God had denounced. (23. Note, Ex. 10:16,17.)

V. 26 -28. (Marg. Ref. Note, 28:12—19.) It does not appear that Saul had any real attachment to Samuel; but he doubtless respected his character: and, aware of his influence with the people, he perhaps feared, lest departing in displeasure, and anointing another king, he should stir up the people to revolt, and thus immediately execute the sentence against him. He therefore earnestly opposed his departure; and, by rending Samuel's mantle, afforded a significant token of the kingdom being rent from him, and given to a more worthy person. (Notes, 1 Kings 11:9—13,29—31.)

V. 29. The Strength of Israel.] Or, "The victory of Israel." (Marg.) Saul took the honor of the victory and of Israel's protection to himself, and raised a trophy of it (12): but Samuel seems to have indirectly rebuked his vanity, and reminded him that the eternal God, was indeed "Israel's Strength and Victory."—"The LORD repented of having set up Saul to be king;" (Note, 31 So Samuel turned again after Saul, and Saul worshipped the LORD.

32 ¶ Then said Samuel, Bring ye hither to me Agag, the king of the Amalekites: and Agag came unto him delicately. And [k] Agag said, Surely the bitterness of death is past.

33 And Samuel said, [l] As thy sword hath made women childless, so shall thy mother be childless among women. And Samuel [m] hewed Agag in pieces before the LORD in Gilgal.

34 Then Samuel went to Ramah; and Saul went up to his house to [n] Gibeah of Saul.

35 And [o] Samuel came no more to see Saul until the day of his death; nevertheless, [p] Samuel mourned for Saul: and the LORD [q] repented that he had made Saul king over Israel.

11.) for not having confirmed his promise of the kingdom to him by an oath, an opening was left for the change of measures intended by this expression. But Saul had now provoked him to pass sentence against him, and as with a solemn oath to declare that it was irreversible. In that case, God is never said to repent; nay, it is spoken of as an impossibility that he should. (Notes, Num. 14:27—30. Ps. 95:9—11. 110:4. Heb. 3: 14—19. 6:13—20. 7:20—22.)

V. 30, 31. When Saul ought to have publicly confessed his sin, and taken shame to himself; he was very solicitous, that Samuel should honor him before the elders and people, probably for fear of an insurrection. (Note, Ps. 51: title.) Perhaps he also thought that God would accept his worship, if Samuel was present, but not otherwise.—Samuel however, perhaps by divine direction, changed his mind and delayed his departure; that he might not occasion any disturbance among the people, and that he might execute the justice of God upon Agag. Thus he was present at Saul,s worship, but it does not appear that he took any part in it.

V. 32, 33. Agag affected the stateliness and dignity of a monarch even in his degraded and perilous circumstances, as if he would over-awe the aged prophet: and he spake, either as one who deemed himself in no danger of death, seeing he had escaped the sword of a conquering king, and could have nothing to fear from Samuel; or, as having got over the fear of death, and as determined to meet it with intrepidity. He was indeed the chief person who ought to have been slain, both as the head of the devoted nation, and for his own cruelties; and therefore "Samuel hewed him to pieces before the LORD," as a sacrifice to his justice. (Notes, Josh. 8:29. Judg. 8:18—21.) Thus the prophet, who was of a lenient spirit, and prayed all night for Saul, did not hesitate to execute that sentence of God upon this condemned criminal, which Saul, who afterwards proved himself exceedingly cruel, had not done.

V. 34, 35. From this time, Samuel withdrew entirely from Saul, as one rejected by God; and though Saul once came to him, (19:23,24.) he never went to Saul any more: yet he continued to mourn over him. (Notes, 11. 16:1,2.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.
V. 1—21.

Those who have not learned to obey God, are not well qualified to rule over others, especially over the Lord's people.—The righteous vengeance of God may be long delayed; but it will certainly be executed, according to his most tremendous threatenings, upon all impenitent sinners; yet with the most marked severity upon the ringleaders in persecution, and on such as endeavor to hinder those who are setting out in the ways of piety.—When he calls us to our work, and his time is come, he will provide us helpers and give us success; but he will at the same time make trial of our spirits. We must not avenge ourselves without express command; but we may at any time requite the kindness of our benefactors: and those who do good to the worshippers and servants of God for his sake, treasure up blessings for their posterity.—It is dangerous to live among wicked people; and if we would not perish with them, we must keep separate from them, as far as consists with our various duties.—The pride of man's heart can admit the blasphemous idea of being more merciful than God, and of censuring the threatened punishment of sinners as too severe! while covetousness deems the "vile and refuse" good enough to be spent wholly in religion; (Note, Mal. 1:12—14.) and hypocrisy is detected by partiality in obedience, and paying more honor to wicked great men, than to the command of God.—Many go far in the external appearance of religion, who turn back from following the Lord, and are given up to be hardened, and to perish. Over such persons faithful ministers are often constrained to grieve. They must and will, however, deliver the message of God to them, though their hearts be pained by so doing: and if sinners knew their secret sorrow, and fervent and multiplied prayers for them, and considered that they speak no more than God has required them to say, they could hardly so much resent their most faithful reproofs.—When men are solicitous to publish and perpetuate the memory of their religious services, they shew that they only sought human applause; and "verily they have their reward:" (Notes, Matt. 6:1—4. 23:5—7.) and when they boast of their obedience, and by fair speeches would extort commendation from the servants of God, we may be sure their conduct will not endure a strict scrutiny.—Many observable circumstances betray the hypocrisy of some confident professors of godliness. If indeed you are true disciples of Christ; what mean these evil tempers, this covetousness, this luxury and pride of life, this conformity to the world, this contempt and neglect of the poor? Was this the mind and life of Christ? Is this the scriptural character of a Christian? "The bleating of the sheep, and the lowing of the oxen," did not more fully detect Saul's disobedience, than things of this kind do the hypocrisy of numbers, who seem to be religious. But, by self-examination and circumspection, men should render it unnecessary for ministers to press home upon their consciences such convincing questions. The unhumbled heart, however, will never be at a loss to excuse or palliate the most evident criminality; and it will always be necessary for preachers to drive sinners from their subterfuges, to shew them the malignity and aggravation of their offences, to silence their objections and excuses, and to urge conviction upon their hearts: though the convincing Spirit of God alone can render the means effectual. (Note, John 16:8—11.)

God sends Samuel to Beth-lehem, to anoint a king out of Jesse's sons, and directs him to conceal his business by a sacrifice, 1—5. Seven of Jesse's sons pass by, and are not approved, 6—10. David is called from the flock, and anointed, 11—13. An evil spirit troubles Saul; who, counselled by his servants, sends for David, and is relieved by his music, 14—23.

V. 22—35.

In exercising the sacred ministry, nothing is of more importance, than an accurate knowledge of the relative and comparative value of the truths, precepts, and ordinances of religion; about which hypocrites greatly mistake, and thus impose upon themselves. An obedient heart is essential to all religion: and, in a sinner, implies a ready obedience to the command given to all men to repent, an obedient reliance on the Savior's merits; an obedient attendance on all instituted ordinances as means of grace; and a cheerful obedience to the commands of Christ, from love to his name, and a desire to adorn his gospel. The expression of this temper even in the most minute concerns, and with much infirmity and many mistakes, is accepted by a merciful God: but a proud, stubborn, rebellious will renders the most splendid services, and the most specious profession, abominable in his sight, and ranks them with the most atrocious crimes.—The impenitent sinner may be detected even in his confessions and the behavior which accompanies them. He has always some reserve; he throws the blame off from himself; he shews an anxiety about the esteem of man, and a fear of temporal loss, shame, and suffering, more than of the future wrath of an offended God; and he attempts to quiet his conscience with external forms and a partial reformation. In vain do such men endeavor to prevail with the faithful ministers of Christ to countenance them. The more they attempt it, the more awful warnings will they receive of approaching ruin: and when the servants of God despair of doing them good, they will withdraw, and leave them to themselves, whatever be their rank in life, that they may interpret their silence and absence into a constant reproof.—The fear of men is no excuse for disobeying God; and moreover it is often a mere pretence; for many will plead it for neglecting self-denying duties, who dread no man's displeasure in gratifying their own passions!—When the sentence of final rejection is irreversibly denounced, repentance will be unavailing: and though our God is now ready to forgive, he will neither repent nor change his purposes of vengeance hereafter; for the "Strength of Israel" will be eternally engaged to punish his stoutest and proudest foes.—If those who were regarded when little in their own eyes, are elated by prosperity and forget the Lord, he will contemn them: and when one instrument is rejected, another more suitable shall be sought out.—The mighty of the earth are so accustomed to flattery and distinction, that they can scarcely suppose any will dare to withhold it from them: but "with God there is no respect of persons;" and, while he requires his servants to honor those who are in authority, he teaches them to be of his judgment concerning comparative excellency. Neither dignity, nor delicacy, nor vain confidence, gives sinners any security: "the bitterness of death" may meet them when and where they least expect it; but the bitterness of future misery is the most to be feared.—Our warfare indeed is of a different nature from Saul's: but if we spare one domineering lust, or profitable iniquity, we shall forfeit the promised kingdom with deep disgrace; as our sincerity must be approved by devoting every sin to utter destruction, by the power of God's grace, and for the glory of his name. For this, in all ages and nations, is the line of distinction between Samuel and Saul, between the Christian and the hypocrite; that the one levels his whole force against Agag, against that sinful propensity, which, by constitution and custom, has the greatest ascendency, that he may hew it in pieces before the Lord; while the other is anxious to preserve his master-sin, however willing he may appear to mortify or refrain from those sins, to which he has been less addicted, and to which he feels less temptation.

NOTES.

CHAP. XVI. V. 1—3. It is probable, that the events recorded in this chapter happened some time after those before related; yet Samuel still continued to mourn for Saul: but at length God expostulated with him, and ordered him to go and anoint one to succeed Saul.—It may be supposed, that in the mean while Saul had become very suspicious and tyrannical, and enraged against Samuel. The question therefore, which he proposed, might not result from unbelief, but from a desire of instruction, for the prudent management of the affair. (Notes, Judg. 13:8. Luke 1:34—38.) Accordingly, he was directed to go to Beth-lehem to sacrifice, as he probably did from time to time in many different places: (Notes, 7 9,17. 9:12—14.) and the answer, which he was instructed to return, was the truth; nor was he bound to divulge all his intentions. (Note, Jer. 38:24—28.)

V. 4. It is probable, that these elders were conscious of iniquity committed among them, and fice. And he sanctified Jesse and his sons and called them to the sacrifice.

6 And it came to pass when they were come, that he looked on [m] Eliab, and said, [n] Surely the LORD's anointed is before him.

7 But the LORD said unto Samuel, [o] Look not on his countenance, or on the height of his stature; because I have refused him: for the LORD [p] seeth not as man seeth; for man [q] looketh on the * outward appearance, but the LORD looketh [r] on the heart.

8 Then Jesse called [s] Abinadab, and made him pass before Samuel. And he said, Neither hath the LORD chosen this.

9 Then Jesse made [t] Shammah to pass by: and he said, Neither hath the LORD chosen this.

10 Again, Jesse made [u] seven of his sons to pass before Samuel. And Samuel said unto Jesse, The LORD hath not chosen these.

11 And Samuel said unto Jesse, Are here all thy children? And he said, [x] There remaineth yet the youngest, and, behold, he keepeth the sheep. And Samuel said unto Jesse, Send and fetch him: for we will not sit † down till he come hither.

12 And he sent and brought him in Now he was [y] ruddy, and withal ‡ of a beautiful countenance, and goodly to look to. And the LORD said, Arise, [z] anoint him: for this is he.

13 Then Samuel took the horn of oil and [a] anointed him in the midst of his brethren: and [b] the Spirit of the LORD came upon David from that day forward. So Samuel rose up, and went to Ramah.

14 ¶ But [c] the Spirit of the LORD departed from Saul, and [d] an evil spirit from the LORD ‡ troubled him.

15 And Saul's servants said unto him, Behold now, an evil spirit from God troubleth thee.

16 Let our lord now command thy servants, which are [e] before thee, to seek out a man who is a cunning player on an harp: and it shall come to pass, when the evil spirit from God is upon thee, that he shall [f] play with his hand, and thou shalt be well.

17 And Saul said unto his servants, Provide me now a man that can play well, and bring him to me.

18 Then answered one of the servants, and said, Behold, I have seen a son of Jesse the Beth-lehemite, that is cunning feared lest Samuel was sent to denounce the wrath of God upon them. (Marg. Ref. j. Note, Matt. 8:33,34.) Some however think that they feared the anger of Saul, in case they entertained Samuel. (Notes, 21:1,2. 22:13—19.)

V. 5. He sanctified, &c.] Samuel instructed Jesse and his sons in the nature of the sacred ordinance, and, by his counsels and prayers, assisted them in preparing to attend on it acceptably and profitably. (Notes, Ex. 19:10—15. Josh. 3:5. Job 1:5.)

V. 6, 7. Samuel had, it is probable, informed none except Jesse of his principal object in coming to Bethlehem; and he and Jesse alone were present, while the sons of Jesse, one after another, passed before them.—It is evident, that the Lord revealed himself to Samuel, on this and other occasions, by direct and immediate suggestion.—Samuel did not yet fully understand, that the Lord in anger gave Israel their first king, after 'their own heart;' but that he now intended in mercy to give them one after "his own heart," being chiefly remarkable for his strong faith and fervent piety. It is however wonderful, that the aged prophet should regard the height of Eliab's stature: when Saul who was "taller than all the people from his shoulders and upwards," had proved so worthless a king! (Notes, 9:1,2. 17:28.) The Lord seeth not, &c. (7) Marg. Ref. o, p, q.

V. 10, 11. Jesse's sons were seven in all. (Note, 1 Chr. 2:15.)—David being young, (not more than eighteen or twenty years of age,) and being of a contemplative disposition, was perhaps thought by Jesse to be less capable of public business than his other sons; and so was not kept at home on this occasion. (Marg. Ref.)—His name signifies Beloved, and he was an eminent type of the beloved Son of God. (Notes, Jer. 30:5—9. Ez. 34:23—31. 37:25. Hos. 3:4,5.)—These transactions seem to have occurred, between the offering of the sacrifice, and the feast on it which followed.

V. 12. Marg. Ref.

V. 13. The original words seem to denote, that David was anointed in the presence of his brethren, though the transaction was kept secret from others. If this were the case, it is worthy of notice, that none of them rivalled or opposed him; though it appears that they were not free from envy and prejudice.—Some expositors however think the words only imply, that David was selected from among his brethren; but that he was anointed privately.—This anointing did not invest him with kingly authority, but merely marked him out as Saul's successor: and thus David himself understood it.—From this time he was evidently endowed with the Spirit of the Lord, qualifying him for great things, and inspiring him with noble purposes: yet he was satisfied in his humble and laborious occupation, waiting the Lord's time for being called to action. (Notes, 10:10—16. 11:6—15.)

V. 14. When the Spirit of God came on David, it became evident that he had departed from Saul, and that he was deprived of his capacity in playing, and [g] a mighty valiant man, and a man of war, and prudent in * matters, and a comely person, and [h] the LORD is with him.

19 Wherefore Saul sent messengers unto Jesse, and said, Send me David thy son, which is [i] with the sheep.

20 And Jesse took [k] an ass laden with bread, and a bottle of wine, and a kid, and sent them by David his son unto Saul.

21 And David came to Saul, and [l] stood before him: and he [m] loved him greatly; and he became his armor-bearer.

22 And Saul sent to Jesse, saying, Let David, I pray thee, stand before me: for he hath found favor in my sight.

23 And it came to pass, when [n] the evil spirit from God was upon Saul, that David took an harp, and played with his hand: so [o] Saul was refreshed, and was well, and the evil spirit departed from him.

CHAP. XVII.

The armies of Israel and of the Philistines are drawn out to battle, 1—3. Goliath challenges, defies, and dismays the Israelites, 4—11. David is sent to the army to visit his brethren, 12—19. He hears the challenge of Goliath and expresses indignation at it, 20—27. Eliab rebukes him, and he answers mildly, 23—30. He is brought before Saul, accepts the challenge, and states the grounds of his confidence, 31—37. He refuses Saul's armor; and takes only his staff, a sling, and stones, 38—40. Goliath disdains and curses him, 41—44. David answers, expressing his assured confidence in God, 45—47. He kills Goliath and cuts off his head, 48—51. The Philistines are routed, 52, 53. David returns with Goliath's head in his hand; and answers Saul's inquiries concerning him, 54—58.

tor public business, and performed nothing prudently or successfully: nay, that an evil spirit was judicially permitted to impel him to the most furious sallies of rage or jealousy; to oppress his spirits with a deep melancholy; to excite distressing terrors, alarms and suspicions; and to render him at times distracted. (Marg. Ref. d.)

V. 15—23. Saul's courtiers evidently perceived the change which had taken place, and ascribed it to the right cause: though their language seems less accurate than that of the historian; the original words being, "an evil spirit of God," meaning one whom God permitted to trouble Saul.—The device proposed by them might be very proper for soothing the melancholy of Saul, and calming his passions: (Note, 2 Kings 3:15.) but the cause of his malady lay much deeper; and it would have been better counsel, if they had persuaded him to send for Samuel to converse with him and pray for him.—However, the hand of the Lord was manifest in thus bringing David to court. After his anointing he had in a little time by various ways signalized himself, so that he was much noticed; (Note, 17:34—37.) and especially his peculiar skill in playing on the harp, was remarked by some person who attended on Saul. Thus he was introduced to him, and his solemn sacred music was far more suitable to the case, than more amusing strains would have been. He came to Saul with a very high character, which he did not disgrace; he was useful to him, and for a time beloved by him: and yet, when Saul no longer wanted him, he returned back to his flocks as contented as ever, and was soon forgotten at court. (Notes, 17:15,55—58.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Our most reasonable and disinterested sorrow may be so excessive, as to imply rebellion against the righteous will of God; and he will then rebuke us, as well as encourage us under our distresses.—We ought not inconsolably to mourn for such as the Lord has rejected; but should rather rejoice in those whom he is calling forth to usefulness: and no partial affection should interfere with present duty.—The most eminent believers are not entirely superior to the fear of man, when dangerous services are assigned them. But the Lord will inwardly strengthen and outwardly protect them: and, without immediate revelation, he can, by his word and Spirit, shew them step by step what they ought to do.—The guilty conscience trembles at a message from heaven: yet the ministers of Christ come peaceably, proposing salvation through the sacrifice of a Redeemer, and speaking terror to none, except to those who neglect so great salvation. (Note, Matt. 10:11—15. P. O. 7—15.)—There is a preparation of heart required for receiving this atonement and reconciliation, as well as for attending on divine ordinances; the instruction, converse, and prayers of faithful ministers are very useful in both cases, to those who desire to profit by them; and parents ought not needlessly to permit their children to be absent on such favorable opportunities.—It is difficult wholly to divest ourselves of partiality for those, who are recommended by external accomplishments; and we often frame an erroneous judgment of characters: but the Lord values nothing, in comparison with that holy faith, fear, and love, which are implanted in the heart beyond the reach of human penetration. Nor does he favor our children according to our fond partialities; but often most honors and blesses those who have been the least regarded.—His method of educating men for important stations of usefulness, differs much from those which human wisdom has devised. For humble industry and obedient attention to obscure duties, contemplation, retired devotion, and a patient self-denying assiduity, constitute the best preparation for serving the cause of God and his church.—When sinners, by resisting the Holy Spirit, have provoked him finally to depart, they are exposed to every incursion of Satan, and are likely to become tormentors of themselves and of others; nay, their friends may perceive, that they are given up by God in his righteous displeasure, without taking warning by their awful case. Indeed we none of us have the least security, either for our bodies or souls, against the malignity of evil spirits, except in the protection of that God, whom, alas! we are continually provoking. (P. O. Job 1:6—12.)—When conscious guilt, and fears of divine vengeance, disorder the minds of men, those who perceive their distress, but understand neither the cause nor the cure, are apt to propose very fatal methods of relief: and music, diversion, company, or business, have for a season been frequently employed, as a successful quietus for a wounded conscience. Yet nothing can effect a real cure, except the blood of Christ applied in faith, and the sanctifying Spirit sealing the pardon by his holy comforts: all other expedients to dispel religious melancholy, are sure methods of increasing distress, either in this world or in the next, and perhaps in both.—Every endowment, which may be usefully exer-

NOW the Philistines [a] gathered together their armies to battle, and were gathered together at [b] Shochoh, which belongeth to Judah, and pitched between Shochoh and [c] Azekah, in * Ephes-dammim.

2 And Saul and the men of Israel were gathered together, and pitched by [d] the valley of Elah, and [†] set the battle in array against the Philistines.

3 And the Philistines stood on a mountain on the one side, and Israel stood on a mountain on the other side: and there was a valley between them.

4 And there went out a champion out of the camp of the Philistines, named [e] Goliath [f] of Gath, [g] whose height was six cubits and a span.

5 And he had an helmet of brass upon his head, and he was [‡] armed with a coat of mail: and the weight of the coat was five thousand shekels of brass.

6 And he had greaves of brass upon his legs, and a [§] target of brass between his shoulders.

7 And [h] the staff of his spear was like a weaver's beam, and his spear's head weighed six hundred shekels of iron: and one bearing a shield went before him.

8 And he stood and cried unto the armies of Israel, and said unto them, Why are ye come out to set your battle in array? am not I a Philistine, and ye [i] servants to Saul? choose you a man for you, and let him come down to me.

9 If he be able to fight with me, and to kill me, then will we be your servants: but if I prevail against him, and kill him, then shall ye be our servants, and [k] serve us.

10 And the Philistine said, [l] I defy the armies of Israel this day; [m] give me a man that we may fight together.

11 When Saul and all Israel heard those words of the Philistine they were [n] dismayed, and greatly afraid.

12 ¶ Now [o] David was the son of that [p] Ephrathite of Beth-lehem-judah, whose name was Jesse; and he had [q] eight sons: and the man went among men for an old man in the days of Saul.

13 And the three eldest sons of Jesse went and followed Saul to the battle: and [r] the names of his three sons that went to the battle were Eliab the first born, and next unto him Abinadab, and the third [s] Shammah.

cised in subserviency to godliness, is to be ascribed to the energy of the divine Spirit: opportunities will be afforded for its being displayed; and if the Lord be graciously with us, they will be suitably improved: while good behavior in inferior stations is the best introduction to higher advancement.—Thus Jesus was obedient unto death, before he was exalted to his glorious throne: and thus he trains up his people, by obedience, in the midst of temptation and trouble, for their future inheritance in the regions of purity and felicity.

NOTES.

CHAP. XVII. V. 1. (Marg. Ref.) Saul had repeatedly allowed the Philistines time to recover strength and courage; and probably the report of the disordered state of his mind emboldened them to this invasion: yet the Lord so ordered it, that he was in some measure recovered before the war began. It is uncertain how long this was after the transactions before recorded; but probably three or four years had elapsed.—To suppose, as many have done, that this invasion preceded David's first appearance at court, gives a needless and inadmissible disturbance to the narrative. (Notes, 15,55—58.)

V. 4—7. (Marg. Ref.) A champion. (4) Or, a dueller; one who came between the two armies, as wishing to distinguish himself in single combat. (Note, Ps. 9: title.)—Goliath was of the race of Anak. (Notes, Josh. 11:21—23. 15:14. Judg. 1:10—15. 2 Sam. 21:15—22.) On the most moderate computation he was above ten feet high: and the weight of his armor shews that his bulk and strength were proportionable. For his coat of mail weighed above 200 pounds troy weight, and his spear's head in proportion. (Tables.)—Some indeed suppose, that the price or value was meant: but the value of any thing is generally, if not always, computed by shekels of silver or gold, not of brass. Probably, men in general were about the same size as at present; for such giants then caused as much surprise as they would now. (Note, Num. 13:33.)

V. 8—10. This challenge of Goliath greatly increased the consternation of the Israelites; as if they must needs become slaves to the Philistines, unless some one of them could overcome the champion: but no nation ever did, or ever will, suffer its liberties and interests to be disposed of in such a manner.—It is probable that Goliath was one of the lords of the Philistines; and that he deemed it a kind of condescension in him, to fight with one of Saul's servants.

V. 11. When the Spirit of the Lord departed from Saul, he lost much of his former courage; otherwise, depending on the God of Israel, he might have assaulted the army of the Philistines, and at once have silenced the proud boastings of Goliath. (Notes, 11:6—15. 16:14.) His timidity disheartened the army likewise; for faith and piety were evidently at a low ebb among them. Nor had Jonathan the same inward intimation to engage in this service, as he formerly had to undertake one at least equally perilous; the Lord having reserved it for David. (Notes, 14:1—15.

V. 12, 13. Jesse, being far advanced in years,

14 And David was [t] the youngest: and the three eldest followed Saul.

15 But David went, and [u] returned from Saul, to feed his father's sheep at Beth-lehem.

16 And the Philistine drew near morning and evening, and presented himself [v] forty days.

17 And Jesse said unto David his son, [x] Take now for thy brethren an ephah of this [y] parched corn, and these ten loaves, and run to the camp to thy brethren:

18 And [z] carry these ten [*] cheeses unto the captain of [†] their thousand, and [a] look how thy brethren fare, and take their pledge.

19 Now Saul, and they, and all the men of Israel, were in the valley of Elah, fighting with the Philistines.

20 ¶ And David rose up early in the morning, and [b] left the sheep with a keeper, and took, and went, as Jesse had commanded him: and he came to the [‡] trench as the host was going forth to the [§] fight, and shouted for the battle.

21 For Israel and the Philistines had put the battle in array, army against army.

22 And David left [‖] his carriage in the hand of the keeper of the carriage, and ran into the army, and came and [¶] saluted his brethren.

23 And as he talked with them, behold, there came up the champion, (the Philistine of Gath, Goliath by name,) out of the armies of the Philistines, and spake [c] according to the same words: and David heard them.

24 And all the men of Israel, when they saw the man, fled from [] him, and were [d] sore afraid.

25 And the men of Israel said, Have ye seen this man that is come up? surely to defy Israel is he come up: and it shall be, that the man who killeth him, [e] the king will enrich him with great riches, and will give him his daughter, and make his father's house [f] free in Israel.

26 And David spake to the men that stood by him, saying, What shall be done to the man that killeth this Philistine, and taketh away the [g] reproach from Israel? for who is this [h] uncircumcised Philistine, that he should [i] defy the armies of the living God?

27 And the people answered him after was himself exempted from war; but he sent three of his sons with Saul.—Eight sons. (12) 16: 10. Note, 1 Chr. 2:15.

V. 15. Saul's disorder having been relieved, and his mind engaged in public business, David's music was not wanted; and he "returned from Saul" to his former laborious and obscure occupation. Probably he had been appointed Saul's armor-bearer, merely as an honorary distinction, and had never been employed in actual service. (Note, 16:15—23.)—Josephus says, that Saul sent David home in the beginning of this war, being contented with the three sons of Jesse who followed him; but it seems more probable, that he had returned home some time before the war began: and Josephus had no other authentic information, as to the history of Israel, than we at present possess; so that neither his opinions, nor the traditions which he had received from those who lived before him, are of any authority, except when they accord with the sacred scriptures.

V. 16. Had the Philistines thought themselves able to force the camp of Israel, they would not have spent so much time in this manner.—Forty days.] Note, Matt. 4:1,2.

V. 17. As Jesse had several other sons, it must be ascribed to a special interposition of Providence, that David was sent on this occasion. (Note, 16:10,11.)

V. 18. Pledge.] This, it is probable, was some concerted token of welfare, according to the custom of those times, while epistolary correspondence was infrequent.

V. 19. Fighting.] There might be frequent skirmishes between the two armies, though they did not come to a general engagement.

V. 22. His carriage.] Or, the provisions which he carried, or had brought, for his brethren and their captain. (Marg.—Acts 21:15.)—"The keeper of the carriage" seems to mean the person, who was appointed over those, who guarded the baggage: and who would take the charge of what David had brought, till he returned.—'With his 'servant.' Bp. Patrick. It does not however appear, that David was attended by a servant.

V. 23, 24. (Note, 4—7.) When the two armies were on the point of engaging, Goliath's renewed challenge strangely disconcerted the Israelites. They could face the whole army of the Philistines, though they knew Goliath was among them; and yet were dismayed by the sight of him alone! (Notes, Num. 13:30,31. 14:2—9.)

V. 25, 26. It does not appear, that Saul consulted the Lord, or offered sacrifice, or even made supplications, on this occasion: but he offered great rewards to him, who should kill Goliath. (Notes, Josh. 15:16,17. 1 Chr. 11:4—8.)—To this conduct, David's speech, glowing with confidence in God, zeal for his glory, and indignant resentment of Israel's disgrace, formed a noble contrast. However terrible the gigantic Goliath might appear, he was "an uncircumcised Philistine;" and those whom he defied were not merely "servants to Saul" (8), but "the armies of the living God." (Note, Num. 23:7,8.) And in this view, who was Goliath, that any Israelite should fear him? The very inquiry implied the most pointed reproof of this manner, saying, [k] So shall it be done to the man that killeth him.

28 And Eliab his eldest brother heard when he spake unto the men; and [l] Eliab's anger was kindled against David, and he said, Why camest thou down hither? and [m] with whom hast thou left those few sheep in the wilderness? [n] I know thy pride, and the naughtiness of thine heart; for thou art come down, that thou mightest see the battle.

29 And David said, [o] What have I now done? Is there not a cause?

30 And he turned from him towards another, and spake after the same *manner: and the people answered him again after the former manner.

[Practical Observations.]

31 ¶ And when the words were heard which David spake, they rehearsed them before Saul; and he † sent for him.

32 And David said to Saul, [p] Let no man's heart fail because of him: [q] thy servant will go, and fight with this Philistine.

33 And Saul said to David, [r] Thou art not able to go against this Philistine to fight with him: [s] for thou art but a youth, and he a man of war from his youth.

34 And David said unto Saul, Thy servant kept his father's sheep, and there came a lion and a bear, and took a ‡ lamb out of the flock;

35 And I went out after him, and smote him, and delivered it out of his mouth: and when he arose against me, I caught him by his beard, and [t] smote him, and slew him.

36 Thy servant slew both the lion, an the bear: and [u] this uncircumcised Philis tine shall be as one of them, seeing [x] he hath defied the armies of the living God.

37 David said moreover, [y] The LORD that delivered me out of the paw of the lion, and out of the paw of the bear, he will deliver me out of the hand of this Philistine. And Saul said unto David, [z] Go, and the LORD be with thee.

38 ¶ And Saul § armed David with his armor, and he put an helmet of brass upon his head; also he armed him with a coat of mail.

39 And David girded his sword upon his armor, and he assayed to go; for he had not proved it. And David said unto Saul, I cannot go with these; for I have not proved them. And David [a] put them off him.

40 And he took his [b] staff in his hand, and chose him five smooth stones out of the ‖ brook, and put them in a shepherd's ¶ bag which he had, even in a scrip, and his sling was in his hand; and he drew near to the Philistine.

the unbelief and cowardice of Saul, and indeed of the whole army.—Free in Israel. (25) Note, Ezra 7:24—26.

V. 28. It can hardly be supposed, that Eliab was entirely ignorant of David's having been anointed by Samuel; and he must have understood this transaction, as at least an indication of his future superiority. (Note, 16:13.) No doubt, therefore, he was in part excited by envy on this occasion: but he might also consider the spirit of his younger and neglected brother, as a tacit reproach of his own timidity. He therefore rashly and falsely accused him of leaving his flock without a keeper, and of coming without being sent, out of curiosity or ambition (17—20): and intimated that he was notoriously of a proud, aspiring, and even wicked disposition. These insinuations tended both to discourage David, and to prejudice those who heard them against him, in order that he might be disregarded. (Notes, Gen. 37:2—10. John 7:3—10.)

V. 29. This answer was as admirable for the "meekness of wisdom," as the former question was for the 'courage of faith.' David took no notice of the reproach cast on his character; nor of the false accusation laid against him; nor of the selfish motives, to which his coming to the army was ascribed. But he merely replied, by asking, "What have I now done? Is there not a cause?" Ought not every Israelite to feel a holy indignation, when he hears an uncircumcised Philistine defy the armies of the living God? And ought not some Israelite to step forward and venture his life, to take away this reproach? Yet no Israelite had hitherto appeared who would attempt it. (Notes, Judg. 8:1—3. Prov. 15:1.)

V. 31, 32. Marg. Ref. p, q.

V. 34—37. In defence of his flock, David had been enabled, at different times, to slay a lion and a bear: and he looked upon this as an earnest of victory over the "uncircumcised Philistine," whom he meant to attack out of zeal for the glory of God, and the interests of Israel. Goliath could not be more terrible to any Israelitish soldier, than a lion or a bear, bereaved of its prey, would be to an unarmed shepherd; and David's deliverance from these savage beasts was the effect of the Lord's special favor, who would also deliver him from the Philistine. (Note, 2 Cor. 1:8—11.)—Thus, when the Spirit of the Lord was upon Samson, he rent the lion before he destroyed the Philistines. (Note, Judg. 14:5,6.)—Several extraordinary actions of this kind, no doubt, obtained David that great character, with which he had first been introduced to Saul. (16:18.)—Go, &c. (37) Notes, 24:16—22. 26:21—25.

V. 38—40. David had not been accustomed to such armor as Saul put upon him, and he was not 41 And the Philistine came on, and drew near unto David; and the man that bare the shield went before him.

42 And when the Philistine looked about and saw David, [c] he disdained him; for he was but [d] a youth, and ruddy, and of a fair countenance.

43 And the Philistine said unto David, [e] Am I a dog, that thou comest to me with staves? And the Philistine [f] cursed David by his gods.

44 And the Philistine said to David, [g] Come to me, and I will give thy flesh unto the fowls of the air, and to the beasts of the field.

45 Then said David to the Philistine, [h] Thou comest to me with a sword, and with a spear, and with a shield; but I come to thee [i] in the name of the LORD of hosts, the God of the armies of Israel, whom thou hast [k] defied.

46 This day [l] will the LORD *deliver thee into mine hand, and I will smite thee, and take thine head from thee; and I will give the [m] carcasses of the host of the Philistines this day unto the fowls of the air, and to the wild beasts of the earth; that [n] all the earth may know that there is a God in Israel.

47 And all this assembly shall know that the LORD [o] saveth not with sword and spear: for [p] the battle is the LORD's, and he will give you into our hands.

48 And it came to pass, when the Philistine arose, and came and drew nigh to meet David, that [q] David hasted and ran toward the army to meet the Philistine.

49 And David put his hand in his bag, and took thence a stone, and slang it, and [r] smote the Philistine in his forehead, that the stone sunk into his forehead; and he fell upon his face to the earth.

50 So David prevailed over the Philistine with a sling and with a stone, and smote the Philistine, and slew him; [s] but there was no sword in the hand of David.

51 Therefore David ran, and stood upon the Philistine, and took [t] his sword, and drew it out of the sheath thereof, and slew him, and cut off his head therewith. And when the Philistines saw their champion was dead, they [u] fled.

52 And [x] the men of Israel and of Judah arose, and shouted, and pursued the Philistines, until thou come to the [y] valley, and to the gates of Ekron: and the wounded of the Philistines fell down by the way to Shaaraim, even unto Gath, and unto Ekron.

53 And the children of Israel returned from chasing after the Philistines, and [z] they spoiled their tents.

satisfied to go forth in that manner.—This was likewise from the Lord, who would have it made manifest that his servant fought and conquered by faith, and that the victory was from him, who works by the most despised means and instruments. (Notes, Josh. 6:3—5. Judg. 3:31. 7:16—22. 15:14—17. Zech. 4:4—7. 1 Cor. 1:20—31. 2 Cor. 4:7.)

V. 42—44. Perhaps David might at this time be twenty-two or twenty-three years of age; (33. Note, 16:10,11.) and his unwarlike appearance in all respects excited contempt and disdain in Goliath's breast; nay, he was greatly affronted to be opposed by a stripling, accoutred in so unwarlike a manner. But though he cursed David by his gods, he evidently trusted not in them, but in the might of his own arm. The Romans used thus to curse their enemies: 'All the gods and goddesses 'destroy thee!' (Notes, Num. 22:6.)

V. 45—47. Nothing can exceed the modesty, the faith, the piety, and the zeal for the glory of God, and the cause of Israel and of true religion, which glow in this most beautiful speech. David expressed, with peculiar animation, his assured expectation of success, of which doubtless some immediate intimations had been communicated to him; satisfying him, that the zeal of the Lord for his own glory would engage him in the cause: he even gloried in his own contemptible appearance and armor, that the victory might the more unquestionably be ascribed to JEHOVAH; and he anticipated the effects of this transaction. He even conceived a hope of its producing a salutary conviction in the minds of the Philistines, that the God of Israel was the only true God; and he predicted that his power and glory would by means of it be made known to all the earth. (Notes, 1 Kings 18:36,37. 2 Kings 19:14—19.)

V. 48, 49. The courage of David appears illustrious in the whole narrative. Goliath understood that his challenge was accepted, by David's boldly marching out to meet him; and at this crisis, David with great activity at once struck the fatal blow. Either Goliath, in fearless presumption and contempt of his opponent, had neglected to fasten on his helmet; or the stone, directed and impelled by the power of the Almighty, penetrated both the helmet and his skull, and sunk into his forehead, as a stone sinks into the water. (Note, 1 Kings 22:32—35.)

V. 50—53. Perhaps the sword of Goliath was not so large and unwieldy in proportion, as the other parts of his armor; for we find that David afterwards used it, as well as on this occasion. (Note, 21:8,9.)—When the Philistines saw that their champion, or mighty man, was dead; they were so convinced of the power and presence of the God of Israel, that they had no courage to fight, but yielded Israel a complete victory: and the Israelites pursued them even to their own 54 ¶ And David [a] took the head of the Philistine, and brought it to Jerusalem: but he put his armor in his tent.

55 And when Saul saw David go forth against the Philistine, he said unto Abner, the captain of the host, Abner, [b] Whose son is this youth? And Abner said, As thy soul liveth, O king, I cannot tell.

cities, and plundered their camp. (Marg. Ref.)

Champion. (51) The original word is not the same here as in the fourth verse.

V. 54. Either David, after a time, carried the head of Goliath to Jerusalem, as a terror to the Jebusites; and put his armor in his own tent, until it was removed to the tabernacle of God: (21:8, 9.) or this is spoken by anticipation; and means, that afterwards Goliath's skull and armor were preserved at Jerusalem, as a monument of the victory, and to the glory of God, in the tent which David there formed for the ark. (Note, 2 Sam. 6:17.)

V. 55—58. It has been argued, from the circumstance of Saul's not recollecting David, that the history is inconsistent: and to answer this objection many learned men, by a very unnatural transposition, place this chapter, in order of time, before the preceding. But it should be considered that David was young when he went to the court of Saul: and a few years, with change of dress, (from that of a courtier, to that of a shepherd,) make a very great alteration in the appearance of young persons. Abner had no acquaintance with David, that we know of. Saul's mind was disordered, and his affairs in perplexity. Kings, especially such kings as Saul, are served by so many fresh faces, that they often literally forget their old acquaintance. Yet it is evident, that Saul had some confused and imperfect recollection of David; though he could not certainly remember whose son he was. (Notes, 1,15.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—30.

When those, to whom it officially belongs to defend the cause of God and his church, are destitute of his Spirit, and given up to ambition, covetousness, envy, malice, or lust; no wonder if open enemies are encouraged, and friends dispirited: and as the fear of God declines, the fear of man, in one form or other, will gather strength. But when one instrument is thrown aside, another is prepared, and produced for the work of the Lord: and though Israel be cast down, and his enemies for a season triumph; yet shall he be raised up again, and their success terminate in deeper disgrace and ruin.—Every gift of God to fallen man, instead of inspiring gratitude, naturally increases proud self-admiration and confidence, and a disposition to despise and insult over others. But what are human wisdom, strength, and courage, unless preserved and prospered by him who gave them? When confidence in these endowments withdraws men from their dependence on God, and when they are employed in rebellion against him; the haughty possessor becomes more expressly the enemy and rival of the Almighty, and is prepared to be a more distinguished monument of his righteous vengeance. (Notes, Job 40:9—14. Jer. 9:23,24. Dan. 4:34—37. 5:18—24.)—Degenerate professors of religion often receive just rebukes from most decided enemies: and indeed no persecutor or heresiarch needs fear defying the disciples of man, any more than Goliath feared defying "the servants of Saul," were they only such, as the names which they assume, as well as their conduct on some occasions, seem to imply. For in human accomplishments the opposers of the truth of God have frequently possessed an undisputed superiority: (Note Ez. 15:6—8. P. O.) confiding in this, they have defied, and still do defy, the advocates of spiritual truth to engage with them; and they dream of a total and decided victory. But they have "the armies of the living God," and their invincible Captain himself, to contend with; and "who are these uncircumcised Philistines," that a true Israelite should fear them? Any believer in the divine Savior may predict that their triumphing will be short: and, if fairly called to it, we need not fear to go forth with the despised sling and stone, with plain testimonies of holy Scripture, unadorned by eloquence, and unsupported by human learning, against the most formidable of them; trusting in him who has all power in heaven and earth.—Those who would serve God must be endued with patience, meekness, and self-denial; and they must learn to bear neglect, contempt, and ingratitude; to be laborious, faithful, and obedient; to shun observation and ostentation; to walk by faith, and to wait the Lord's time for every promised or expected mercy; not putting themselves forward, till it be undeniably evident that there is a cause.—In times of general formality and lukewarmness, every degree of zeal, which implies a readiness to go further, or venture more in the cause of God, than others do, will be censured as pride and ambition; and by none more than near relations and negligent superiors: and such censures will seldom be unmingled with unjust insinuations, slanders, and attempts to blacken a man's character. But conscious integrity, and confidence in God, united with meekness, wisdom, and perseverance, will carry the believer through such discouraging opposition, and raise him above them: and those who would do good, should not multiply words in defence of their own characters; but avoid whatever may needlessly exasperate, prolong contention, or foment envy; and be satisfied with appealing to the consciences and common sense of impartial persons, that time and circumstances require their exertions. The hope of being an instrument of good, and of being accepted by the Lord, will animate the faithful servant of God in every undertaking; and the expectation of a reward from man, or the fear of human censure, will be with him a very inferior consideration.

V. 31—58.

If we improve our experience of the Lord's faithfulness, love, and power, in former seasons of danger and difficulty, it will inspire confidence in the prospect of future conflicts; and on some occasions it may be referred to for the satisfaction of others: and to be engaged against the avowed and haughty enemies of God and his church, is in all cases a proper ground of encouragement.—In the service of our common Lord we are not all qualified to handle the same weapons, or to fill up the same stations: none should therefore be set up in all things as models, nor ought any of us indiscriminately to imitate the most approved characters. Rules and methods, which are useful and natural to one man, may prove encumbrances to another: and we do best, when we cultivate our own peculiar talent, taking hints from every body, and not attempting exact conformity to any. But faith, and prayer, and truth, and righteousness, "the whole armor of God," and "the mind which was in Christ," are equally needful for all his servants.—The curses of wicked men are no more to be feared, than their power or menaces; as they will at length rebound upon themselves, and their proud self-confidence will surely be confounded. But those who trust in the Lord, and simply seek his glory, shall never be ashamed: in their hands the feeblest means shall be successful, and before them the most formidable opposition shall come to nothing. The event of every conflict of the church of God against her enemies, will undeniably evince, "that the LORD saveth not with sword and spear; for the battle is the LORD's, and he will give it into our hands:" and this shall tend to make known his glory throughout the earth.—Human favor is of small value, for men soon forget those who have been most useful to them; and they alone are happy, who enjoy the favor of him, who never forgets or forsakes the meanest of his true people.—Finally, in David's victory over the champion of the Philistines, we may see a faint shadow of the Redeemer's victory over Satan, who for ages had defied the armies of the living God, and, from the fall of Adam to the coming of Christ, found no one able in his own strength to stand against him: but Jesus overcame him on his own ground, and foiled him with his own weapons, and still goes on by his despised gospel to pursue the victory; while all the hosts of the true Israel join in his conquests, and share the benefits; and they shall ere long meet in heaven to celebrate his triumphs with everlasting songs of praise.

NOTES.

CHAP. XVIII. V. 1. The modesty, piety, and courageous faith of David were so congenial to the character of Jonathan, that they attracted his most cordial esteem and affection: (Notes, 14:6—15.) so that the most endeared friendship subsisted between them, from that time, without the least interruption, notwithstanding Saul's envy and malice; and though Jonathan knew that David was anointed to be king, and that he himself was excluded! (Notes, 19:1—7. 20:14—17,32—42. 23:17,18. 2 Sam. 1:19—27.) This disinterested friendship was the effect of that grace of God, which produces in all true believers "one heart and soul," and causes them to delight in each other's converse and comfort: (Notes, 1 Pet. 1:22—25. 1 John 3:13—15.) yet similarity of disposition, and the coincidence of the extraordinary services which in the courage of faith they had performed, served to render their reciprocal affection peculiarly fervent and intimate. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 2. Saul did not at first know David, but he soon recollected him. It is manifest from this, that he had before returned from Saul to his pastoral employments, but from this time he went back no more to them. (Note, 17:55—58.)

V. 3, 4. Jonathan, by stripping off his own clothes and armor, and giving them to David, intended avowedly to ratify the covenant between them, as well as to testify his affection, and equip him according to his character and station. So that David then put off the shepherd, and put on the courtier and soldier.

V. 5. Abner continued commander in chief; but David had some high military station, and perhaps he was made captain of Saul's guards.

9 And Saul [u] eyed David from that day and forward.

10 And it came to pass on the morrow, that [o] the evil spirit from God came upon Saul, and he [p] prophesied in the midst of the house; and David [q] played with his hand, as at other times: and there was a javelin in Saul's hand.

11 And Saul [r] cast the javelin; for he said, I will smite David even to the wall with it. [s] And David avoided out of his presence twice.

12 And Saul was [t] afraid of David, because [u] the LORD was with him, and was [v] departed from Saul.

13 Therefore Saul [x] removed him from him, and made him his captain over a thousand; and [y] he went out and came in before the people.

V. 6—9. After the death of Goliath, and the consequent victory over the Philistines; Saul, and David with him, went to several of the cities of Israel. 'I suppose, Saul and the whole court 'thought fit to honor David, by accompanying 'him to Jerusalem when he carried Goliath's 'head thither.' Bp. Patrick. However this might be, in all places to which they came, the women, according to the custom of the times, went forth to meet them with instruments of music, and singing an ode composed on the occasion. (Judg. 11:34. Notes, Ex. 15:1,20,21. Judg. 5:1. Ps. 68:24,25.) In this ode, composed in poetical language, no injustice was done to Saul, nor any affront intended him: yet the language employed might have given umbrage to a mind less propense to envy and suspicion, than that of Saul. Accordingly, he was greatly displeased; and, perceiving how David increased in popularity, he concluded that God was about "to rend the kingdom from him, and to give it to a neighbor of his, who was better than he." (15:28.) Probably he had been also informed, that Samuel anointed David, and favored his interest; so that he began to look upon him with a jealous and malignant eye.

V. 10, 11. When Saul indulged malevolence, he "gave place to the devil," and provoked God to permit the evil spirit again to trouble him. (Note, 16:14. Ps. 51:11.) Being thus under a supernatural though malignant influence, he behaved in some respects as the prophets did, when the Spirit of inspiration came upon them; yet from a contrary cause. It is not indeed certain whether he assumed this appearance to cloke his attempting to murder David, or whether Satan really wrought upon him till he seemed to prophesy. He was, however, influenced by deliberate malice when he threw the javelin at David. Though David, conscious of his innocence, and satisfied that he was doing his duty under God's protection, would not leave his place, yet he evidently suspected some mischief from the javelin in Saul's hand; and was enabled to avoid the blow, both at this time and on another occasion. (Note, 19:8—10.)

V. 12—16. Saul was sensible that the Lord was departed from him, and that his former capacity for public business was diminished: at the same time he perceived, that the Lord had given David peculiar wisdom, and was with him to prosper all his undertakings; and this increased the disquietude of his malevolent mind, and his dread of David as a prevailing rival. He therefore removed him from his presence, changing the command which he had before given him, for that of a thousand men, who made war at a distance. (Note, 5.) But this served the more to ingratiate him with the people, by affording him the opportunity of leading them forth to victory over their enemies.

V. 17—19. Saul appears to have been influenced, in this purpose, by fear of exciting a revolt among the people, rather than by the fear of God, or reluctance to commit murder with his own hand. (Note, 2 Sam. 11:14—17.) He was engaged by promise to give his daughter to David: (17:25.) but he had delayed the performance, and David was willing to dispense with it. Malice, however, at length prompted him to propose it, that he might excite David to venture his life more freely, in order to be counted worthy of such an honor; and that he might thus be cut off, without Saul's direct interposition. And though David humbly owned himself unworthy of such an alliance, and his services of such a reward, he did not decline the stipulated conditions. But when Saul's design proved abortive, he affronted him in the grossest manner, by giving his daughter to another man.

21 And Saul said, I will give him her, that she may be [k] a snare to him, and that [l] the hand of the Philistines may be against him. Wherefore Saul said to David, Thou shalt [m] this day be my son-in-law in the one of the twain.

22 And Saul [n] commanded his [o] servants, saying, Commune with David secretly, and say, Behold the king hath delight in thee, and all his servants love thee: now therefore be the king's son-in-law.

23 And Saul's servants spake those words in the ears of David. And David said, Seemeth it to you a light thing to be a king's son-in-law, seeing that I am [p] a poor man, and lightly esteemed?

24 And the servants of Saul told him, saying, * On this manner spake David.

25 And Saul said, Thus shall ye say to David, The king desireth not any [q] dowry, but a hundred [r] foreskins of the Philistines, [s] to be avenged of the king's enemies. But Saul [t] thought to make David fall by the hand of the Philistines.

26 And when his servants told David these words, it pleased David well to be the king's son-in-law: and [u] the days were not † expired.

27 Wherefore David arose, and went, he and [v] his men, and [x] slew of the Philistines two hundred men; and David brought their foreskins, and they gave them in full tale to the king, that he might be the king's son-in-law. And Saul gave him Michal his daughter to wife.

28 And Saul [y] saw and knew that the LORD was with David, and that Michal, Saul's daughter, loved him.

29 And Saul was [z] yet the more afraid of David; and [a] Saul became David's enemy continually.

30 Then the princes of the Philistines [b] went forth: and it came to pass, after they went forth, that David [c] behaved himself more wisely than all the servants of Saul; so that his name was much ‡ set by.

V. 23—27. David would doubtless suspect some invidious design in this proposal also: but he cautiously avoided mentioning the slight which had been put upon him; and waved the matter upon the ground of his own poverty and inferiority; though his original was not much if at all inferior to that of Saul. But when, instead of dowry according to the custom of those times, (Marg. Ref. q,) a hundred foreskins of the Philistines were required, he would not seem backward to any perilous service; and therefore he promptly went forth, and returned with twice as many as had been prescribed.

V. 28—30. Michal's affection for David, his prudent conduct in another incursion of the Philistines, and his increasing reputation, appeared to Saul's distempered mind to forebode David's advancement to the kingdom by dethroning him; nay, the full conviction that God favored David, rendered Saul, not only more afraid of him, but also more malignant against him! (Notes, Gen. 4:3—8. Matt. 2:3—18. John 15:22—25. 1 John 3:11—15.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

True religion teaches us to love real excellency; to rejoice in it, though it eclipse our own reputation; and to delight in the society of those whom the Lord loves and honors, who bear his image and are zealous for his glory, regardless of inferiority of station or selfish considerations. This union of souls, resulting from participation of the Spirit of Jesus Christ, prepares men for filling up their several stations in the church of God, in harmony, sympathy, and love, as the several members do in the natural body; and which, being perfected in heaven, will for ever exclude envy and discontent, and render the felicity of each favored inhabitant an accession to the joy of all the rest. (Notes, 1 Cor. 12:12—31.) But how different is the nature of fallen man! When the Lord is provoked to leave us, and Satan is permitted to excite our evil propensities, we become capable of envying and hating those especially who are most amiable, and who have done the most to serve us, with malignity proportioned to their meekness and wisdom; the commendations bestowed upon them are considered as an injury and reproach to us; and even the peculiar favor of God for them will greatly aggravate malice and envy, and incite to revenge. Thus men imitate and gratify Satan's malevolence; while they themselves are tortured with continued terrors and suspicions, and urged by temptations to every horrid crime, by which they bring upon themselves swift destruction. If we would not be given up to such dreadful excesses, let us watch and pray against the first risings of these dire passions: and we should also be prepared for the effects of them, as they prevail in the minds of others.—For every great and good work a man must expect to be envied by his neighbor: no distinction or pre-eminence can be so unexceptionably obtained, but it will expose the possessor to slander and malice, and perhaps to the most fatal consequences. But such trials are very useful to those who love God: they serve as a counterpoise to the honor put upon them, and check the growth of pride and attachment to the world; they exercise them to faith, patience, meekness, and communion with God; they give them a fair opportunity of exemplifying the amiable nature and tendency of true godliness, by acting with wisdom and propriety in the most difficult circumstances; they make way for increasing experience of the Lord's faithfulness, in restraining their enemies, raising them up friends, and affording them his gracious protection; and they both prepare them for those stations in which they are to be employed, and

CHAP. XIX.

Saul orders David to be slain. Jonathan informs David; and, pleading for him with Saul, effects a reconciliation, 1—7. David's success in war renders Saul again jealous; he seeks to kill David, who escapes by flight, 8—10. Saul sends to kill him in his house; but Michal favors his escape, and deceives Saul by an image in the bed, 11—17. David goes to Samuel, 18. Saul sends messengers after him to Naioth; and then goes himself: but first his messengers are seized by the Spirit of prophecy, and afterwards he also, 19—24.

AND [a] Saul spake to Jonathan his son, and to all his servants, that they should kill David.

2 But Jonathan, Saul's son, [b] delighted much in David: and [c] Jonathan told David, saying, Saul my father seeketh to kill thee: now therefore, I pray thee, take heed to thyself until the morning, and abide in a secret place, and hide thyself:

3 And I will go out and stand beside my father in the field where thou art, and I will commune with my father of thee; and [d] what I see, that I will tell thee.

4 And Jonathan [e] spake good of David unto Saul his father, and said unto him, Let not the king [f] sin against his servant, against David; because he hath not sinned against thee, and [g] because his works have been to thee-ward very good.

5 For he did [h] put his life in his hand, and [i] slew the Philistine, and the LORD [k] wrought a great salvation for all Israel: thou sawest it, and didst rejoice; wherefore then wilt thou [l] sin against innocent blood, to slay David [m] without a cause?

6 And Saul hearkened unto the voice of Jonathan: and Saul [n] sware, As the LORD liveth, [o] he shall not be slain.

7 And Jonathan called David, and Jonathan shewed him all those things: and Jonathan brought David to Saul, and he was in his presence [p] as * in times past.

8 ¶ And there was war again: and [q] David went out, and fought with the Philistines, and slew them with a great slaughter; and they fled from † him.

9 And [r] the evil spirit from the LORD was upon Saul, as he sat in his house with his javelin in his hand: and David played with his hand.

10 And Saul [s] sought to smite David even to the wall with the javelin; but [t] he slipped away out of Saul's presence, and he smote the javelin into the wall: and David fled, and escaped that night.

11 Saul also [u] sent messengers unto David's house [v] to watch him, and to slay him in the morning: and Michal, David's wife, told him, saying, If thou save not thy life to-night, to-morrow thou shalt be slain.

open their way to them: for in due time modest merit will shine forth with double lustre. But humility, industry, faithfulness, silence under injuries, and a backwardness to seek great things for ourselves, are requisite to safety and comfort in the public scenes of life; and retired stations are far more favorable to our own inward peace. Lavish commendations of those whom we love and admire, in such a world as this, often prove a real injury: and in all cases every thing should be avoided, which can excite envy or opposition; except the performance of our duty to God and man. But if "the LORD be with us," and we have the consolations of his Spirit, we shall be happy in any situation: committing our souls and bodies, our characters and interests, our families and connexions, our way and our work, into his almighty hands; he will bring all that to pass which is good for us, and carry us safely through to that blessed world, where treachery, envy, and malice find no admission, but perfect love will prevail for evermore.

NOTES.

CHAP. XIX. V. 1—3. (Notes, 18:1,3,4,28—30.) At length Saul's envy and enmity burst forth in the avowed purpose of putting David to death, and he required all his servants, and even Jonathan his son, to join with him in this design. Yet, as he doubtless knew, that "Jonathan delighted much in David," it must be ascribed to a peculiar interposition of Providence, that he did not attempt to conceal it from him. (Note, 20 3.)—Some field, where Saul commonly walked, was pitched upon by Jonathan for this conference; that David being there concealed, might have the fullest evidence of Jonathan's fidelity and affection, and all the information which he could procure him. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 4—7. (Marg. Ref.)—Notes, 17:42—53. Ps 25:2,3. John 15:22—25.) Probably, Saul was for the present impressed by Jonathan's calm and forcible arguments, and was sincere when he sware that David should not be slain: but when his convictions wore off, his malice revived, and he was too much accustomed to swear, duly to reverence an oath. (14:24,39,44.) David could not indeed greatly confide in Saul's assurances; but he was willing to keep in the way of his duty, and to put his trust in God.

V. 8—10. Though David's valor and success were the known causes of Saul's enmity: yet he was willing again to fight against the Philistines, and to expose himself to their swords, and to Saul's increased envy on that account: nor did he ever decline playing upon the harp before Saul when required, though he saw the javelin in his hand, and had before so narrowly escaped! (Notes, 18:10,11,23—27.)

through a window: and he went, and fled, and escaped.

13 And Michal took an image, and laid it in the bed, and put a pillow of goats' hair for his bolster, and covered it with a cloth.

14 And when Saul sent messengers to take David, [y] she said, He is sick.

15 And Saul sent the messengers again to see David, saying, [z] Bring him up to me in the bed, that I may slay him.

16 And when the messengers were come in, behold, there was an image in the bed, with a pillow of goats' hair for his bolster.

17 And Saul said unto Michal, [a] Why hast thou deceived me so, and sent away [b] mine enemy, that he is escaped? And Michal answered Saul, [c] He said unto me, Let me go; [d] why should I kill thee?

18 ¶ So David fled, and escaped, and came [e] to Samuel to Ramah, and told him all that Saul had done to him: and he and Samuel went and dwelt in Naioth.

19 And [f] it was told Saul, saying, Behold, David is at Naioth in Ramah.

20 And Saul [g] sent messengers to take David: and [h] when they saw the company of the prophets prophesying, and Samuel standing as appointed over them, the Spirit of God was upon the messengers of Saul, and they also prophesied.

21 And when it was told Saul, he sent other messengers, and they prophesied likewise: and Saul [i] sent messengers again the third time, and they [k] prophesied also.

22 Then went he also to Ramah, and came to a great well that is in Sechu: and he asked and said, Where are Samuel and David? and one said, Behold, they be at Naioth in Ramah.

23 And he went thither to Naioth in Ramah: and [l] the Spirit of God was upon him also, and he went on and prophesied, [m] until he came to Naioth in Ramah.

24 And he [n] stripped off his clothes also, and prophesied before Samuel in like manner, and †lay down naked all that day and all that night. Wherefore they say, [o] Is Saul also among the prophets?

V. 11, 12. Lest David should elude the messengers if they entered the house in the night, they were ordered to watch till the morning that he might not go out; and then to apprehend him that Saul might slay him. Thus an opportunity was afforded David of escaping. (Marg. Ref.—Note, Judg. 16:1—3.) Michal had either received some information concerning Saul's intentions, or made some observations which served to convince her of them. (Notes, Ps. 59: title. 3, 4,6—15.)

V. 13—17. Michal's fidelity to her husband was commendable: nay, if the cause had been more doubtful, it would have been her duty to unite with him, while no harm was intended to Saul, and David merely aimed to preserve his life. (Note, Gen. 31:15,16.) Her stratagem also to gain time, was allowable: but her direct falsehood in vindicating her conduct to Saul, had not even the excuse of necessity; (Note, Ex. 1:19.) and it was highly injurious to David's reputation. The whole account illustrates the savage cruelty of Saul, who, it seems, could not be satisfied with the death of his faithful servant, unless he had the satisfaction of slaying him with his own hands: and it shews likewise the extreme danger to which David's life was exposed.—Mine enemy. (17) 18:29. 24:19. Note, 1 Kings 21:20.

An image.] Teraphim. (Marg. and Marg. Ref.)—It can hardly be thought that teraphim, for idolatrous purposes, were permitted in David's family: and it is therefore supposed, that this image was merely a statue for ornament.

V. 18. As the aged prophet had anointed David to be king, he fled to him on this emergency, rather than to his father's house: that he might have the solace of his counsel, instructions, and prayers.—Naioth is supposed to have been the place of a seminary of prophets, near Ramah. (19,22. Note, 10:5,6.)

V. 19—24. (Notes, 2 Kings 1:9—14. John 7:31—36,40—53.)—Saul being seized by the prophetic Spirit before he came to Naioth, stripped off his armor, and royal robes, or upper garments; as it is probable the other prophets laid aside their upper garments, and Saul's messengers along with them: (Marg. Ref.) and in an ecstasy, during the whole day and night, he involuntarily joined in speaking of divine things, or in singing hymns of praise, without any power of executing the base purpose of his journey. After which, finding himself baffled, he probably returned home extremely chagrined, without taking any notice of Samuel.—This second time of Saul being among the prophets was noted, as being indeed more wonderful than the former. (Note, 10:10—13.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The most vehement anger, when excited by real or supposed injuries, may be pacified by concessions, kindness, and continued good behavior: but envious rage is exasperated by excellency of character and conduct, and generally is implacable.—When rooted malice possesses the heart, murder is speedily conceived; and the prospect of impunity, especially when men are armed with power and authority, emboldens them to avow the most shameful purposes.—Absolute princes are so seldom opposed in their designs, and so few venture to plead in behalf of those whom they envy and hate, that they often conclude all men to be alike selfish, and ready to execute any lucrative schemes of villany. But that friendship, which is cemented by mutual faith and piety, will influence those, who feel its sacred energy, to renounce their

CHAP. XX.

David consults with Jonathan how to provide for his safety, 1—10. They renew the covenant of friendship, and confirm it by oath, 11—17. They agree on a token, 18—23. David absents himself from the king's table, and is excused by Jonathan, whom Saul abuses and attempts to kill, 24—34. Jonathan shews David his danger, and most affectionately takes leave of him, 35—42.

AND David [a] fled from Naioth in Ramah, and came and said before Jonathan, [b] What have I done? what is mine iniquity? and what is my sin before thy father, that he seeketh my life?

2 And he said unto him, [c] God forbid; thou shalt not die: behold, my father will do nothing, either great or small, but that he will * shew it me: and why should my father hide this thing from me? It is not so.

3 And David [d] sware moreover and said; Thy father certainly knoweth that I have found grace in thine eyes; and he saith, Let not Jonathan know this, lest he be grieved: but truly, [e] as the LORD liveth and [f] as thy soul liveth, there is [g] but a step between me and death.

4 Then said Jonathan unto David, † Whatsoever thy soul ‡ desireth, I will even do it for thee.

5 And David said unto Jonathan, Behold, to-morrow is the [h] new moon, and I should not fail to sit with the king at meat: but let me go, [i] that I may hide myself in the field unto the third day at even.

highest temporal interests, and venture the displeasure of their superiors, in pleading the cause of injured worth.—The evil of causeless malice, of ingratitude, and of persecuting those, whose conduct has been irreproachable, and whose services have been eminently useful, is so manifest, that a plain statement of truth and fact, with meek and serious expostulations, will often for the time impress the minds of such as are most deeply guilty. But resolutions, made in consequence of hasty convictions, and without any inward change of disposition, or dependence on the grace of God, seldom produce any durable good effect: and ungovernable passions easily break through the most solemn oaths, when the fear of God does not possess the heart. A fresh temptation soon rouses the dormant corruption: and, by indulging malignant passions, men give Satan his full advantage, and may be answerable for multiplied murders, without actually perpetrating any.—The servants of God however should keep to their place and duty, though hated for so doing; give honor to their earthly superiors, however they behave; and persevere in their endeavors to "overcome evil with good." The Almighty has innumerable methods of protecting them in the most imminent dangers: he can preserve them by the kindness even of those persons, whose conduct deserves marked disapprobation; he can change the hearts, or bind the hands of their enemies, or shame them for a season out of their malicious purposes.—In some instances, a persecutor, by coming among the people of God, has been apprehended, as it were, by converting grace; and, like Saul of Tarsus, has professed and "preached the faith, that once he sought to destroy:" (Notes, Gal. 1:15—24. Phil. 3:12—14. 1 Tim. 1:12—16.) but far more, like king Saul, have for a time been apparently changed, have exercised spiritual gifts, and been numbered among the prophets, whose malice has remained unsubdued, and whose "last state has been worse than the first." Let us then daily seek for renewing grace, which shall be "in us a well of water springing up into everlasting life;" let us cleave to truth and holiness with purpose of heart; and in every danger and trouble seek protection, comfort, and direction, in the ordinances of God, and in the society of his ministers and people. For these things will do far more towards making us happy, than all the splendor and luxury of a court, or the most absolute and extensive dominion, and royal or imperial dignity.

NOTES.

CHAP. XX. V. 1, 2. David, having been in so great danger at Naioth, and wonderfully rescued, fled from thence, and hastily repaired to Jonathan, to confer with him on the state of his affairs: but Jonathan was disposed to attribute his father's attempts against David to distemper, or to sudden sallies of passion, rather than to a fixed purpose of murdering him. After Saul had sworn not to slay David, (Note, 19:4—7.) it may be supposed he had said no more to Jonathan on that subject, though he confided all his other affairs to him; and therefore Jonathan could scarcely believe that he harbored such base designs: and perhaps, he had not heard of Saul's late violent attempts against David. (Notes, 19: 11—24.)

V. 3. David solemnly called God to witness, that in criminating Saul he did not go upon doubtful surmises; and that it was as certain in itself as that "the LORD lived," and that he was as sure as Jonathan could be of his own existence, that a design was formed against his life; which constrained him to renounce the service of Saul, and consult his own safety. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 5—7. David suggested this expedient, to convince Jonathan of Saul's intentions, and to shew that he was forced into the measures which he afterwards adopted.—Saul still observed the externals of religion; and at the new moons entertained his family and chief officers, at a feast upon a sacrifice. Hitherto David had filled his place there; but on this occasion he purposed to be absent, to make trial of Saul: for, as he was evidently destitute of affection for him, if he were very angry, it must arise from his being deprived of an opportunity to do him mischief.

8 Therefore thou shalt [o] deal kindly with thy servant; for [p] thou hast brought thy servant into a covenant of the LORD with thee: notwithstanding, [q] if there be in me iniquity, slay me thyself; for [r] why shouldest thou bring me to thy father?

9 And Jonathan said, Far be it from thee: for if I knew certainly that evil were determined by my father to come upon thee, [s] then would I not tell it thee?

10 Then said David to Jonathan, Who shall tell me? or what if thy father [t] answer thee roughly?

11 And Jonathan said unto David, Come, and let us go out into the field. And they went out both of them into the field.

12 And Jonathan said unto David, [u] O LORD God of Israel, when I have *sounded my father about to-morrow any time, or the third day, and, behold, if there be good toward David, and I then send not unto thee, and [†] shew it thee;

13 [v] The LORD do so and much more to Jonathan: but if it please my father to do thee evil, then I will shew it thee, and send thee away, that thou mayest go in peace; and [x] the LORD be with thee, as [y] he hath been with my father.

14 And thou shalt not only, while yet I live, shew me [z] the kindness of the LORD, that I die not;

15 But also [a] thou shalt not cut off thy kindness from my house for ever: no, not when the LORD hath cut off the enemies of David, every one from the face of the earth.

16 So Jonathan [‡] made a covenant with the house of David, saying, [b] Let the LORD even require it at the hand of David's enemies.

17 And Jonathan caused David to swear again, [§] because he loved him: [c] for he loved him as he loved his own soul.

18 Then Jonathan said to David, To-morrow is the [d] new moon; and thou shalt be missed, because thy seat will be [‖] empty.

19 And when thou hast stayed three days, then thou shalt go down [¶] quickly, and come to the place where thou didst [e] hide thyself [] when the business was in hand, and shalt remain by the stone [††] Ezel.

20 And I will shoot three arrows on the side thereof, as though I shot at a mark.

21 And, behold, I will send a lad, saying, Go, find out the arrows. If I expressly say unto the lad, Behold, the arrows are on this side of thee, take them;

It may be supposed, that David was invited to an annual family-sacrifice at Bethlehem: (Notes, 9:12—14. 16:1—5.) the excuse was sufficient; Jonathan was competent to grant David permission to be absent; and he engaged to return on the third day before even, to learn the result. In the meanwhile he purposed to conceal him in the fields about Gibeah. (Notes, 19,25. 19:19—24.)

V. 8. At Jonathan's instance, he and David had entered into a covenant in the name of JEHOVAH, being ratified by a solemn appeal to him, for their mutual encouragement in worshipping him and promoting his glory. (Note, 18:3,4.)—Yet David seems to have had some jealousy, lest Jonathan should warp from his constancy; especially lest the envenomed tongue of slander should injure him in his friend's esteem. 'If,' says he, 'I am guilty of any great offence which violates our covenant, such as treason against Saul; 'slay me thyself, but betray me not to thy father.' This was finely conceived to touch the tenderest feelings of Jonathan's heart.

V. 12, 13. In order to satisfy David, Jonathan appealed to God for his sincerity, and called on him to avenge his perfidy, if he betrayed his friend. Jonathan knew that Samuel had anointed David, and believed that he would certainly be king: and he had no thoughts of opposing the purpose of God, but rejoiced that so pious and able a person was chosen to reign over Israel; and prayed that the Lord might be with him, as he had been with Saul. For, as it became a dutiful son, he drew a veil over his father's misconduct, and only adverted to his former good management and success. (Notes, 11:4—15.)—The whole is emphatically the language of strong affection and emotion; and this appears in the broken and interrupted language employed.

V. 14—17. It has been very common in disputed successions, for the reigning prince to clear the title of his own family, by cutting off all competitors: Jonathan therefore prudently proposed to extend the personal covenant, before made with David, to their posterity also. He readily renounced all pretensions to the kingdom for himself and his children; and only desired, that he and they might be numbered among the friends of David and his family, when all his enemies had been destroyed.—When we consider David's distress, Saul's enmity, and Jonathan's prospects, we can never sufficiently admire the strength of his faith, and the force of his disinterested love. (Notes, 18:1. John 15:12—16.) It is observable that Jonathan did not desire, that the Lord should require it of David or his posterity, if any failure took place, but "at the hand of David's enemies."

V. 19. It must be supposed, that David went to Bethlehem: but the original words seem to intimate, that he should come three days successively, from the place of his retirement to the spot where he and Jonathan had discoursed on the business, in order to learn whether any thing had been discovered. Perhaps he stayed but one day at Bethlehem.

then come thou: for there is peace to thee, and * no hurt, as [f] the LORD liveth.

22 But if I say thus unto the young man, Behold, the arrows are beyond thee; go thy way: for the LORD hath sent thee away.

23 And as touching [g] the matter which thou and I have spoken of, behold [h] the LORD be between thee and me for ever.

[Practical Observations.]

24 ¶ So David hid himself in the field: and when the new moon was come, the [i] king sat him down to eat meat.

25 And the king sat upon his seat, [j] as at other times, even upon a seat by the wall: and Jonathan arose, and Abner sat by Saul's side, and David's place was empty.

26 Nevertheless Saul spake not any thing that day: for he thought, Something hath befallen him, [k] he is not clean; surely he is not clean.

27 And it came to pass on the morrow, which was the second day of the month, that David's place was empty; and Saul said unto Jonathan his son, [l] Wherefore cometh not [m] the son of Jesse to meat, neither yesterday nor to-day?

28 And Jonathan [n] answered Saul, David earnestly asked leave of me to go to Beth-lehem:

29 And he said, Let me go, I pray thee; for our family hath a sacrifice in the city; and [o] my brother, he hath commanded me to be there: and now, if I have found favor in thine eyes, let me get away, I pray thee, and see my brethren: therefore he cometh not unto the king's table.

30 Then [p] Saul's anger was kindled against Jonathan, and he said unto him, [†] Thou son of the perverse rebellious woman, do not I know that thou hast chosen the son of Jesse to thine own confusion, and unto the confusion of thy mother's nakedness?

31 For as long as the son of Jesse liveth upon the ground, thou shalt not be established, nor thy kingdom: wherefore now [q] send and fetch him unto me, for he [‡] shall surely die.

32 And Jonathan answered Saul his father, and said unto him, [r] Wherefore shall he be slain? [s] what hath he done?

33 And Saul [t] cast a javelin at him to smite him: [u] whereby Jonathan knew that it was determined of his father to slay David.

34 So Jonathan arose from the table [v] in fierce anger, and did eat no meat the second day of the month: for [x] he was grieved for David, because his father had done him shame.

V. 20—22. In case Jonathan could not speak with David, because he was watched, or because of persons passing by; these signals were agreed on: and in case the last should be made, David must conclude, that his death was determined; and that the Lord required him to provide for his safety by concealing himself.

V. 25. When Saul entered the room, Jonathan arose, and took his seat next to him; and Abner probably, as a near relation of Saul and commander of his forces, sat next to Jonathan. —It must be supposed, that Saul had before this returned to Gibeah, and that the incidents here recorded took place there.

V. 26. Saul did not ascribe David's absence to a criminal cause: but he might have suspected that fear of his murderous rage, rather than any ceremonial uncleanness inadvertently contracted, had induced him to absent himself. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 27. As the exact time when the new moon happened was uncertain, it seems to have been customary to observe two days as festivals; so that those, who were unclean on the first day, might observe the second. (Note, Num. 28:11—15.) For many of these ceremonial uncleannesses lasted only till the evening. (Marg. Ref. —Lev. 15:)—Saul, in calling David "the son of Jesse," when he was his own son-in-law, expressed the contemptuous enmity of his heart. (Notes, 22:9,10. 25:10,11.)

V. 30. The terms used by Saul seem to contain the most scurrilous abuse, which the language afforded; especially implying, that Jonathan proved himself not to be his son, and that he disgraced his mother by taking David's part against him. (Marg. and Marg. Ref.)—Considering Saul's rank, and Jonathan's relation to him, his eminent services and excellent character, and the public and sacred occasion at which it occurred, this speech may give some idea of the furious passions which Saul indulged. (Notes, 27. 16:14. Jam. 3:3—6.)

V. 31. For as long, &c.] Saul doubtless knew that David had been anointed to be king, by the same authority as he himself had been: yet he opposed him with all his might, and vainly hoped to prevent the purpose of God by putting him to death! (Notes, Matt. 2:7—18.)

V. 32—34. (Marg. Ref.) When Jonathan had before reasoned with Saul, he was reduced to a better temper; but now he would not hearken to a word: and though, in order to induce Jonathan's concurrence in killing David, he professed a great zeal for his establishment in the kingdom; yet when his purposes were opposed, he madly attempted to kill Jonathan also!—He seems to have used a javelin instead of a sceptre; for he had it always ready at hand.

It has been suggested, that the words of these verses do not mean, that Saul cast a javelin at Jonathan; but only that "he had cast a javelin"

35 ¶ And it came to pass in the morning, that Jonathan went out into the field [y] at the time appointed with David, and a little lad with him.

36 And he said unto his lad, [z] Run, find out now the arrows which I shoot. And as the lad ran, he shot an arrow * behind him.

37 And when the lad was come to the place of the arrow which Jonathan had shot, Jonathan cried after the lad, and said, Is not the arrow beyond thee?

38 And Jonathan cried after the lad, [a] Make speed, haste, stay not. And Jonathan's lad gathered up the arrows, and came to his master.

39 But the lad knew not any thing: only Jonathan and David knew the matter.

at David, which Jonathan at this crisis recollected. It must, however, be admitted, that this is by no means an obvious construction of the original. Nor can it be readily thought, that merely a recollection of a fact which formerly had taken place, could induce Jonathan to leave his place "in fierce anger;" when he had, at this time, borne the most provoking language of his father without expressing any indignant perturbation; and had also, subsequent to some of Saul's attempts on David's life, calmly expostulated with Saul, and induced him to engage, by a solemn oath, that he would not slay David. (Note, 19:4—7.)—But the atrocity of such an attempt on the life of his own son, seems to some persons totally incredible. Yet Saul's stern and rigorous conduct, respecting Jonathan, after he had miraculously prevailed to rescue him and Israel from the greatest straits and disgrace, shews that the self-will and severity of his mind, had overcome, even at that favorable crisis, his natural affection. (Note, 14:36—44.) And the transient attempt of his furious rage, in attempting to murder his son, on the occasion recorded in these verses, bears no proportion to his subsequent deliberate, impious, and most barbarous murder of the priests, and their wives, and children; because they were supposed to favor David. (Notes, 22:11—19.) Nor can any thing be deemed too atrocious for a man to commit, whom God had given up, and left, in a kind of desperate madness, under the power of Satan, and of his own passions, till he plunged himself into destruction with his own hands. (Notes, 28:6—25. 31:3—6.)

V. 35—40. Marg. Ref.

V. 41, 42. Finding no one near, Jonathan seized the opportunity of one more interview with his beloved friend; who, in his conduct on this occasion, united all the respect and honor due to Jonathan's rank, with the most endeared affection and glowing gratitude: so that his sorrow even exceeded that of Jonathan's; as considering himself exiled from his country, separated from his wife and his friend, and excluded from the ordinances of God, and the society of his people. Nothing can be conceived more pathetic than this parting; and we do not find, that they met more than once afterwards in this world. (Notes, 23:16—18.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—23.

Next to the consolations of true religion, nothing is more supporting to an afflicted mind than the converse of a pious friend: and it is highly desirable to avoid misconstructions of our conduct, by those whom we love and esteem; lest we should lose the comfort of their friendship, and throw temptations in their way.—Though it is painful to suffer for well doing, yet it is far better than to suffer for evil doing: for a clear conscience, an unblemished reputation, and the favor of God, are unspeakable advantages in trying circumstances. (Notes, 1 Pet. 3:13—18. 4:12—16.)—Friendly and pious persons are always backward to suspect others of deep malignity, but wish to impute their misconduct, where undeniable, to other causes: and pious children will veil the faults of their parents as far as consists with other duties, and speak as favorably of them as truth permits. But it is shameful when parents deliberately devise wickedness, which they must studiously conceal from their children, lest they should in them meet with obstacles to their criminal designs.—Evident danger, from the malice of men, renders it allowable for us to quit those places where we were employed, and to take proper measures for self-preservation: yet this ought, if possible, to be so conducted, that all impartial persons may perceive the necessity, and that "the LORD hath sent us away."—At some times it appears to us, that "there is but a step between us and death:" at all times we are sensible that it may be so, and should be expecting and preparing for that event; "for, as sure as the LORD liveth, and as our souls now live" in the body, we shall ere long remove into the eternal world.—But let dangers appear ever so imminent, we cannot die, till the purpose of God concerning us be accomplished; and, if we are believers, till "we have served our generation according to his will." (Note, Acts 13:24—37, conclusion.)—Every expedient should be tried to prevent open quarrels, and every appearance of evil guarded against: and by little things a certain judgment may often be formed of men's dispositions and intentions.—True friendship, grounded on the covenant of the Lord, will require nothing unreasonable, and refuse nothing equitable: yet it is apt to be jealous, when fidelity is put to severe trials, and there is danger lest slander and prejudice should interrupt its course. But, in reality, it rests on an immoveable basis, and possesses inconceivable force: it is stronger than death, and able to silence the voice of emulation, ambition, self-love, and even relative affection. Who then can comprehend the love of Jesus, who gave himself a sacrifice unto God for us rebellious and polluted sinners! And what ought to be the force and effects of our love to him!—The believer, being acquainted with the purpose of the Father respecting him, willingly submits to his authority, and rejoices in the prospect of his glory. Loving him as his own soul, he asks and receives repeated confirmations of his covenant of peace; readily performs whatever Jesus his Friend commands; and for his sake feels and expresses a cordial love for those who seek his glory and bear his image. Assured that all his enemies will perish, he desires the blessing of his love and his covenant of peace and friendship for his posterity and his relations: but while he prays for and weeps over such of them, as "reject the counsel of God against themselves;" he must separate from them, and join interests with those whom they despise and hate.

V. 24—42.

The formal professor is sometimes more constant at divine ordinances, than even the zealous believer: for discomposure of mind will occasionally prevent the attendance of a believer; while the purpose or the practice of the vilest crimes does not interrupt those, who trust in the mere external observance.—When envious and angry passions are indulged, men are pushed on by Satan into the most indecent excesses, without respect even to character, or the most sacred obligations: nor are they, at one moment, aware of the outrages, which they shall commit the next. Let us then fear giving place to the devil in the smallest degree.—Under great provocations the meekest cannot always refrain from anger; but when its emotions are felt, it is our wisdom to withdraw in silence: and it is generous to be more grieved for our insulted friends than for ourselves.—Every comfort on earth is counterpoised with some sorrow; and the dearest friends must experience the most painful separations. But Christians need not, and should not, "sorrow as men without hope:" for, being one with Christ, they are one with each other; and will soon meet in his presence to part no more, where all tears shall be wiped from their eyes.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXI. V. 1, 2. Some think Ahimelech is only another name for Ahiah; (14:3.) others, that Ahiah was dead, and that Ahimelech was his younger brother and successor in the priesthood. (Note, 14:2,3.)—The tabernacle, on some account, had been removed from Shiloh to Nob, a city of Benjamin, which was not originally allotted to the priests, but, as it seems, had afterwards been given to them. (Marg. Ref.) The ark, however, still remained at Kirjath-jearim. (Note, 7:1,2.)—David went to Nob to inquire of the Lord by the high priest, as he had before been accustomed to do; and to take farewell of him and of the sanctuary, as he had of Samuel and of Jonathan. But as he went without his accustomed retinue, and in apparent distress, Ahimelech probably suspected a breach between him and Saul, and was afraid to entertain him. This proved a snare to David; and lest he should be betrayed to Saul, or sent away destitute, he immediately framed a gross falsehood, which can by no means be excused, and which had most fatal consequences. (Notes, 22:9—19.)

V. 3—6. It seems wonderful, that David should not be able to procure bread for himself and his few attendants: but when Saul's rooted malice was made known, every one would be afraid or unwilling to entertain him. The necessity, however, was real and urgent: and Ahimelech supposed that in such a case they might eat the shew-bread, provided they were prepared in the same manner as the Israelites had been, for receiving the law from mount Sinai. (Ex. 19:15.) David having therefore satisfied him in this respect, and assured him that the young men were ceremonially clean, as well as holy in their general character, (as the words seem to imply;) and having pleaded, that the bread was now in a manner common, as other loaves had been placed upon the table in their stead; he gave them some of it, and they did eat. (Marg.—Note, Lev. 24:5—9.)—Jesus Christ in vindicating his disciples from the charge of breaking the sabbath, has also vindicated David in this matter; which proves that the positive institutions of religion may be dispensed with, when the preservation of life, or any other ur-

V. 7. Doeg had become a proselyte to the religion of Israel, perhaps to obtain preferment from Saul: (Notes, Ps. 52: title. 2—4.) and he was at this time performing some vow, which constrained his attendance at the sanctuary; but the word detained seems to imply, that he submitted to it as a painful restraint. (Note, Am. 8: 4—10.) Thus, however, he was acquainted with what passed between David and Ahimelech. (Notes, 22:9,10,22.)

V. 8, 9. Either David fled with such precipitation that he had not time to take his armor; or he left it, in order the better to conceal himself.—It seems that Goliath's sword was not so large, but that David could readily use it; and every time he drew it, it would remind him to bless God for his victory over the Philistines, and to trust in him to turn the arms of all his enemies against themselves. (Note, 17:50—53.)

V. 10—15. David expected that Saul would pursue him into every part of the land of Israel, and he was not disposed to form a party against him. Perhaps Achish deemed it politic to draw off so able a commander from the service of Saul, and had given him some intimations that he would protect him. But his officers judged otherwise: and, remembering his victory over Goliath, and the lavish commendations bestowed on him; (Note, 18:6—9.) and having heard, that he had been appointed to be "the king of the land;" they judged it impossible to fix him in their interest, and perhaps intimated that he should be put to death. (Note, 29:4—6.) This so alarmed David, that he feigned himself mad, and mimicked the actions of lunatics; which gave Achish the opportunity of sending him away, without either employing or hurting him: but it is not certain, whether he really thought him mad, or was willing to avail himself of appearances, to get out of the difficulty.—David's conduct was, in some respects, degrading to his character, and discovered a wavering in his faith and courage. He soon, however, recovered his confidence and composure; for on this occasion he composed the thirty-fourth and fifty-sixth Psalms, which are remarkable for strength of faith and fervor of piety. (Notes, Ps. 34: title. 4—6. 56: title. 1—4.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

When in the courts of kings a favorite falls, in general it is very rapidly: for out of fickleness, envy, malice, ambition, or fear, almost every one deserts or opposes him; disregarding the most unsullied reputation, eminent services, or personal obligations. It is therefore "better to trust in the LORD, than to put any confidence in princes." (Note, Ps. 118:8,9.) "Oppression maketh even a wise man mad;" (Note, Ec. 7:7.) and few conduct themselves in extreme difficulties, without taking some manifestly false step: we should therefore "watch and pray, that we may not enter into temptation;" and especially seek that strength of faith in God, which may overcome the fear of man.—Ingenious falsehoods often promise present security; but they ensure future disgrace and disquietude: and no impositions are more foolish and prejudicial, than those, which some men practise, in seeking counsel and comfort from the ministers of Christ.—Urgent necessity will justify us in neglecting, in particular instances, the rituals of religion: but we ought always to attend on holy things, in holiness of body and soul, and with a mind as abstracted from all earthly objects as possible.—The true believer is glad to go to the courts of the Lord, is reluctant to quit them, and mourns when confined from them: but the time-serving hypocrite is dragged to them, and detained in God's service, from secular motives, and is often forming schemes of wickedness when he seems to be worshipping. What wonder then, that "his sacrifice is an abomination to the LORD?" (Notes, Ps. 26:6—8. 27:4—6. 42:1—3. 63:1—4. 84:1—4,10. Prov. 15:8,9.)—The remembrance of former mercies not only revives gratitude, but inspires confidence and courage: and the word of God is that "sword of the Spirit," concerning which, in all temptations and conflicts, we may well say, "There is none like it."—In this world we must pass from one danger to another, and often meet with terror where we seek security; and those very honors, of which men are ambitious, and which are most gratify-

CHAP. XXII.

David escapes to Adullam, whither his kindred and others resort to him, 1, 2. At Mizpeh he commends his parents to the protection of the king of Moab, 3, 4. Admonished by the prophet Gad, he returns to the land of Judah, 5. Saul complains that his servants are unfaithful, 6—8. Doeg accuses Ahimelech; who is sent for with the priests, and answers the charge, 9—16. Saul's soldiers refusing to slay the priests at his command, Doeg executes it; and destroys their city with their wives and children, 17—19. Abiathar escapes to David, who blames himself, and assures him of protection, 20—23.

DAVID [a] therefore departed thence, and escaped to [b] the cave Adullam: and when his brethren and all his father's house heard it, they went down thither to him.

2 And every one that was [c] in distress, and every one that was * in debt, and every one that was † discontented, gathered themselves unto him; and he became [d] a captain over them: and there were with him about four hundred men.

3 And David went thence to [e] Mizpeh of Moab: and he said unto [f] the king of Moab, [g] Let my father and my mother, I pray thee, come forth, and be with you, [h] till I know what God will do for me.

4 And he brought them before the king of Moab: and they dwelt with him all the while that David was [i] in the hold.

5 And the prophet [j] Gad said unto David, Abide not in the hold; [k] depart, and get thee into the land of Judah. Then David departed, and came into the forest of Hareth.

ing at the time, expose them to manifold disadvantages and perils: nor can we expect our situation to be better, while the best of characters are so inconsistent and defective. But we may "trust the LORD at all times;" he will supply our wants, and never forsake us notwithstanding our lamented infirmities: he will not leave the lives of his people in the hands of their enemies, nor their souls in disconsolation: and the more simply we depend on him and obey him, the more comfortably and surely we shall walk through this troublesome world, to that "rest which is reserved for the people of God."

NOTES.

CHAP. XXII. V. 1, 2. David, being unable to secure himself by flight, and finding that none would venture to harbor him, hid himself in a cave. (Note, Ps. 142: title.) Thither his relations resorted to him for protection from the rage of Saul, and to afford him assistance: along with them also came a number of persons of broken fortunes and unsettled minds, of whom he formed a small army. But they acted entirely upon the defensive, and indeed became protectors of the country: and probably David's instructions, devotions, and example, produced a great change in the temper and behavior of the larger part of them. (Marg. Ref.—Notes, 25:7, 8,14—17. 30:22—25. Judg. 11:3.)

V. 3, 4. The king of Moab, being at variance with Saul, was favorable to David; perhaps the more so, as David was descended from a Moabitess. (Ruth 4:13—17.) With him, however, he procured a retreat for his aged parents. (Note, 2 Sam. 8:2.)

V. 5. It is probable that Gad had been educated in the schools of the prophets under Samuel's tuition; (Marg. Ref. j. Note, 10:5,6.) and knowing that David was anointed to be king, he seems to have attended him in his distresses. By him the Lord commanded David not to abide at Mizpeh, which bordered on Moab; (Note, Judg. 11:9—11.) or in any distant fortified place: but to return into the land of Judah, that he might not be alienated from his brethren, or his men enticed to idolatry; that his faith might be exercised and increased; and that he still might perform some service to his country. (Note, 23:1—6.)

V. 6. Saul had pitched his tent, or set up his standard, near Gibeah, upon some eminence; (for so the word Ramah signifies;) and with a spear in his hand he seemed to menace vengeance against all who did not join him in persecuting David. (Note, 20:32,33.)

V. 7, 8. This language of Saul is very expressive of rage and jealousy. He took it for granted that David had conspired against him. His pious, amiable, and dutiful son also was accused of being the ringleader in the conspiracy; because he would not assist in the murder of an excellent man, whom he greatly loved! Nay, the people in general, and his own tribe in particular, had conspired against him, and had no compassion on him, and were blind to their own interests; merely because they were not so furious against David as he was! (Notes, 16:14. 20:30—33.)—It is probable that Saul had heard that Jonathan had made a covenant with David; and, not being able to learn the particulars, he suspected that treason was implied in it. Perhaps Jonathan kept at a greater distance, and was more reserved than before.

9 Then answered [q] Doeg the Edomite, (which was set over the servants of Saul,) and said, I saw the son of Jesse coming to Nob, to Ahimelech the son of Ahitub.

10 And [r] he inquired of the LORD for him, and [s] gave him victuals, and gave him the sword of Goliath the Philistine.

11 Then the king [t] sent to call Ahimelech the priest, the son of Ahitub, and all his father's house, the priests that were in Nob: and they came all of them to the king.

12 And Saul said, Hear now, [u] thou son of Ahitub. And he answered, * Here I am, my lord.

13 And Saul said unto him, [v] Why have ye conspired against me, thou and the son of Jesse, in that thou hast given him bread, and a sword, and hast inquired of God for him, that he should rise against me, to lie in wait, as at this day?

14 Then Ahimelech answered the king, and said, And [x] who is so faithful among all thy servants as David, which is [y] the king's son-in-law, and [z] goeth at thy bidding, and is honorable in thine house?

15 Did I then begin to inquire of God for him? be it far from me: let not the king impute any thing unto his servant, nor to all the house of my father: [a] for thy servant knew nothing of all this, † less or more.

16 And the king said, [b] Thou shalt surely die, Ahimelech, [c] thou and all thy father's house.

17 And the king said unto the ‡footmen that stood about him, Turn and [d] slay the priests of the LORD; because their hand also is with David, and because they knew when he fled, and did not shew it to me. But the servants of the king [e] would not put forth their hand to fall upon the priests of the LORD.

18 And the king said to Doeg, Turn thou, and fall upon the priests. And [f] Doeg the Edomite turned, and [g] he fell upon the priests, and slew on that day [h] fourscore and five persons that did wear [i] a linen ephod.

V. 9, 10. There was no good reason why Doeg should at all mention Ahimelech's conduct, which he knew did not proceed from malice: but if he must report it, he should have declared, how Ahimelech was imposed upon by David, and that he intended to shew respect to Saul in that very action. (Notes, 21:1—9.) But on the contrary, he spoke as if David came to take Ahimelech's advice about his subsequent proceedings, and as if Ahimelech was joined in a conspiracy with David against Saul; though nothing could be more contrary to the truth than this insinuation! Doeg therefore slandered Ahimelech, and bare false witness against him, though the general charges adduced accorded with facts. (Notes, Ex. 20:16. Matt. 26:57—62.)—It is observable, that Doeg, after Saul's example, did not deign to call David by his name, but contemptuously spoke of him, as "the son of Jesse." (8,13. 20:27,30,31.)

V. 13. Inquired of God, &c.] Saul, by this language, almost in direct terms, charged God himself with counselling a traitor by his high priest, how to prevail against his sovereign! (Notes, Ec. 9:1—3. John 12:9—11.)—As Ahimelech did not deny this part of the charge, it may be concluded to be true, though not mentioned in the narrative.

V. 14—16. In Ahimelech's ready attendance, with all his brethren, and in his answer to Saul, we have the conduct and language of conscious innocence. David's reputation for fidelity and capacity was established: his near relation to Saul, as having married his daughter, his prompt obedience to him, and his honorable services to Israel, were well known: Ahimelech had been used to inquire of the Lord for him, as a public character: he meant no harm, knew nothing of what had passed, and abhorred the thought of conspiring against his prince; and therefore trusted he should be honorably acquitted.—It is observable that he generously concealed David's imposition, though the mention of it would have greatly tended to exculpate himself.—But Saul was forsaken by God, and given up to Satan and his own malignant passions, and would hearken to nothing but the suggestions of revenge and jealousy.

V. 17. Saul madly and impiously resolved to slay all the priests of the line of Eli; because he supposed, contrary to proof, that one had been guilty: and he seems to have sent for the whole company, with this malignant intention! (11) He scorned to lay hands on an individual; (Note, Esth. 3:6.) and he apparently exulted in revenging himself on "the priests of the LORD." Yet his guards, or running footmen, (Marg. Ref.) so revered the sacerdotal character, and were so convinced that the priests were innocent, that, though they might themselves expect to feel the weight of their enraged prince's furious resentment, they expressly refused to execute his cruel command. A singular instance of obedience to God, rather than to man! (Note, Acts 4:13—22.)

V. 18. The priests did not generally wear the linen ephod, except when actually officiating: but perhaps the whole company was arrayed in sacerdotal garments, as appearing before the king, and as intending thus to shew their respect to him.—Thus an Edomite, of base character in other respects, without provocation or opposition, with his own hands, slew eighty-five priests of the Lord at one time: and both he and Saul gloried in the bloody execution!—This horrid massacre, however, accomplished the sentence

19 And [j] Nob, the city of the priests, smote he with the edge of the sword; both [k] men and women, children and sucklings, and oxen, and asses, and sheep, with the edge of the sword.

20 ¶ And [l] one of the sons of Ahimelech, the son of Ahitub, named Abiathar, [m] escaped, and fled after David.

21 And Abiathar shewed David, that Saul had slain the LORD's priests.

22 And David said unto Abiathar, I knew it that day, when Doeg the Edomite was there, that he would surely tell Saul: [n] I have occasioned the death of all the persons of thy father's house.

CHAP. XXIII.

David, inquiring of God by Abiathar, defends Keilah and smites the Philistines, 1—6. Saul purposes to besiege him in Keilah; but the Lord shewing David the treachery of the men of Keilah, he flees to Ziph, where Jonathan meets and comforts him, 7—18. The Ziphites inform Saul concerning him, who closely pursues him to Maon; but is called off by an invasion of the Philistines, 19—28. David dwells at En-gedi, 29.

THEN they told David, saying, Behold, the Philistines fight against [a] Keilah, and they [b] rob the threshing-floors.

2 Therefore David [c] inquired of the denounced against the house of Eli. (Notes, 2: 31—36. 3:12—14.)

V. 19. Doeg, doubtless by Saul's authority, not satisfied with the blood of the priests, treated the inhabitants of Nob as the devoted enemies of God, and with more severity than Saul had exercised towards the Amalekites; nay, to the full import of the command which he had received in that respect! (Notes, 15:1—3,8,9.) No doubt they meant to intimidate all the Israelites, from shewing the least favor to David. (Notes, Ps. 52: title. 1—4.) 'It was excellently 'said by Justin Martyr, Let us pray that kings 'and rulers, together with the royal power, may 'be found having a sober mind.' Bp. Patrick.

V. 22. Upon recollection David had feared these consequences from Doeg's known character. (Notes, 21:1—9.) His feelings must have been exceedingly painful, when he considered the lie which he had told, as one occasion of this fatal catastrophe.—By this event, however, so terrible to the priests, and so lamentable to Israel, David obtained the presence of the high priest, which afterwards proved a great comfort and benefit to him. (Notes, 23:1—6,9—13. 28: 6 30:7—10.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Oppression often forces men into measures, to which they were entirely averse, and deprives the community of the services of its most useful members: yet the Lord amidst all dangers preserves his people for their appointed services. He can promote their good by the most contemptible and the meanest instruments; and the Son of David receives all who come to him, however sinful and miserable: he changes them all into a holy people, and employs them in his service; (Note, Is. 11:6—9.) and those who would reign with him, must be contented first to suffer with him.—True piety increases and purifies natural affection; and teaches men, however occupied or distressed, to be tender of their aged parents; and to be more ready to meet hardship or danger themselves, than to expose them to it. —In all our difficulties we should wait till we know what "God will do for us;" seeing none of our enemies can go further than he is pleased to permit them: we should therefore guard against excessive fear, venture readily into any place whither duty calls us, and, without yielding to resentment or despondency, persevere in looking out for opportunities of usefulness.—The progress of human nature, instigated by Satan's temptations, is from bad to worse with increasing rapidity. Conscience, fear, and shame give less and less resistance, and every passion grows more and more exorbitant. Envy, malice, and jealousy torment the soul with real miseries, though arising from unreal causes, or groundless apprehensions: the wretch, who is under the dominion of those diabolical passions, suspects every one of enmity and treachery, breaks through all the bonds of honor and conscience, and is hurried on to the most furious and bloody revenge. Unhappy is it for mankind when such persons possess absolute authority; as the most sacred character, unshaken fidelity, conscious innocency, convincing arguments, and respectful assurances, form no security to any one, who is become obnoxious to them! The most harmless and friendly actions become constructive treason, and "Thou shalt surely die," silences every plea. Nay, the death of one, or of a few, seems a paltry revenge to a proud tyrant! Sacrifices large as his rage and power may be expected, for nothing else can appease his fury. And if some be found willing to venture his indignation, rather than abet his cruelty and impiety; others will be glad to purchase preferment at any price.—Let us then bless God for a mild, equitable, and limited government, and study to fill up our places in society consistently with our peculiar advantages: and may the Lord continue them to our remotest posterity, and extend the same to all the nations of the earth!—He often employs companions in distress, to comfort and protect each other; and, being exposed to the same dangers and enemies, they should combine for their mutual defence. Thus believers, being hated for Christ's sake, find safety under his protection; and ought to lay aside all personal animosities and useless controversies, to unite against their common enemies.—We may also learn from this narration, that needlessly to report the truth to the disadvantage of others, often springs from malice, and produces mischief; that a partial statement of facts is effectually bearing false witness; and that a generous mind is unwilling to repeat the faults of others; even for his own vindication. We should likewise consider, that it is very painful to a feeling heart to occasion evil to others, especially by misconduct: and as unexpected bad consequences may arise from our actions, we should learn to walk the more circumspectly; and always to be ready for that stroke, which hurries men into eternity before they are aware. For "the wicked is driven away in his wickedness, but the righteous hath hope in his death"

Lord, saying, Shall I go and smite these Philistines? And the Lord said unto David, Go and smite the Philistines, and save Keilah.

3 And David's men said unto him, [d] Behold, we be afraid here in Judah: how much more then if we come to Keilah, against the armies of the Philistines?

4 Then David inquired of the Lord [e] yet again. And the Lord answered him and said, Arise, go down to Keilah; [f] for I will deliver the Philistines into thine hand.

5 So David and his men went to Keilah, and fought with the Philistines, and brought away their cattle, and smote them with a great slaughter. So David saved the inhabitants of Keilah.

6 And it came to pass, [g] when Abiathar the son of Ahimelech fled to David to Keilah, that he came down with [h] an ephod in his hand.

7 ¶ And it was told Saul that David was come to Keilah. And Saul said, [i] God hath delivered him into mine hand: for [j] he is shut in, by entering into a town that hath gates and bars.

8 And Saul called all the people together to war, to go down to Keilah, to besiege David and his men.

9 And David [k] knew that Saul secretly practised mischief against him; and he said to Abiathar the priest, [l] Bring hither the ephod.

10 Then said David, O Lord God of Israel, thy servant hath certainly heard that Saul seeketh to come to Keilah, to [m] destroy the city for my sake.

11 Will the men of Keilah deliver me up into his hand? will Saul come down, as thy servant hath heard? O Lord God of Israel, I beseech thee, tell thy servant. [n] And the Lord said, He will come down.

12 Then said David, Will the men of Keilah * deliver me and my men into the hand of Saul? and the Lord said, [o] They will deliver thee up.

13 Then David and his men, which were about [p] six hundred, arose and departed out of Keilah, and went whithersoever they could go. And it was told Saul that David was escaped from Keilah; and he forbare to go forth.

14 And David abode in the wilderness in strong holds, and remained in [q] a mountain in the [r] wilderness of Ziph: and [s] Saul sought him every day; [t] but God delivered him not into his hand.

15 And David saw that Saul was come out to seek his life: and David was in the wilderness of Ziph in a wood.

NOTES.

Chap. XXIII. V. 1—6. David was at this time an inspired writer of the Holy Scriptures; yet the Lord spoke to him by his prophet, and then by the high priest, for the honor of his own institutions. David, having been anointed to be king, considered himself as the protector of Israel, and was ready to employ his men in any service, to which the Lord should please to appoint him: and Saul, occupied almost exclusively in persecuting David, so neglected the protection of Israel, that the depredations of the Philistines were exceedingly distressing, and met with no effectual resistance. (Marg. Ref. b.)—It is doubtful, whether David at this time inquired of God by the prophet Gad, or by Abiathar. It seems from the text, that Abiathar did not come to him, till he came to Keilah; yet perhaps this only means the neighborhood of that city. No doubt, Abiathar brought the high priest's sacred ephod with Urim and Thummim along with him. (22: 20—23. Notes, Ex. 28:15—30.)—It seems that David and his men having vanquished the Philistines, pursued them into their own country, and thence brought away the cattle.

V. 7, 8. Saul, forgetting all the multiplied proofs which had been given, that the Lord was with David, considered the slight circumstance of his entering into a fenced city, as an evidence that "God had delivered him into his hand!" (Notes, 14. 24:8—15.) The generous patriotism of David, in defending his country, while persecuted by his prince and many of the people as an outlaw, had no effect on the rancorous heart of Saul.

V. 9—13. David perhaps thought, that he could defend this fenced city against Saul, if the inhabitants would be firm in his interests. But, as the cruel massacre of the inhabitants of Nob must have alarmed them with the dread of similar treatment, he could not confide in their assurances; and, inquiring of God, he was informed that they would purchase peace by delivering him up, though perhaps they were not then meditating such ingratitude and treachery. He therefore left the city, to secure himself from danger, and them from temptation and sin.—The express and repeated answers given to the inquiries, which David made by the high priest, were in fact a divine attestation, that he was appointed to the kingdom. (Notes, 1—6. Ex. 28: 30. Num. 27:21.) Probably these were given in an audible voice from some tent, where the ephod was generally placed, and before which the inquiry was made. The prayer which David used, perhaps by the mouth of Abiathar, in inquiring of God, may be considered as an example of the manner in which pious princes conducted that solemn and important concern.

Six hundred. (13) David's company had increased, perhaps in consequence of his success in his patriotic expedition. (22:2.)

V. 14. The disappointment of Saul's presumptuous confidence, that "God had delivered David into his hand," is here emphatically noted. (Note, 7,8.)

16 And Jonathan Saul's son arose, and went to David into the wood, and [u] strengthened his hand in God.

17 And he said unto him, [x] Fear not; for the hand of Saul my father [y] shall not find thee: and [z] thou shalt be king over Israel, and [a] I shall be next unto thee: and [b] that also Saul my father knoweth.

18 And [c] they two made a covenant before the LORD. And David abode in the wood, and Jonathan went to his house.

[Practical Observations.]

19 ¶ Then came up [d] the Ziphites to Saul to Gibeah, saying, Doth not David hide himself with us in strong holds in the wood, in the hill of [e] Hachilah, which is * on the south of † Jeshimon?

20 Now therefore, O king, come down, according to [f] all the desire of thy soul to come down; and [g] our part shall be to deliver him into the king's hand.

21 And Saul said, [h] Blessed be ye of the LORD; for ye have compassion on me.

22 Go, I pray you, prepare yet, and know and see his place where his ‡ haunt is, and who hath seen him there: for it is told me that he dealeth very subtlely.

23 See therefore, and [i] take knowledge of all the lurking places where he hideth himself, and come ye again to me with the certainty, and I will go with you: and it shall come to pass, if he be in the land, that [k] I will search him out throughout all [l] the thousands of Judah.

24 And they arose, and went to Ziph before Saul: but David and his men were in the wilderness of [m] Maon, in the plain on [n] the south of Jeshimon.

25 Saul also and his men went to seek him; and they told David: wherefore he came down § into a rock, and abode in the wilderness of Maon. And when Saul heard that, he pursued after David in the wilderness of Maon.

26 And Saul went on this side of the mountain, and David and his men on that side of the mountain: and [o] David made haste to get [p] away for fear of Saul; for Saul and his men compassed David and his men round about to take them.

27 But [r] there came a messenger unto Saul, saying, Haste thee, and come; for [s] the Philistines have ‖ invaded the land.

28 Wherefore Saul returned from pursuing after David, and went against the Philistines: therefore they called that place ¶ Sela-hammahlekoth.

29 And David went up from thence, and dwelt in strong holds at [t] En-gedi.

V. 16. Jonathan would doubtless converse with David, concerning the promises, power, faithfulness, and love of God, and what he had learned, believed, and experienced of them; which tended to strengthen his faith, to encourage his hope, and to invigorate his confidence in God, and to induce calm submission to his will. (Notes, Is. 35:3,4. Luke 22:39—46. 5:43. Col. 1:9—14.)

V. 17, 18. (Marg. Ref.)—I shall be next unto thee. (17) This was Jonathan's conjecture, grounded on David's friendship, but not on the word of God, who had appointed things otherwise. Jonathan's cheerful acquiescence would be a great satisfaction to David's mind.—Thus these endeared friends finally parted, as to this world. (Note, 20:41,42.)

V. 19—21. (Marg. Ref.) The Israelites in general were, it seems, averse to Saul's persecution of David, and backward to give him intelligence or assistance: he therefore deemed himself an injured and unfortunate man, whom none of them pitied; and these treacherous Ziphites were considered as his only friends!—(Notes, 7,8. 22:7,8.)—Saul still retained the language of piety while perpetrating the most atrocious crimes. (Notes, Ps. 36:1—4.)

V. 22—25. Had Saul marched directly along with the Zephites, he probably would have come on David before he was aware: but Saul's delay, while he sought to make the more sure of him, gave David an opportunity of retreating.—Thousands of Judah. (23) *Marg. V. 26—28. When Saul's army had nearly surrounded David's little company, tidings were brought that the Philistines had invaded the land: (marg.) and either their invasion was very formidable, and the case extremely urgent; or Saul feared the people's resentment, if the Philistines ravaged the country, while he was destroying its defender. He therefore retired, doubtless full of rage and vexation, and David "escaped as a bird out of the snare of the fowler;" the Philistines being the instruments of God in his preservation.—He was also preserved from the painful necessity of fighting in his own defence, against his persecutors. (Notes, 26:1,2. Ps. 54: title. 1—3.) The place was called the rock of divisions, as separating between David and Saul, on this emergency. (Marg.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—18.

The prayers of true believers are a barrier against hostile invasions; but persecution brings down the judgments of God upon guilty nations. No ill usage, however, should prompt us to revenge ourselves, or prevent us from doing good, as we have an opportunity and ability,

CHAP. XXIV.

David in a cave, having Saul entirely in his power, cuts off his skirt, but spares his life, 1—7. He proves his innocency to Saul, 8—15. Saul owns his fault, requires an oath of David, and departs, 16—22.

AND it came to pass, [a] when Saul was returned from * following the Philistines, that [b] it was told him, saying, Behold, David is in [c] the wilderness of Engedi.

2 Then Saul took [d] three thousand chosen men out of all Israel, and [e] went to seek David and his men upon [f] the rocks of the wild goats.

3 And he came to the sheep-cotes by the way, where was a cave; and Saul went in [g] to cover his feet: and [h] David and his men remained in the sides of the cave.

4 And [i] the men of David said unto him, Behold the day of which the LORD said unto thee, Behold, [j] I will deliver thine enemy into thine hand, that thou mayest do to him as it shall seem good unto thee. Then David arose, and cut off the skirt of † Saul's robe privily.

5 And it came to pass afterward, that [k] David's heart smote him, because he had cut off Saul's skirt.

6 And he said unto his men, [l] The LORD forbid that I should do this thing unto my master, the LORD's anointed, to stretch forth mine hand against him, seeing he is the anointed of the LORD.

7 So David ‡ stayed his servants with these words, and [m] suffered them not to rise against Saul. But Saul rose up out of the cave, and went on his way.

even when we are sure to meet with ingratitude, and to be exposed to further trouble, by so doing. Thus Jesus lived and died, "and left us an example that we should follow his steps."—The more particularly we seek direction from God in fervent prayer, and the more carefully we consult the sacred Scriptures, the safer will be our path.—In difficult circumstances we shall often find the unbelief of our professed helpers a very discouraging hindrance: but the most effectual way of answering their objections, and securing their assistance, is to refer them to the precepts and promises of God.—No ties of honor, gratitude, or affection, can secure the heart, under powerful temptations: nay, we none of us know how we should act, if assailed by the terrors of impending death, and left without the immediate supports of divine grace. He, who made the human heart, can alone estimate its deceitfulness: we ought not therefore to confide in our own resolutions, or in the assurances of others; but depend on the Lord to guide and keep us: and if we meet with evil treatment, we need not wonder, and ought not to revile or murmur.—The kindness of those friends, whom he raises up where we could least expect them, may well countervail the malice of our enemies, and the ingratitude and fickleness of those whom we have served. And if the converse of one friend can, at one interview, give so much comfort and strength to our hearts; (Note, 2 Cor. 7:5—7.) what may not be expected from the continual supports, and daily visits, and powerful love, of the sinner's Savior, the believer's covenanted Friend? And what will heaven be, where perfect and universal friendship reigns, without interruption, separation, or alloy? Let us then continually seek the renewed ratification of the covenant of grace, and cultivate the friendship of the Lord and of his people. Our most rational and pleasing expectations of another kind may be frustrated; all other unions must be dissolved; but here disappointment and disunion can have no place for ever.

V. 19—29.

The influence of wickedness, in those who fill exalted stations, widely and fatally diffuses itself among their inferiors, even throughout whole nations: many will pay court to them, by aiding their sinful purposes; nay, some will pride themselves in resembling them in their vices! and those only will be treated as friends, who in fact are their most destructive enemies. Those therefore who are distinguished by this dangerous preeminence, have additional reasons for bridling their passions, and exercising themselves unto godliness; lest they should by their crimes occasion the ruin of multitudes, and thus aggravate their own condemnation.—The language of piety, separate from its substantial effects, can only amuse and deceive those who hear, and those who use it.—Malice is ever restless and tormenting; and though disappointed, it still hopes for success: but numbers, power, rage, and subtlety, can never destroy those whom God protects. His methods of preserving his people are unnumbered. (Note, Acts 9:3—6.) He sometimes leads them into the most imminent danger, to endear their deliverance, and to increase the torment of their persecuting foes. And he can employ one enemy, contrary to his intention, to deliver us from another still more formidable: or he can fill the hands of persecutors with other work, so that they are constrained to postpone their malicious purposes. But we must not expect much comfort in this evil world, which uses the best of men in so base a manner, and which once "crucified the Lord of glory." We should therefore study to pass through it as pilgrims; and to leave it, as those who are departing to a better country, that is, a heavenly.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXIV. V. 1—3. When Saul had repelled the invasion of the Philistines, he selected three thousand of his troops, and resumed his pursuit of David, who had taken refuge among some uncultivated rocks, inhabited only by wild goats: and Saul, supposing him at a distance, retired into a cave, while his men were absent. But in this very cave, David and his company lay concealed. Thus God delivered Saul into David's hand: (Note, 23:7,8.) he was absolutely in his power, and could have made no resistance; nay, the manner of his death might have been concealed, till David had taken proper measures to secure himself, and to seize the throne. (Notes, Ps. 57: 142: titles.)

V. 4—7. David's men urged very plausibly, that God had brought his enemy into his power, in order to fulfil his promises to him: yet they

8 ¶ David also arose afterward, and went out of the cave, and cried after Saul, saying, [n] My lord the king. And when Saul looked behind him, [o] David stooped with his face to the earth, and bowed himself.

9 And David said to Saul, [p] Wherefore hearest thou men's words, saying, Behold, David seeketh thy hurt?

10 Behold, this day thine eyes have seen, how that the LORD had delivered thee to-day into mine hand in the cave: and some [q] bade me kill thee: but mine eye spared thee; and I said, I will not put forth mine hand against my lord; for he is [r] the LORD's anointed.

11 Moreover, [s] my father, see, yea, see the skirt of thy robe in my hand: for in that I cut off the skirt of thy robe, and killed thee not, know thou and see, that there is [t] neither evil nor transgression in mine hand, and I have not sinned against thee: yet [u] thou huntest my soul to take it.

12 The [x] LORD judge between me and thee, and the LORD avenge me of thee; but [y] mine hand shall not be upon thee.

13 As saith the proverb of the ancients, [z] Wickedness proceedeth from the wicked, but mine hand shall not be upon thee.

14 After whom is [a] the king of Israel come out? after whom dost thou pursue? [b] after a dead dog, [c] after a flea?

15 The LORD therefore [d] be Judge, and judge between me and thee, and see, and plead my cause, and * deliver me out of thine hand.

16 And it came to pass, when David had made an end of speaking these words unto Saul, that Saul said, [e] Is this thy voice, my son David? and [f] Saul lifted up his voice and wept.

17 And he said to David, [g] Thou art more righteous than I: for [h] thou hast rewarded me good, whereas I have rewarded thee evil.

18 And thou hast shewed this day how that thou hast dealt well with me: forasmuch as when [i] the LORD had † delivered were greatly mistaken; as in reality the Lord intended to give David an opportunity of exercising faith, patience, and generous kindness; of shewing the tendency and efficacy of his religious principles, the tenderness of his conscience, and the stedfastness of his loyalty; for the confutation of his accusers, a rebuke to Saul, and an example to all who read it.—David had a promise of the kingdom, but no command to slay the reigning king, or promise that God would deliver Saul into his hand. (26:10. Notes, 1 Kings 11:37,40.)—Saul had been anointed by God's command, as well as made king over Israel in his providence: he had indeed been rejected; and David had been greatly injured, but he was not his own avenger. David's peculiar circumstances constrained him to defend himself, but not to slay Saul; whom he looked upon as his sovereign, and the LORD's anointed, and not as his rival and persecutor. (Note, 26:8—12.) He was satisfied with performing his present duty; he left his protection and future advancement to God; and he deemed it an atrocious offence to "stretch forth his hand," to hurt even so wicked a prince as Saul, and in defence of his own life. Nay, when he had privily cut off the skirt of Saul's robe, as a demonstration of what he could have done, his heart smote him, lest in this action he had failed of due respect to the LORD's anointed! (Note, 2 Sam. 24:10.) Neither would he allow his men to injure him; though they seem to have been so impatient for security and preferment, that he had much difficulty in restraining and appeasing them.

V. 8—15. It may be supposed, that David remained at so great a distance from Saul and his army, that he was in no danger of being immediately seized on by them; though Saul could both hear and see him. Yet, if Saul's heart should not be affected by his address, he would be more likely to crush him than before. But this, and all consequences, David trusted with God.—Nothing can be imagined more respectful, pathetic, and forcible, than his conduct and address on this occasion. He shewed all reverence to Saul as his prince, bowing himself before him to the earth: he called him respectfully, "My lord the king," and in token of affection, "My father," being his son-in-law: he avoided all reproaches, and sharp expostulations: he intimated that Saul's prejudice against him arose from slanderous reports; and reminded him, that he himself had been counselled to take away Saul's life, but would not do it. He adduced the most decisive evidence that he did not mean to injure him; while he repeatedly assured him that his hand should never be upon him. He mildly expostulated with him, on the injustice and unreasonableness of his conduct; and humbly represented himself as beneath the notice of so great a prince, who degraded himself in coming out "after a dead dog, a single flea," an imagined enemy equally insignificant. In illustration of his own conduct he quoted "the proverb of the ancients," that "wickedness proceedeth from the wicked," that men's actions manifest their dispositions; and if he had been a wicked person, his actions that day would have shewn it. At the same time he plainly and repeatedly warned Saul, that the Lord would judge between them, and both deliver him out of his hand, and avenge his cause upon him. (Notes, 26:13—20.)

The imperative or optative mood, employed in these verses, might perhaps, with more strict conformity to the Hebrew, be changed for the future tense indicative:—"The Lord will judge, ... will avenge, ... will be Judge, &c."

V. 16—22. These forcible words, and this generous behavior, produced a temporary conviction in Saul's mind, of David's excellency, the righteousness of his cause, and the certainty of his advancement; and consequently, that himself was deeply criminal, and in a ruinous path. Probably, he was in some measure convinced of these things at other times, but they now more deeply affected him; nor could he suppress his emotion, or refuse to acknowledge his convictions. Instead therefore of attempting to destroy David as he intended, his malice was arrested, and he both spoke well of him, foretold his establishment on the throne, and begged of the Lord to reward him for sparing his life; and he owned that he should not have behaved thus, if David had been in his power. Under this conviction Saul desired of David the security of an oath, that he would not, when king, extripate his posterity; and David was willing thus to bind himself to his duty. (Note, 2 Sam. 21:4—7.) But he did not ask Saul to swear to him, that he would no more seek his life; probably knowing that he did not duly regard the obligation of an oath: nor would he trust himself with him, being aware how little uch transient appearances could be depended on.—Saul's conduct in persecuting David, even when convinced of his excellency, and that he would be advanced to the throne, illustrates the behavior of the scribes and priests in their determined enmity to Christ, notwithstanding they could not resist the wisdom of his words, deny the reality of his miracles, or at all impeach his character. (Notes, Matt. 2:3—6. John 11:47,48. 12:9—11. Acts 5:33—39.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—7.

Wicked men are often interrupted in their evil courses; yet they return to them when the restraint is removed, as if delivered from trouble that they might commit more sins. (Note, Jer. 7:8—11.) But the Lord disappoints their malice; and by bringing them into danger, gives them manifest proof of their folly and wickedness. We should be very careful what interpretation we put upon events in Providence, and what conclusions we deduce from them; lest we mistake the opportunity of following our own inclinations, for an approbation of our conduct in so doing; and in doubtful cases we must neither judge by appearance, nor be determined by plausible arguments.—An accurate knowledge of the divine law, an established judgment, and a holy state of heart, are requisite to mark out the path of duty, in many important cases. But t is always safe to deny the suggestions of revenge, covetousness, ambition, impatience, or other selfish principles: it savors more of piety to interpret a providential dispensation as a trial of faith and patience, and an exercise of self-denial, than to consider it as a license for self-indulgence: and a tender conscience will be peculiarly afraid of specious temptations, and induce a man to "abstain from all appearance of evil."—We should perform all our relative duties from regard to the authority of GOD; when others violate his law in their conduct towards us, we must not do the same towards them; and in waiting for the performance of his promises we must use lawful means alone. Under the deepest injuries we are not allowed, and ought not to be inclined, to avenge ourselves; but after the example of David, and of David's Lord, we should "commit our cause to him that judgeth righteously." (Note, 1 Pet. 2:18—25.)—Magistracy is the ordinance of God, and confers dignity on those advanced to it, who, in all ordinary cases and lawful things, should be honored and obeyed; and if they abuse their trust, the Lord will execute vengeance upon them: and provided we have the opportunity, we should, along with the most loyal and unreserved submission in all things lawful, plainly warn them of their danger in this respect. If persecuted in one city we may flee to another, and use necessary means of self-preservation: but we must not lift up our hands, or adopt offensive measures, against those whom God has placed over us, though like even Saul or Nero. (Notes, Rom. 13:1—7.)

V. 8—22.

It is not enough that we avoid evil ourselves: we should use our influence to restrain others also, or we shall be chargeable before God for it.—Mild language and respectful behavior, even to wicked and injurious superiors, are ornamental to piety. We must not indeed flatter any one with the hope of impunity in sin: yet we may put the most candid construction on men's actions, and satisfy ourselves with manifesting our own innocence, modestly complaining of hard usage, and employing forcible arguments and pathetic expostulations. It is also more prudent to abate envy by seeking to appear inconsiderable, than to excite it by boasting of dignity, or excellence, or of our past services.—While we are thankful for having been hitherto preserved from open crimes, we cannot bind ourselves too strongly, in dependence on the grace of God, to avoid them for the time to come: for our conduct as Christians should form a contrast to that of the enemies of true religion; in order to convince all men on what principles we act, and that our cause is worthy of God. The noblest of all victories consists in "overcoming evil with good."—If men in eminent stations had a proper sense of the importance attached to their characters and conduct, it would keep them from debasing themselves by such mean pursuits, as they are often engaged in: and a due reflection on our rational powers, and the unspeakable value of our immortal souls, would have a similar effect upon us all.—Those who act conscientiously will find opportunities of confuting their revilers, and of being manifested in the consciences of their most determined enemies: and at length the Lord will plead and avenge their cause. CHAP. XXV.

Samuel dies, and is lamented and buried by all Israel; and David goes to Paran, 1. The character of Nabal, and of his wife Abigail, 2, 3. David sends to Nabal most respectfully requesting some provisions; but provoked by his answer, sets out to destroy him, 4—13. A servant warns Abigail, 14—17. She meets David with a present, and wisely pacifies him, 18—31. David blesses God for her interposition, and courteously dismisses her, 32—35. Yet, as they are not truly humbled or changed, sin and the world reign in their hearts: they acknowledge that they are not so good as some men, but will not confess how very criminal they are; they are more careful about their credit and interests in the world, than the forgiveness of their sins; and while they confess their own injustice, and their obligations to others, they leave it to the Lord to repay them.—Those, who are experimentally acquainted with the grace of God, will place little dependence on these appearances, especially in those, who have long sinned against the light of their own consciences: for there is great reason to fear that these transient affections also will subside, and leave the heart still harder than before.—The grace of God will teach us to forgive and be kind to our enemies, but not to trust those who have repeatedly deceived us: for malice often seems dead, when it is only dormant, and will ere long revive with double force. Yet, whether the Lord employ men, bind their hands, or awe and affect their hearts, so that they lose for a season their inclination to hurt us; the deliverance is from him, an evidence of his love, and an earnest of our final salvation.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXV. V. 1. If Samuel was eighteen years of age at the death of Eli, he must have been at least thirty-eight, when he vanquished the Philistines at Ebenezer. (Notes, 7:1,2.) But how many years elapsed, from that time, to his anointing Saul; how long he lived after Saul was made king; how long Saul survived him; or how long Saul reigned in all, are matters of conjecture or calculation, without any certain data to proceed upon. (Note, Acts 13:21.) Perhaps Saul survived Samuel three or four years.—Doubtless Samuel, to the end of his days, presided over the seminary of prophets, and, by his prayers, instructions, and example, was very useful in private; though he did not much intermeddle in public business. When he died, the people in general were deeply sensible of their loss, and of their sin and folly in rejecting him; which conviction the disastrous events of Saul's reign, and his capricious and tyrannical conduct, would enhance: so that collecting themselves together, they made general lamentations for him and honorably buried him.—Upon this event David removed into the wilderness of Paran, in part of which Israel wandered before they entered Canaan; (Marg. Ref. d;) perhaps concluding that Saul's malice would be now more unrestrained than ever.

V. 2. (Note, Job 1:3.)—Carmel.] Not mount Carmel in the north of Canaan in the lot of Asher, (Josh. 19:26. 1 Kings 18:19,42.) but another place of the same name belonging to Judah. (Josh. 15:55.)

V. 3—6. (Marg. Ref.) Of the house of Caleb. (3) כלבו (lege כלבי.) The LXX render it ανθρωπος κυνικος, A man like a dog; as if derived from כלב a dog.—That liveth, &c. (6) The words, in prosperity, are not in the original.—In this friendly, and respectful, and highly benevolent salutation, David seems to have spoken unadvisedly, in calling a sottish and luxurious wicked man, "him that liveth;" as if his own indigence scarcely deserved the name of life. (Note, 1 Thes. 3:6—10, v. 8.)

soever cometh to thine hand unto thy servants, and to [p] thy son David.

9 And when David's young men came, they spake to Nabal according to all those words in the name of David, and * ceased.

10 And Nabal answered David's servants, and said, [q] Who is David? and who is the son of Jesse? [r] There be many servants now a days that break away every man from his master.

11 [s] Shall I then take my bread, and my water, and my † flesh that I have killed for my shearers, and [t] give it unto men [u] whom I know not whence they be?

12 So David's young men turned their way, and went again, and [x] came and told him all those sayings.

13 And David said unto his men, [y] Gird ye on every man his sword. And they girded on every man his sword, and [z] David also girded on his sword, and there went up after David about four hundred men; [a] and two hundred abode by the stuff.

14 ¶ But one of the young men told Abigail, Nabal's wife, saying, Behold, David sent messengers out of the wilderness to salute our master; and he ‡ railed on them.

15 But the men were [b] very good unto us, and we were not ◊ hurt, neither missed we any thing, as long as we were conversant with them, when we were in the fields:

16 They were [c] a wall unto us both by night and day, all the while we were with them keeping the sheep.

17 Now therefore know and consider what thou wilt do; for [d] evil is determined against our master, and against all his household: for he is such [e] a son of Belial, [f] that a man cannot speak to him.

[Practical Observations.]

18 Then Abigail [g] made haste, and [h] took two hundred loaves, and two bottles of wine, and five sheep ready dressed, and five measures of parched corn, and an hundred ‖ clusters of raisins, and two hundred cakes of figs, and laid them on asses.

19 And she said unto her servants, Go on before me; behold, I come after you. But she told not her husband Nabal:

20 And it was so, as she [k] rode on the ass, that she came down by the covert of the hill, and, behold, David and his men came down against her: and she met them.

21 Now David had said, [l] Surely in vain have I kept all that this fellow hath in the wilderness, so that nothing was missed of all that pertained unto him: and [m] he hath requited me evil for good.

V. 7, 8. David had not only restrained his men from molesting Nabal's flocks, but had protected them against the depredations of their invaders. (Notes, 14—17. 22:1,2.) He might therefore justly have demanded a reward for his services: but he was rather desirous of becoming Nabal's supplicant, for whatever came to hand in a season of festivity; as he was in great distress, and unwilling to subsist by plunder. (Note, Philem. 8—11.) Nothing could be more modest, respectful, and friendly, than this message was.

V. 10, 11. Nabal doubtless knew that David had slain Goliath, and often smitten the Philistines; that he was a man of eminent valor and capacity, and of unblemished reputation; that he was the son-in-law of Saul, and unjustly persecuted; and that in his present necessity he behaved in an unexceptionable manner. But to vindicate his selfish refusal, he abused him and his men as run-away slaves; and thus he foolishly rendered his answer as exasperating as he could! (Judg. 12:4.)—It is observable, that Nabal copied Saul's contemptuous way of calling David the son of Jesse, though he pretended he knew not whence he was! (Notes, 20:30. 22:9,10.)

V. 13. (Note, Judg. 12:1—7.) David had been upon his guard against anger and revenge, when most basely used by Saul; (Notes, 24:1—15.) but he did not expect such reproachful language and insolent treatment from Nabal: he was therefore wholly put off his guard; and in great indignation he determined to avenge himself. It was also far more humiliating to be insulted by such a man as Nabal, than to be persecuted by the king. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 14—17. This servant not only confirmed what David had said, concerning his conduct and that of his men; but stated that they had been very useful to them. (Notes, 7,8. 22:1,2.) It does not appear, whether he had received any intelligence of David's determination, or had only formed a shrewd conjecture from circumstances. But, anxious for his own safety, as well as for that of the family, and not daring to mention his apprehensions to Nabal, who would probably have grossly abused him for his impertinence; he applied to Abigail, complaining of his master, as "such a son of Belial, that a man could not speak unto him:" words not proper to be used by a servant concerning his master, if the urgency of the case had not required them. (Notes, Eph. 6:5—9. 1 Tim. 6:1—5. Tit. 2:9,10 1 Pet. 2:18—25.)

V. 18, 19. Abigail was about to dispose largely of Nabal's property without his consent; but this was necessary for the preservation of him and his family. She was fully satisfied that his obstinacy would ruin them all, if he were made acquainted with her design: the peculiarity of her situation therefore fully justified her conduct. (Notes, Prov. 31:10—12.)

26 Now therefore, my lord, [y] as the LORD liveth, [z] and as thy soul liveth, seeing [a] the LORD hath withholden thee from coming to shed blood, and [b] from § avenging thyself with thine own hand, now [c] let thine enemies, and they that seek evil to my lord, be as Nabal.

V. 21, 22. David, in his sober judgment, knew better than to repent of his good deeds; or to think them done in vain, because requited with ingratitude: his determination to destroy or carry off every male at least of Nabal's family, for his fault, was unjust and cruel in the extreme: and his confirming this with a kind of oath, (though he turned off the imprecation from himself unto his enemies,) was rash, and savored of profaneness.—If he had been permitted to execute his purpose of revenge, it would have occasioned him much bitter reflection, greatly tarnished his character, and given his enemies an immense advantage against him. (Note, 32,33.)—It is probable, that his officers and men generally approved of his designs against Nabal, as expressive of a proper spirit on the occasion, and necessary to deter others from insulting them.

Any that pisseth, &c. (22) This seems to have been a proverbial expression in common use among the Israelites; and it may, with the utmost propriety, be read, "every male." (Marg. Ref. p.)

V. 23—31. The conduct and address of Abigail, on this emergency, are worthy of high admiration. Nabal had insulted David as a runaway slave: (Note, 10,11.) but in order to pacify him, Abigail shewed him the reverence due to a superior, and to her sovereign in the purpose of God. Though he was evidently in a very angry spirit, wholly unbecoming his character, she took no notice of it; but only entreated him to allow her, as if she had been the criminal, to plead her cause, and that he would give her a candid hearing. She could not excuse her husband's conduct, and the case did not allow her to veil his infirmities: but she attempted to turn his well known character for rashness and insolence into an argument with David, why he should lay aside his resentment. She intimated, that Nabal, (whose very name signified folly,) intended no peculiar affront to him; but only spoke according to his usual way of treating those who applied to him: and it was beneath a person of David's reputation and eminence, to notice the rudeness of such a man: but had she been present, the young men would have met with better treatment. With consummate address, she expressed a full confidence, that the Lord had sent her to keep his servant David "from avenging himself with his own hand:" and she solemnly desired, that "as sure as the LORD lived, and as David's soul lived," (Note, 20:3.) all that sought evil to him might be as weak and infatuated in their counsels as Nabal: and then he would have nothing to fear from them, for they would effectually ruin themselves. The liberal present, which she called a blessing, being an expression of her good will, (Marg. Ref. on marg. reading,) she represented as unworthy of his notice, but begged that it might be given to his followers. She professed her firm belief that he and his family would

32 And David said to Abigail, [n] Blessed be the LORD God of Israel, which sent thee this day to meet me:

33 And [o] blessed be thy advice, and blessed be thou, [p] which hast kept me this day from coming to shed blood, and from [q] avenging myself with mine own hand.

34 For in very deed, as the LORD God of Israel liveth, which hath kept me back from hurting thee, except thou hadst [r] hasted and come to meet me, surely [s] there had not been left unto Nabal, by the morning light, any that pisseth against the wall.

35 So David received of her hand that which she had brought him, and said unto her, [t] Go up in peace to thine house; see, I have hearkened to thy voice, and have [u] accepted thy person.

36 ¶ And Abigail came to Nabal; and, behold, he held [x] a feast in his house like the feast of a king; and Nabal's heart was [y] merry within him, for he was very drunken: wherefore [z] she told him nothing, less or more, until the morning-light.

37 But it came to pass in the morning, when the wine was gone out of Nabal, and his wife [a] had told him these things, that [b] his heart died within him, and he became as a stone.

38 And it came to pass about ten days after, that [c] the LORD smote Nabal, that he died.

39 And when David heard that Nabal was dead, he said, [d] Blessed be the LORD, that hath [e] pleaded the cause of my reproach from the hand of Nabal, and hath [f] kept his servant from evil: for the LORD [g] hath returned the wickedness of Nabal upon his own head. And David sent and communed with Abigail, [h] to take her to him to wife.

40 And when the servants of David were come to Abigail, to Carmel, they spake unto her, saying, [i] David sent us unto thee, to take thee to him to wife.

41 And she arose, and bowed herself on her face to the earth, and said, Behold, let [k] thine handmaid be a servant [l] to wash the feet of the servants of my lord.

42 And [m] Abigail hasted, and arose, and rode upon an ass, with five damsels of hers that went * after her; and she went after the messengers of David, and became his wife.

be established in the kingdom: she made honorable mention of his great services to Israel, and of his unblamable conduct; and adverted to the injustice of Saul's persecution, whom in honor of his authority she did not mention by name. She declared her assurance of David's preservation by a remarkable expression, "that his soul would be bound up in the bundle of life with the LORD his God," as men bind up those things which they are afraid of losing. (Notes, Acts 23:11. 27:20—26.) He was irreversibly appointed to the kingdom, and in consequence was numbered with those who are upheld in life and protected against all possible dangers, by the almighty power of the everlasting God: while his enemies would be driven into destruction, as a stone is violently thrown from a sling. In pleading for forgiveness, she intimated that it would be far more honorable to his character, and comfortable to his mind, when the promises of God should be performed, to reflect that he had conquered his anger, than that he had avenged himself and shed blood without cause: (Note, Prov. 16:32.) and she concluded with begging of him to think of her, and what she had said, when these things were come to pass. (Notes, Luke 23:39—43.)—Nothing seems to have been omitted in this address which suited the occasion; nothing unsuitable added; all was expressed in the most persuasive manner; and the whole manifests Abigail to have been a woman of strong faith and great piety, as well as of singular prudence and ingenuity.

V. 32, 33. Abigail's speech brought David to view the whole transaction, and his own spirit and purposes, in the true light; and to bless God for sending her, to pray for her, and to thank her for coming so speedily with advice so seasonable and suitable, by which very much mischief and guilt had been prevented. (Note, Prov. 25:11,12.) David repented of his rash oath, and did not think himself bound by it to destroy Nabal and his family. (Notes, 21,22. Matt. 14:8—11.)

V. 34. Though David only intended the death of the men: yet if Abigail and the other women had escaped the massacre, they must have been most deeply injured; therefore "the LORD had kept him back from hurting her," as well as Nabal and his men servants, or other assistants.

V. 35. Marg. Ref.—Note, Gen. 33:10.

V. 36—38. (Marg. Ref. y.) When Nabal heard of the imminent danger, to which his own folly had exposed him, at the very time when he was stupified with drunkenness and surrounded with those whom he had tempted to the same excess, his terror and vexation were so great that they sunk his spirits; and in ten days, by the just judgment of God, he ended his life either by the effect of his intoxication and subsequent horror and anguish of mind, or by some more immediate stroke of the power and indignation of God; and he left his wealth to others. (Notes, 2 Sam. 13:22—29. Dan. 5:5—9. Luke 12:15—21. 21:34—36.)—It seems his provisions were so large, his attendants so numerous, and his mind so dissipated or swallowed up in sensual gratification, that he did not miss either Abigail, or her liberal present to David, or the servants who went with her!

V. 39—42. David blessed God that he had been kept from avenging himself: and he considered the death of Nabal, as a proof of the Lord's special regard to him, in pleading his cause against his enemies; as an earnest of further favors; and as far more suited to awe others from injuring him than any vengeance which he could himself have inflicted. (Notes, 26:8—12. Rom. 12:17——21.)—The prudence, ingenuity, and piety of Abigail, as well as her beauty, made a deep impression on David; and therefore, according to the custom of those times, he sent messengers with proposals of marriage to her. On the other hand, Abigail firmly believed that David would be king over Israel, and highly esteemed his pious and excellent character: she therefore deemed his proposals very honorable and advantageous, notwithstanding his present difficulties; and with great humility acceded to them; being willing to share his trials, and to submit to any services for his sake. (Note, Gen. 24:58.)

V. 43, 44. It is probable that David had married Ahinoam, as soon as Michal was married to Phalti, and that he afterwards married Abigail also. (Note, 2 Sam. 3:13—16.) In this he was carried away with the custom of the times, and was connived at in having more than one wife.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—17.

The most honored servants of God have the measure and period of their usefulness appointed them: but those who persevere unto the end, walking with God, and living consistently with their profession, are happy, though rejected by men, and driven into retired and obscure situations. Their unblemished characters, their good examples, and their testimony to the truth, will produce salutary effects; and their unceasing prayers will be answered in behalf of numbers, after they are removed by death. Indeed whole nations have cause to lament, when faithful instructers, holy men of God, and public intercessors, are taken away. But Jesus, our Prophet, Priest, Intercessor, and Judge, ever lives to take care of those who trust in him.—Riches make men look great in their own eyes, and in the eyes of other worldly people: but they are often lavished on those, who have neither wisdom nor grace; and who so pervert them, as to ruin themselves, and to render very many wicked or wretched. To be descended from honorable ancestors forms another branch of man's foolish vanity (3); yet it frequently is a most severe reproach to the character and conduct of those who value themselves upon it.—Women of virtue, good sense, and amiable qualifications, are often married, for the sake of wealth, to persons so entirely unsuitable for them, that it renders their whole lives wretched and exposed to manifold temptations. It is therefore incumbent on parents, in respect of their children, and on young persons in their own case, to resist all temptations to a conduct, which is likely to be so fatal in its consequences. But prudent and pious relations are an invaluable treasure, and often retard the ruin of those, who have not sense to know their worth:—and especially, "a prudent wife is from the Lord." (Note, Prov. 19:14.) Those, whom the Lord most honors, are frequently very destitute for a season; and, as they will not have recourse to fraud or violence, like others in similar circumstances, they are sometimes constrained to become supplicants to ungodly persons. On such occasions it is proper to speak with modesty of themselves, and with decent respect and hearty good will to those whose assistance they request, wishing them the continuance, increase, or accession of every blessing: but they should be careful, lest they verge towards flattery, and pass such compliments as do not consist with truth, and as tend to confirm sinners in a favorable opinion of themselves.—Worldly men deem riches their own; but God declares they are another's, and that they must shortly give an account of their stewardship. (Luke 16:12.) When they are determined not to relieve the necessitous, they often excuse themselves by railing; by charging the vices of some poor persons upon all; and by representing almsgiving as an encouragement to idleness, impertinence, and extravagance: nor are the most excellent characters any defence against such undistinguishing invectives, which betray the pride, ignorance, malice, and avarice of the heart, from which they proceed.—In imitation of the Lord's example, we are commanded to do good to the evil and ungrateful; and wretched should we all be, if he dealt with us by those rules, which we are often disposed to adopt in our behavior to our poor brethren.—While we enjoy abundance, we should be liberal to the indigent: but many will lavish as much upon one unnecessary, proud, and luxurious feast, or upon the excessive indulgence of their own appetites or vanity, as would be deemed an exorbitant sum to expend in acts of charity. (Note, Luke 14:12—14.)—Silence is generally our wisdom, when assaulted by provoking language; otherwise we shall be betrayed into folly and sin: and when the messengers of the Son of David meet with abuse and railing for his sake, they must hold their peace, and report it to their Lord, who will surely and justly resent it.—How changeable are the best of men! how contrary their conduct in one instance, to what might have been expected from another! A small temptation frequently prevails over them, after a greater has been resisted: for, when off their guard, they are driven away "as a rolling thing before the whirlwind!"—Passionate resolutions, formed without time for reflection or prayer, are the result of Satan's counsel; and under this influence we are capable of imitating the worst actions of the worst of men, and of disregarding all consequences to our own character and peace, to the church of God, or to those who rejoice in being thus emboldened in impiety!—Many servants have more wisdom and grace than their masters, and could suggest to them useful hints: but those who are such sons of Belial, that a man cannot speak to them, will lose this advantage, and will not permit any one to extricate them from the dangers, to which they are exposed by their own imprudence. (Note, 2 Kings 5:13,14.)—General rules of submission to superior relations must be interpreted according to circumstances. In great emergencies the form may be dispensed with; and the preservation of a man's life or fortune will justify a failure in exterior indications of respect.—It is honorable when others commend us for those services, of which we say nothing: and when it appears, that we had a right to demand more than we petitioned for.

V. 18—44.

In urgent cases, despatch is as requisite as prudence: inferior interests should always be sacri

CHAP. XXVI.

Saul, informed by the Ziphites, pursues David to Hachilah, 1—4. David by night comes to Saul's tent, with Abishai, whom he hinders from slaying Saul; but he takes away his spear and cruse, 5—12. David at a distance reproves Abner's negligence, protests his own innocency, and expostulates with Saul, 13—20. Saul owns his sin, and returns home, 21—25.

AND the [a] Ziphites came unto Saul to Gibeah, saying, [b] Doth not David hide himself in the hill of Hachilah, which is before Jeshimon?

2 Then [c] Saul arose, and went down to the wilderness of Ziph, having [d] three thousand chosen men of Israel with him, to seek David in the wilderness of Ziph.

3 And Saul pitched in the hill of [e] Hachilah, which is before Jeshimon, by the way. But David abode in the wilderness, and he saw that Saul came after him into the wilderness.

4 David therefore [f] sent out spies, and understood that Saul was come in very deed.

5 And David arose, and came to the place where Saul had pitched: and David beheld the place where Saul lay, and [g] Abner the son of Ner, the captain of his host: and Saul lay in the * trench, and the people pitched round about him.

6 Then answered David and said to Ahimelech the [h] Hittite, and to [i] Abishai the son of [k] Zeruiah, brother to Joab, saying, [l] Who will go down with me to Saul to the camp? And Abishai said, I will go down with thee.

7 So David and Abishai came to the people by night: and, behold, Saul lay [m] sleeping within the trench, and his spear stuck in the ground at his bolster: but Abner and the people lay round about him.

ficed to preserve the greater; our property to preserve our lives; our very lives for the salvation of our souls.—Respect and liberal kindness are proper means of averting wrath: but, with wise and godly men, right words are most forcible. When, in mild language, matters are fairly stated, and proper topics adduced, their judgments, affections, and consciences are appealed to; and they cannot but be overcome, if they can be prevailed upon to listen.—It is beneath a wise man to resent the affronts of those, who are notoriously foolish and abusive.—Every servant of God should duly estimate his own situation; what his obligations, professions, and prospects are; what his station in the church; what his former conduct and present character; that he may with great circumspection avoid every inconsistent word and action: for according to these things, will be men's expectations from him and censures of him. (Notes, Ec. 10:1. Matt. 5:14—16.)—Patience and forgiveness of injuries will never occasion uneasy reflections; but revenge must in every case be recollected with grief of heart: and if we could but listen to our prudent and faithful counsellors at present, with the same candor that we shall reflect upon their advice in future, we might avoid much sorrow and many offences: we should indeed always earnestly endeavor to realize, under temptation, all the consequences of compliance, as they will afterwards appear to us.—Happy is the true believer! "his soul is bound up in the bundle of life with the LORD his God." In the midst of dangers and enemies, his natural life is perfectly safe till the appointed hour: the life of his soul "is hid with Christ in God;" (Note, Col. 3:1—4.) and because the Savior liveth, he shall live also; whilst all his foes shall be driven to destruction.—Our gratitude to God should precede, but not exclude, our gratitude to the instruments of his goodness. We have peculiar cause to be thankful, when we have been restrained from those sins which we were ready to commit: and real penitents will not be backward to take shame to themselves, and to retract their rash expressions; for they will tremble to reflect, what the consequences would have been, had they been left to themselves.—The people of God need not avenge their own cause, for he will surely do it for them: and sometimes more awfully than they could have desired: yet when his purpose is known, they will adore his justice, and bless him for his kindness to them.—Whilst divine vengeance hovers over the head of sinners, they are often given up to foolish mirth and mad intoxication.—If the danger of a violent death be so terrifying as to overwhelm the spirits in dismay and anguish, how should sinners tremble at the thoughts of eternal damnation, and flee without delay from the wrath to come!—Worldly sorrow, mortified pride, and an affrighted conscience, sometimes suffice to end the sensualist's joys, and separate the covetous man from all his wealth: but whatever be the weapon, the Lord smites men with death whenever it pleases him.—Modesty, prudence, and humility, are preparations to advancement: and a wise man will always know the value of a pious and virtuous wife. (Notes, Prov. 18:22. 19:14.) But some deviations from the divine law, and some alloy to our comforts, must be expected in every character, and every situation, on this side of heaven.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXVI. V. 1, 2. It is probable, that Saul had desisted from the pursuit of David, till excited again by the officious information of the Ziphites, who perhaps despaired of David's pardon for their former malice and perfidy. (Notes, 23:19—28.) Upon this, Saul's malice and envy revived; like Pharaoh, he again hardened his heart; and he determined to make another effort to destroy his rival. (Note, Ex. 14:5—9.)

V. 3, 4. David neither fled, nor went out to meet Saul, when he was fully certified that he was actually come forth to destroy him! Had a much greater army of uncircumcised Philistines marched against him, he would doubtless have faced them with his small company, and trusted in God for the event: but he would not fight against the "LORD's anointed." (Notes, 24:8—15. 28:1,2.)

V. 5—7. It is probable, that David was directed to this measure by the prophetical Spirit, in order that all Israel might be convinced how injuriously he was slandered by his enemies. Having, therefore, in the day-time made every requisite observation, he proposed the matter to two of his attendants: but Ahimelech, who was a prose-

8 Then said Abishai to David, [n] God hath *delivered thine enemy into thine hand this day: now therefore let me smite him, I pray thee, with the spear, even to the earth at once, and I will not smite him [o] the second time.

9 And David said to Abishai, Destroy him not: for [p] who can stretch forth his hand against the LORD's anointed, and be guiltless?

10 David said furthermore, As [q] the LORD liveth, the LORD shall smite him; or [r] his day shall come to die; or [s] he shall descend into battle, and perish.

11 The LORD forbid [t] that I should stretch forth mine hand against the LORD's anointed: but, I pray thee, take thou now the spear that is at his bolster, and the cruse of water, and let us go.

12 So David took [u] the spear and the cruse of water from Saul's bolster; and they gat them away, and no man saw it, nor knew it, neither awaked: for they were all asleep; because [v] a deep sleep from the LORD was fallen upon them.

13 ¶ Then David went over to the other side, and stood on [x] the top of an hill afar off; a great space being between them:

14 And David cried to the people, and to Abner the son of Ner, saying, Answerest thou not, Abner? Then Abner answered and said, Who art thou that criest to the king?

15 And David said to Abner, Art not thou a valiant man? and who is like to thee in Israel? wherefore then hast thou not kept thy lord the king? for [y] there came one of the people in to destroy the king thy lord.

16 This thing is not good that thou hast done. As the LORD liveth ye are †worthy to die, because ye have not kept your master, the [z] LORD's anointed. And now see where the king's spear is, and the cruse of water that was at his bolster.

17 And Saul knew David's voice, and said, [a] Is this thy voice, my son David? And David said, It is my voice, my lord, O king.

18 And he said, [b] Wherefore doth my lord thus pursue after his servant? for [c] what have I done? or what evil is in mine hand?

19 Now therefore, I pray thee, [d] let my lord the king hear the words of his servant: If the LORD have [e] stirred thee up against me, let him ‡accept an offering: but if they be the children of men, [f] cursed be they before the LORD; for [g] they have driven me out this day from ⁑abiding in [h] the inheritance of the LORD, saying, Go, serve other gods.

lyted Hittite, seems not to have had that strength of faith in the God of Israel, which so bold an adventure required; and Abishai, the son of David's sister, alone accompanied David. (Marg. Ref. i. Note, 14:6—10.)

V. 8—12. Perhaps Abishai thought, that David, though he scrupled to kill Saul with his own hands, would allow one of his officers to terminate the dangers and difficulties of him and his adherents, by cutting off at one blow their inveterate persecutor, whom Providence had now put in their power, apparently for this very purpose: but David would by no means admit of this evasive distinction.—It has been suggested, that David spared Saul, the LORD's anointed, out of policy, that he might not teach the people a bad lesson against himself; but it is evident, that he acted from higher motives. The Lord forbad him to do it; (Note, 1 Kings 21:3.) and "no man could stretch forth his hand against the LORD's anointed, and be guiltless." (Note, 24:4—7.) Satisfied that God would avenge his cause, and fulfil his promises, in his own time and manner; and recollecting how he had just before smitten Nabal; (Notes, 25:35—42.) he would do nothing against his prince: but he took an effectual way of convincing him, that he could have slain him.—A deep sleep. (12) (Marg. Ref. v. Notes, Ps. 76:5, 6. Acts 12:5 11.)

V. 13—16. David, by retiring to a place of safety before he called to Abner, seems to have manifested more entire distrust of Saul, than he had done on a former occasion. (Note, 24:8—15.) Yet he desired that Saul and all Israel should be informed of his conduct at this time.—Abner and his soldiers, by neglecting to guard Saul when he slept, had exposed his life, and merited to be treated as his enemies, though he confided in them as friends: for though their sound sleep was supernatural (12); yet there might be a neglect of placing sentinels, arising from contempt of David's small company.—Saul also deemed David his enemy; and yet David had spared and protected his life in the most friendly manner!

V. 17—19. (Marg. Ref.) David had not offended Saul; yet he acknowledged that he was a sinner against the Lord: and if convinced that his sufferings were a divine rebuke for any particular offence, he would offer a sacrifice, that his sin being pardoned, his trials might cease: or, if Saul was instigated to this persecution by the evil spirit, whom God judicially permitted to trouble him, he intimated to him that he ought to seek forgiveness and deliverance in the appointed way. (Notes, 16:14—23.) But if wicked men instigated him to it, they might expect severe vengeance, for thus banishing David from the worship of JEHOVAH, and tempting him to turn idolater The 20 Now therefore, [i] let not my blood fall to the earth before the face of the LORD: for [k] the king of Israel is come out to seek a flea, as when one doth hunt a partridge in the mountains.

21 Then said Saul, [l] I have sinned: return, my son David: for [m] I will no more do thee harm, because [n] my soul was precious in thine eyes this day: behold, I have played the fool, and have erred exceedingly.

22 And David answered and said, Behold the king's spear; and let one of the young men come over and fetch it.

23 The LORD [o] render to every man his righteousness and his faithfulness: for the LORD delivered thee into my hand today, but [p] I would not stretch forth mine hand against the LORD's anointed.

24 And, behold, [q] as thy life was much set by this day in mine eyes, so let my life be much set by in the eyes of the LORD, and [r] let him deliver me out of all tribulation.

25 Then Saul said to David, [s] Blessed be thou, my son David: thou shalt both do great things, and also shalt still [t] prevail. [u] So David went on his way, and Saul returned to his place.

clause might be rendered, "they are accursed."—David carefully avoided mentioning Saul's envy and malice, which were the real causes of his conduct: for he did not mean to irritate, but to mollify him.

V. 20. Though David was so very inconsiderable a person, according to his modest representation of himself; (Notes, 18:23—27. 24:8—15.) yet he intimated that, if his blood were shed, the LORD would certainly require it. (Note, Jer. 26: 12—15.) The word (קֹרֵא) rendered a partridge, is supposed to mean a kind of bird which was very difficult to be caught, and of very little value. It is used only in this place, and once by Jeremiah. (Note, Jer. 17:11.)

V. 21—25. This second instance of David's fidelity seems to have affected Saul more than the former. He confessed his guilt and folly in much stronger terms, and even invited David to return to court, and promised that he would not hurt him: he repeated his good words and wishes, and his persuasion that he would prevail and be very eminent. (Note, 24:16—22.) But no evidences appeared of true repentance towards God: and David plainly intimated that he could not trust his promises, and that he expected no recompense from him; but he referred his cause to the Lord, who would protect and deliver him, and do him justice. (Notes, Ps. 7:3—7. 17:1—3. 141:6,7. 2 Thes. 1:5—10.) Thus Saul and David parted to meet no more in this life.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

One crime generally proves an inducement to another, and seems to render it necessary for self-preservation: and this again makes way for further, and still more atrocious vices.—If sin be not dethroned and mortified, it will surely recover its strength when a suitable temptation is presented; and Satan and his agents will suggest such thoughts, as tend to re-kindle the smothered flame: thus after deep convictions and temporary reformations, men return to their sins, and become worse than ever.—The servants of God ought to persevere in a blameless conduct, however injured. Thus it will appear that they act from a settled purpose of doing good for the Lord's sake: and in some cases, they will need the boldness of a lion, as well as the wisdom of the serpent, and the harmlessness of the dove, that they may avoid evil and the appearance of evil, and yet use proper means of escaping the malice of their enemies.—Confidence in God fortifies the soul against temptations to seek relief by sin: and it often requires as much resolution to restrain the excesses of misjudging zealous friends, as to stand firm against the rage of incensed enemies.—If we would have outward blessings with comfort and reputation, we must patiently and quietly wait for them in the path of duty: and when wicked men obstruct the purposes of God and the performance of his promises, he can easily remove them without our help. —We are exposed to so many dangers, whenever we close our eyes, that we should previously examine our state, whether we be ready for death; and then commit ourselves to the keeping of that almighty Protector, who "neither slumbereth nor sleepeth:" otherwise our necessary repose may confine us, as in a prison, till some awful calamity comes upon us with unexpected destruction. (Note, 1 Thes. 5:1—3.)—The supposed friends of ungodly men are either incapable of serving them, or they treacherously neglect and expose them: and the pious people, whom they hate and revile, are their most valuable friends, as they persevere in prayers for them and kindness to them.—Good works give energy to persuasive words: and whether we plead our own cause, or the cause of God, evident integrity and consistency of conduct go further in producing conviction, than all the powers of eloquence without them: and for want of this confirmation, much sound reasoning and pathetic exhortation pass for unmeaning declamation.—Men's transgressions against God are the cause of their enmities against each other; and no reconciliation has an immoveable basis, which is not founded on peace with God through Jesus Christ.—Those who drive us from our duty, or tempt us to sin, are our worst enemies: and persecutors, besides murdering men's bodies, must give a dreadful account, as chargeable with murdering the souls of all whom they have driven to apostacy, or to do violence to their own consciences, by the terrors of exile, imprisonment, or death.—In sinning against God men "play the fool exceedingly:" this the believer perceives; he therefore repents, receives a pardon, and acts more wisely for the time to come: but many others obtain a transient view of the mortifying truth, and close their eyes against it. (Note, Jam. 1:22—25.) Yet eternity will fully discover their exceeding foolishness, and they will never cease to reflect upon their own madness, in silencing their convictions as much as possible, and in every way they could devise, and by holding fast their iniquities. —No good words or fair professions, entitle those to our confidence, who have long sinned against the light: yet the con-

David escapes to Gath, and is received by Achish, 1—3. Saul seeks him no more, 4. He asks Ziklag of Achish, 5—7. He invades the adjacent countries; and disingenuously leads Achish to suppose that he warred against Judah, 8—12.

AND David [a] said in his heart, I shall now * perish one day by the hand of Saul: [b] there is nothing better for me, than that I should speedily escape [c] into the land of the Philistines; and Saul shall despair of me, to seek me any more in any coast of Israel: so shall I escape out of his hand.

2 And David arose, and he passed over, with [d] the six hundred men that were with him, unto [e] Achish, the son of Maoch, king of Gath.

4 And it was told Saul that David was fled to Gath: and [g] he sought no more again for him.

5 And David said unto Achish, If I have now found grace in thine eyes, let them give me a place in [h] some town in the country, that I may dwell there: for why should thy servant dwell in the royal city with thee?

6 Then Achish gave him [i] Ziklag that day: wherefore Ziklag pertaineth unto the kings of Judah unto this day.

fessions of obstinate sinners may be useful, in satisfying us that we are in the right way, and shall prevail; and in encouraging us to persevere, expecting our recompense from God alone.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXVII. V. 1, 2. David, while reflecting on the inveterate malice of Saul, and the neglect, cowardice, and treachery of his countrymen, lost sight of his having been anointed to be king of Israel, with the annexed promises of God, and the manifold deliverances which he had experienced: so that, being weak in faith, he despaired of safety in the land of Judah; and he went to Gath, perhaps invited by Achish, but evidently without inquiring of the Lord. (Note, 21:10—15.) This measure was calculated to alienate the affections of the Israelites, and to give credit to the slanders of his accusers; he thus ran himself and his men into temptations to idolatry; and he laid himself under obligations to those, whom he could never favor, without betraying the cause of God. (26:19. Notes, 28:1,2. 29:2,8—11. Ps. 141:1—5.)

V. 3. (Note, 25:43,44.) Achish probably hoped that he should be able to fix David in his interests, and employ him against the Israelites; or, that he should thus secure an advantageous alliance with him, if ever he came to be king of Israel.

V. 4. It does not appear that Saul's malice was permanently abated; but the object of it was out of his reach. (Note, 26:21—25.)

V. 5, 6. It may be supposed that David desired to avoid ostentation, and to escape the effects of envy; and perhaps to be out of the way of temptation, more at leisure for the exercises of religion, and more unembarrassed in his whole conduct, than he could be near the court and among the nobles of Achish. (Note, Gen. 46:32—34.) Ziklag was first allotted to Judah. (Josh. 15:31.) Afterwards it was given to Simeon: (Josh. 19:5.) but the Philistines had got possession of it; and it was regarded as one of their cities, till on this occasion it came again into the possession of Judah. (Marg. Ref. i.)

V. 8—12. Probably the Geshurites and Gezrites were tribes of the Amalekites, or of Canaanites who were in alliance with them. (Marg. Ref. k, l.) We may therefore commend David for attempting to complete the work which Saul had begun, and should not censure the severity with which he conducted the war. (Notes, 15:1—9.)—These nations lived to the south of Judah: and David used such equivocal terms in speaking to Achish, as induced him to conclude, that he had been fighting against his own countrymen. Intelligence was not then readily conveyed, and no one undeceived Achish: he therefore concluded.

CHAP. XXVIII.

Achish, preparing war against Israel, places confidence in David, 1, 2. Saul, after having destroyed those who had familiar spirits; at length, fearing the Philistines and being forsaken by God, goes to the witch of En-dor and engages to indemnify her, 3—10. She, by his desire, calls up Samuel, who predicts his ruin, 11—19. Saul falls down in despair; but, being prevailed on to take food, he returns to his army, 20—25.

B. C. 1056. AND it came to pass in those days, [a] that the [b] Philistines gathered their armies together for warfare, to fight with Israel. And Achish said unto David, Know thou assuredly, that [c] thou shalt go out with me to battle, thou and thy men.

2 And David said to Achish, [d] Surely thou shalt know what thy servant can do. And Achish said to David, Therefore will I make thee keeper of mine head for ever.

3 ¶ Now [e] Samuel was dead, and all Israel had lamented him, and buried him in Ramah, even in his own city. And Saul had [f] put away those that had familiar spirits, and the wizards, out of the land.

4 And the Philistines gathered themselves together, and came and pitched in [g] Shunem: and Saul gathered all Israel together, and they pitched in [h] Gilboa.

5 And when Saul saw the host of the Philistines, [i] he was afraid, and his heart greatly trembled.

6 And when Saul [k] inquired of the LORD, the LORD answered him not, neither [l] by dreams, nor [m] by Urim, nor [n] by prophets.

7 Then said Saul unto his servants, that David had so widened the breach between himself and his people, that it could not be healed. (Note, 2 Sam. 16:20—23.) Had he, however, known the truth of the case, he would have been convinced that David could not be detached from Israel, or united to their enemies. David's situation powerfully tempted him to this deceit; but it can by no means be justified, or even excused. (Note, 19:12—17.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The strongest believers cannot wholly exclude the incursions of unbelief, during tedious trials, and when sense and reason bring in no report of deliverance. Many, under sharp temptations, have overlooked former mercies and experiences; have forgotten the power and promise of the Lord; and have feared that sin and Satan would finally prevail against them. When faith thus staggers, obedience wavers, and sinful expedients frequently are employed; which involve men more and more in difficulties and temptations.—If at any time we "lean to our own understanding," and do not ask counsel of God, we are sure to do wrong. (Note, Prov. 3:5,6.)—We ought not to quit the path of duty, or to join interests with the enemies of religion, even for self-preservation, or out of care for our families: nor should we willingly contract obligations, where we cannot consistently make requitals of kindness.—It is our wisdom to shun notoriety, and to shelter ourselves from envy; for obscurity is commonly more safe and comfortable, and no less advantageous. Yet we must in no situation be wholly inactive, but attempt something in the cause of God and his people, even though ungratefully requited by those whom we would serve.—The fear of man is so ensnaring, that we should, if possible, keep out of those places, where doing our duty will expose us to danger or reproach.—An equivocation, which serves the purpose of a lie, bears the same relation to it, as a hypocrite does to a profane person; it is only apparently better, and therefore a more dangerous cheat. But though believers often betray their imperfections, they can never be prevailed upon deliberately to renounce the service of God, and to unite interests with his enemies, or to become the servants of sin and Satan.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXVIII. V. 1, 2. Achish, when determined to make war against Israel, required David's assistance: and David could not have refused it without the greatest danger. Yet if he had directly promised it, and had then either stood neuter, or gone over to the Israelites, he must have behaved with great ingratitude and treachery: and if he had fought against Israel, he would have been guilty of a very great sin, he would have alienated the affections of his people, and perhaps exposed himself to the reproach of having murdered Saul. It seemed therefore impossible that he should extricate himself, with a good conscience and a clear reputation. He, however, returned an insincere and evasive answer, which was intended to gain time, but which Achish understood as a promise of effectual assistance; (Notes, 27:8—12. 29:8—11.) and on that account promised to make him captain of his guard, or some great officer about his person.

V. 3. (Note, 25:1.) Perhaps the death of Samuel, and David's apparent desertion of his people, concurred with Saul's disordered state of mind, to encourage the Philistines to this war.—Saul had filled up his measure of iniquity, and "the day was come when he should descend into battle and perish." (26:10.)—He "had put away those that had familiar spirits, and the wizards, out of the land;" probably before "the Spirit of the LORD departed from him." (Note, 16:14.) Or perhaps, when troubled with an evil spirit, he charged some of them as the cause of it: or by his zeal in this respect he aimed to atone for his other sins, that the kingdom might not be taken from him; and to shew the people that he had a regard to religion. Whatever was his motive, the measure itself was right. (Marg. Ref. e, f.)

V. 4, 5. As Shunem lay far north in the land, in the lot of Issachar, (Josh. 19:18.) either this invasion was very formidable, or Saul had been very negligent: otherwise the enemy could not have marched thither without being opposed.—Saul's excessive terror arose chiefly from a guilty conscience. It is probable, that his contempt of Samuel, his murder of the priests, and his malicious persecution of David, dismayed his heart upon every recollection; and that he foreboded his own approaching doom. (Note, 24:16—22.)

V. 6. "Saul inquired of the LORD," under urgent terror, but without humiliation for sin, or purposes of repentance; and therefore God would [o] Seek me a woman that hath [p] a familiar spirit, that I may go to her, and inquire of her. And his servants said to him, Behold, there is a woman that hath a familiar spirit at [q] En-dor.

8 And Saul [r] disguised himself, and put on other raiment, and he went, and two men with him, and they came to the woman by night: and he said, [s] I pray thee, divine unto me by the familiar spirit, and [t] bring me him up whom I shall name unto thee.

9 And the woman said unto him, Behold, thou knowest what Saul hath done, [u] how he hath cut off those that have familiar spirits, and the wizards, out of the land: [v] wherefore then layest thou a snare for my life, to cause me to die?

10 And Saul [x] sware to her by the LORD, saying, As the LORD liveth, there shall no punishment happen to thee for this thing. [Practical Observations.]

11 Then said the woman, Whom shall I bring up unto thee? and he said, Bring me up Samuel.

12 And when the woman saw Samuel, she cried with a loud voice: and the woman spake to Saul, saying, Why hast thou deceived me? for [y] thou art Saul.

13 And the king said unto her, Be not afraid: for what sawest thou? And the woman said unto Saul, I saw [z] gods ascending out of the earth.

14 And he said unto her, * What form is he of? And she said, An old man cometh up: and he is covered with [a] a mantle. And Saul perceived that it was Samuel, and he stooped with his face to the ground, and bowed himself.

15 And Samuel said to Saul, [b] Why hast thou disquieted me, to bring me up? And Saul answered, [c] I am sore distressed: for [d] the Philistines make war against me, and [e] God is departed from me, and [f] answereth me no more, neither by [†] prophets, nor by dreams: [g] therefore I have called thee, that thou mayest make known unto me what I shall do.

16 Then said Samuel, [h] Wherefore then dost thou ask of me, seeing the LORD is departed from thee, and is become thine enemy?

17 And the LORD hath done [‡] to him [i] as he spake by [§] me: for the LORD hath rent the kingdom out of thine hand, and given it to [k] thy neighbor, even to David:

18 Because thou [l] obeyedst not the voice of the LORD, nor executedst his fierce wrath upon Amalek, therefore hath the LORD done this thing unto thee this day.

19 Moreover, [m] the LORD will also deliver Israel with thee into the hand of the Philistines; and [n] to-morrow shalt thou and thy sons be with me: the LORD also shall deliver the host of Israel into the hand of the Philistines.

not vouchsafe him any answer. He did not inquire till his doom was sealed; and then only in a hypocritical manner: therefore it was nearly the same as "not inquiring." (Note, 1 Chr. 10: 13,14.) After Abiathar had fled to David, probably Saul appointed another high priest: yet neither by him, nor by any prophet, nor in any way, could he obtain an answer. (15. 14: 37.) This shewed, that God was greatly displeased with him, and warned him to repent, and to cry for mercy with humble faith and perseverance. (Note, Judg. 10:13—16.) It also proved, that God no longer regarded him, as chief magistrate in Israel. (Notes, 23:9—13. Ex. 28:30. Num. 27:21.)

V. 7, 8. Saul was aware that some persons still secretly practised these diabolical arts: but nothing could exceed the presumption of consulting those whom he had, according to the law of God, endeavored to extirpate. (Note, 3.)—He disguised himself, not only lest the woman should fear to use her incantations if she knew him; but perhaps likewise lest the people should be exasperated against him, if acquainted with his infatuated conduct.

V. 9, 10. Instead of being cut to the heart by the woman's suspicion, which implied the most severe reproof; Saul most profanely sware by the LORD, that the woman should not be punished for violating the divine law! She would understand this merely as an engagement not to inform against her: but Saul expressly sware, that he would not perform his duty. Indeed both parties acted almost atheistically; when one engaged, and the other was satisfied with the engagement, that no punishment should happen to her!

V. 11. Samuel had anointed Saul, and often counselled him for his good: and though Saul had neglected him during the latter part of his life, yet he now was convinced, that it was better with him when he regarded his advice. Nothing therefore could now satisfy him, but a conference with the departed prophet: and he being forsaken of God was so infatuated, as to suppose, that the woman, by means of her familiar spirit, could bring Samuel up for that purpose, even without the Lord's permission!—It is probable, that she expected to impose on Saul by some satanical apparition.

V. 12—19. It is much disputed, who it was that appeared on this occasion; for the whole

20 Then Saul *fell straightway all along on the earth, and was [o] sore afraid, because of the words of Samuel: and there was no strength in him; for he had eaten no bread all the day, nor all the night.

21 And the woman came unto Saul, and saw that he was sore troubled, and said unto him, Behold, thine handmaid hath obeyed thy voice, and [p] I have put my life in my hand, and have hearkened unto thy words which thou spakest unto me.

22 Now therefore, I pray thee, hearken thou also unto the voice of thine handmaid, and let me set a morsel of bread before thee; and eat, that thou mayest have strength, when thou goest on thy way.

23 But he refused, and said, [q] I will not eat: but his servants, together with the woman, [r] compelled him; and he hearkened unto their voice. So he arose from the earth, and sat upon the bed.

narrative manifests that it was no human imposture. Many expositors, ancient and modern, have maintained, that it was Satan personating Samuel; though the text does not give the least intimation of it. It is however, by no means advisable, to give those men any countenance, who, to support a favorite system, put a forced construction upon the words of holy writ, very different from their obvious meaning: and scarcely any of their interpretations can sound harsher, than the insertion in every place, where Samuel is mentioned, 'that it was Satan person-'ating Samuel.'—It is indeed argued, that the woman's incantations could have 'no power over 'a glorified saint:' but to this it may fairly be answered, that neither could an evil spirit appear at her call, without the Lord's permission. Though the woman was not the cause of Samuel's being sent, Saul's inquiry might be the occasion of it. The word disquieted, seems to be used merely in accommodation to the general notions of mankind on that subject: and the woman's surprise and terror proved, that it was an unusual and unexpected appearance, and not the ordinary effect of her art.—It is, however, further urged, that the apparition's discourse tended to drive Saul to despair, which is one of Satan's temptations; and that it contained no exhortations to repentance, which were usual with the prophets. But to this it may be replied, that Elijah's message to Ahaziah, Daniel's address to Belshazzah, and even Christ's discourse in the presence of Judas, were equally calculated to drive each of them to despair; and equally void of exhortations to repent, and proposals of mercy. (Notes, 2 Kings 1:15,16. Dan. 5:18—28. Matt. 26:21—24.)—Saul had despised Samuel's solemn warnings in his life-time; yet now he hoped, as it were, in defiance of God, to obtain some counsel and encouragement from him: and why might not God permit the soul of his departed prophet to appear and confirm his former sentence, and denounce Saul's irrevocable doom? It was not beyond the power of God, nor, that I can see, at all unworthy of him; but rather a declaration of his immutable and irreversible truth and justice.—Satan could not have predicted the several events, which came to pass accordingly, as far as we know, (Note, 30:1—3.) without being inspired by God to do so: and it would give far more countenance to consulting witches, to suppose that he inspired Satan to prophesy by them, than to conclude that Samuel was sent with this tremendous message from God, when Saul consulted one of them. Indeed this would most powerfully discourage such attempts; as the request of the rich man in hell to Abraham, being entirely vain, is calculated to discourage praying to departed saints. (Note, Luke 16:24—26.) The local situation of departed spirits is so concealed from us, that the circumstance of the spirit apparently "arising out of the earth," forms no real objection against its being the soul of Samuel: and the expression, "shalt thou and thy sons be with me," means no more, than that they should be in the eternal world. The transaction was suited to impress the idea of a future state on the mind of all who should ever hear or read of it; and it determined nothing about the different conditions of the righteous and the wicked.—Upon the whole, there appears much solemnity in God's for once permitting the soul of a departed prophet to make his appearance, as a witness from heaven, and in sending him to confirm the word which he spoke on earth, (evincing that the words of the prophets would surely take effect;) and to sit in judgment upon a proud enemy of God, who foolishly sought encouragement in his impenitency, by the most atrocious crimes.—This interpretation is certainly obvious, and suited to the apprehensions of the unlearned reader, and according to the general simplicity of the Scriptures: and nothing short of unanswerable arguments and objections, should constrain us to suppose, that when the Holy Spirit said Samuel, he meant Satan, not speaking by Samuel, as he did by the serpent and by the demoniacs; but actually counterfeiting his shape, and speaking with his voice, though Samuel himself was in every sense absent from the place.—The venerable appearance of Samuel, or something which he spoke, convinced the woman, that it was Saul who consulted her (12).—'She perceived, by the rev-'erence the spectre paid him, who he was: for so 'Abarbinel interprets it, he bowed with his face 'to the ground, in honor of Saul, whereby the 'woman concluded that it was the king.' Bp. Patrick. Thus then if the devil personated Samuel, he worshipped Saul, not Saul him! A likely thing, truly, that either Samuel, or Satan personating him, should thus reverence Saul! It shews to what difficulties the supporters of the latter opinion are reduced. Saul's bowing down before Samuel, was not indeed an act of religious worship, any more than Abigail's bowing down before David. The answer of Samuel was in every respect suitable to his character, and to the occasion. It was entirely in vain for Saul to consult the servant, when the Lord was become his enemy: the Lord was only doing to him, or for himself, (17. marg.) as he declared he would: and as Samuel knew him to be finally given up, he neither gave him counsel nor comfort. (Notes, 2 Tim. 4:14,15. Heb. 6:4—6. 1 John 5:16—18.)—The woman first saw the appearance; but afterwards Saul seems to have seen it, as well as to have heard the words spok en.—Some think, that neither Saul's servants, nor the woman, heard what passed.—God's (13) Elohim. (Marg. Ref. z.)

24 And the woman had [s] a fat calf in the house; and she hasted, and killed it, and took flour, and kneaded it, and did bake unleavened bread thereof:

25 And she brought it before Saul, and before his servants; and they did eat. Then they rose up, and went away that night.

V. 20—25. Saul, though terrified even to desperation, was not humbled. A miserable state he was indeed reduced to, when the witch was his only comforter! But he did not confess his sins; and, as far as we can learn, he offered no sacrifices, and presented no supplications: nor does he seem to have expressed any concern about his sons, or his people, or to have attempted any escape; but in sullen despair to have rushed upon his doom.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—10.

When we in the least deviate from the plain path of duty, every circumstance tends to draw us further aside, and to increase our perplexity and temptation.—Needless intimacies with the avowed enemies of true religion, or obligations to them, will reduce us, ere we are aware, to the necessity of being unfaithful to God, or treacherous and ungrateful to our benefactors: and we shall scarcely ever be able to speak with that candor and simplicity which become Christians. (Note, 1 Kings 22:4.)—When death has removed the ministers and servants of God, or persecution has banished them, a land is deprived of its best defence, and its enemies have their best opportunity of preparing war against it.—Hypocrites are frequently very zealous against those crimes, to which they are not tempted at the time, or from which they may suffer detriment; and apostates frequently commit those sins, which they once were most earnest in opposing.—Ungodly persons fear the reproach of man, or the punishments denounced by human laws, more than the wrath of God: they do not therefore forsake their sins, but dissemble their real characters, and conceal their conduct; and deem all well if they can escape detection: but frequently they are employed to rebuke or correct each other, either for their present conviction, or their future deeper condemnation.—When habits of perjury, or profane swearing, have been contracted, the sacred name of God, and the most solemn oaths, are often introduced in the midst of the most horrible wickedness, and made the obligations and encouragements to the most enormous crimes! But the atrocious guilt of such impiety cannot be expressed.—Consulting witches, or diviners of any kind, real or pretended, is a malignant or ignorant attempt to gain intelligence or assistance from some creature, when it cannot be had, or is not sought, from the Lord in the path of duty; and is therefore essentially idolatry, and virtually the worship of the devil. (Notes, Ex. 22:18. 1 Chr. 10:13,14.)

V. 11—25.

Many, who despise the servants of God while they live, are so far convinced of their wisdom and fidelity, that they vainly wish for their counsel and instruction, in distressing circumstances, after their death. But in that blessed world, to which they are removed, they have done with fear, favor, and affection, and are become far more determined than ever in the service and cause of God: and were they to appear, they would denounce the doom of impenitent sinners, with more awful decision than before.—Wretched indeed are they, from whom God is for ever departed! What can they expect either from good or evil men, from holy or unholy spirits? Neither the servants nor the enemies of the Lord can do them any service, and every thing combines to drive them to desperation. This Satan labors to effect, and he is sometimes permitted to succeed: nay, the very testimony of God's word and ministers concurs in convincing the unhappy wretches "that there remains nothing, but a certain fearful looking for of judgment, and fiery indignation!" (Note, Heb. 10:26,27.) while the remembrance of former crimes, convictions, warnings, and relapses into sin, combine to assure them of the certainty and justice of their doom. Yet all these things do not humble or soften them; for it is "impossible to renew them to repentance:" and not having "believed Moses and the prophets, neither will they be persuaded though one rose from the dead;" (Note, Luke 16:27—31.) but either in sullen or in furious despair they await and meet their doom!—In every age God sets up a few such beacons for a tremendous warning to their fellow-sinners, not to listen to temptations, to sin against conviction, or despise the word of God; and to beware of hypocrisy, apostacy, procrastination, and other great wickedness: for none are thus given up of God, who have not provoked him to it by their previous crimes. (Note, 2 Thes. 2:8—12.) But while one relenting thought remains let no sinner ever suppose himself in this awful case. God will not indeed hear the prayer of the unhumbled and impenitent; and many inquire of him in vain, because they are not decidedly in earnest: when therefore they do not meet with encouragement, they detect their own hypocrisy, by giving up their religious duties, plunging again into sin, and seeking help from the world, and "the God of this world." Let the discouraged, but sincere and earnest inquirer persevere in knocking at mercy's gate, until it be opened: let him humble himself more and more before God, and determine to live and die supplicating his favor; and he will be sure at length to succeed. Let us all learn "to seek the Lord while he may be found, and to call upon him while he is near," (Note, Is. 55:6,7.) and without reserve to obey his voice and do his will.—Finally, though subjects suffer with their wicked governors, and children with their parents; either it is for their own sins, or else their sufferings "will work for them a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory."

NOTES.

3 Then said the princes of the Philistines, What do these Hebrews here? And Achish said unto the princes of the Philistines, Is not this David, the servant of Saul the king of Israel, which hath been with me [f] these days, or these years, and I have [g] found no fault in him since he fell unto me unto this day?

4 And the princes of the Philistines were wroth with him; and the princes of the Philistines said unto him, [h] Make this fellow return, that he may go again to his place which thou hast appointed him, and let him not go down with us to battle, lest in the battle he be an adversary to us: for wherewith should he reconcile himself unto his master? should it not be with the heads of these men?

5 Is [i] not this David, of whom they sang one to another in dances, saying, Saul slew his thousands, and David his ten thousands?

6 Then Achish called David, and said unto him, Surely, as [k] the LORD liveth, [l] thou hast been upright, and [m] thy going out and thy coming in with me in the host, is good in my sight; for I have not found evil in thee, since the day of thy coming unto me unto this day: nevertheless * the lords favor thee not.

termined how to act on this occasion, and waited with a secret hope that the Lord would help him out of this very great difficulty; as indeed he did in a wonderful manner. (Note, 28:1,2.) He was far too much influenced by fear of man, in so readily consenting to attend Achish, when he might have framed very plausible excuses for declining that service. (Note, Prov. 29:25, 26.)

V. 4—6. These lords, or princes, possessed so much authority in their own cities, and in the camp at the head of their troops, and were so decided against employing David, that Achish would not venture their displeasure in retaining him. The high opinion which he had of David, the confidence which he reposed in him, and his commendations of him both before his face (9), and to the lords, would have been very honorable to David, if they had not been in part the effect of deception. (Note, 27:8—12.) When Achish sware by JEHOVAH, (6) that he did not send David away for any suspicion which he entertained of him, he shewed that he had collected some notions at least concerning the true God and his worship. (9)

Saul slew, &c. (5) Note, 18:6—9. They 'reasoned wisely, according to the common prac-'tice of mankind; and it was well for David, that 'they were such politicians: for hereby God de-'livered him out of a very great strait, either of 'being an enemy to his country, or false to his 'friends, and to his trust. And by the same good 'Providence he was sent back to rescue his 'wives, and the wives and children of his men, 'who were taken captive.' Bp. Patrick. (Notes, 30:1—19.)

V. 8—11. (Marg. Ref.) David could not but inwardly rejoice at this occurrence: yet he was unwilling that Achish should think he did; and therefore he professed a desire "to fight with the enemies of his lord the king." (Note, 2 Sam. 16:15—19.) Achish would understand these words to mean the Israelites; but they were ambiguous, as several of his speeches were on this occasion: so hard is it in such circumstances to avoid all insincerity and disingenuity, either from fear or courtesy!

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

While presumptuous sinners are given up to the effects of their own counsels, and driven headlong to destruction, the sins of the upright are repented of and pardoned; and the Lord takes care both of their peace and reputation. He has various methods of extricating us out of difficulties, when we can perceive no way of escaping: and while ungodly men pursue their own purposes, and follow their own judgments, he secretly influences them to such determinations, as subserve the good of his people.—Reputation, esteem, and affection, frequently become snares to us; whilst reproaches, contempt, and injurious suspicions prove beneficial: and the ill usage of the wicked, by which we are driven from them, is much better for us, than that friendship which draws us among them.—When worldly people have no evil thing to say of us, but will bear testimony to our uprightness, we need desire no more from them: and this we should aim to acquire by prudence, meekness, and a blameless life. But their flattering commendations are almost always purchased by improper compliances, or some measure of deception, and commonly may cover us with confusion.—It is seldom prudent to place great confidence in one who has changed sides;

CHAP. XXX.

David on his return finds that the Amalekites had burnt Ziklag, and carried captive the women and children, 1—3. David and his men are greatly distressed, 4, 5; but inquiring of God, he is encouraged to pursue them, 6—10. He obtains intelligence of them from an Egyptian slave, 11—15. except as the fear of God influences a true convert to conscientious fidelity.—Obscurity, or the company of those who are of one heart with us, is generally more safe, comfortable, and honorable, than high stations in the palaces of the ungodly. Thus David in the cave was far more worthy of our admiration and imitation, than when a favorite in the camp of king Achish: and he never had a greater deliverance, than when he was dismissed from that ensnaring service.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXX. V. 1—3. Ziklag was distant from the camp of the Philistines, about three days' march; and David did not receive an authentic account of the battle at Gilboa, till two days after his return thither. (2 Sam. 1:1.) But it does not thence follow, that the battle was not fought on the morrow after Saul consulted the witch of En-dor, as some have thought; (28:19.) for the narrative of Saul's conduct is perfectly distinct, from that which relates to David and to the Philistines: and it is not said, at what time Saul went to En-dor.—The Lord had extricated David reputably from his ensnaring connexion with Achish; but he severely rebuked him for his misconduct, by the calamity that came upon Ziklag in his absence. (Notes, 2 Chr. 18:30—34. 19:1,2.)—He might reasonably have expected that the Amalekites would watch their opportunity of retaliating; and his fear of offending Achish made him very improvident, in leaving the city and the women and children in it, without any proper guard.—But the Amalekites were wonderfully and mercifully restrained from slaying any of them, after the example which David had set them; (Note, 27:8—12.) preferring the profit of enslaving them, to the pleasure of revenge: for God intended to rebuke his servant, but not to permit his family and friends to be destroyed. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 4, 5. Marg. Ref.

V. 6. The loss of his wives, the desolations of the city, and the bitterness of his followers, (marg.) who, not entirely without reason, were enraged against him for thus exposing their families, all combined to enhance David's distress: at the same time he could not but consider his calamities as resulting from unbelief, in leaving the land of Judah, in being so much afraid of Achish, and in neglecting to consult the Lord. Yet in the midst of all these complicated troubles, his spirit was soon calmed and encouraged: he neither murmured against God, nor resented the rage of his soldiers, nor despaired of redress, nor confided in his own valor or conduct; "but he encouraged himself in the LORD his God." (Notes, Gen. 32:6—12.) He meditated upon his perfections, upon his promises in general to believers, and the particular promises made to him; on his own experience of the faithfulness of God, as well as his wonderful works of old in behalf of his worshippers, and on the relations in which the Lord stood to those, who had been enabled to choose him as their Salvation and Portion. Thus he was encouraged to expect forgiveness, protection, help, and a favorable event, notwithstanding external appearances. (Note, 17:34—37.)

V. 7—10. Circumstanced as David was, no time was to be lost; and as his troubles originated from neglecting to inquire of the Lord, he immediately consulted him by the high priest. (Notes, 14:16—23. 23:9—13.) fatigue of the former march, increased by this new expedition, together with the anguish of their spirits, rendered a part of the company so faint, that they could proceed no further. David however, though his small troop was thus reduced, and he might fear that the others would be unable to proceed, still "encouraged himself in the LORD his God." (Note, Judg. 8:4.)

V. 11—15. This sick slave was considered as of small value to his master, and was likely to be an encumbrance; the life of a fellow-creature was rated at nothing; and so he was inhumanly left to perish, though he might have been carried on one of the camels: but in the righteous providence of God this cruelty of his master occasioned the destruction of the invading army; whilst David's kindness to a perishing stranger and slave was the means of his signal success, and proved true policy! (Marg. Ref.) —This slave "fell sick on the third day" before; (13. Heb.) yet it is said that he had been without meat and drink, three days and three nights. (12. Note, Matt. 12:38—40.)

V. 16—19. (Marg. Ref.) The Amalekites probably knew, that the Israelites and the Philistines were engaged in war at a great distance, and that David and his men were in the army of the Philistines, and therefore, deeming themselves secure, they very imprudently began to riot on the abundance which they had taken, without even placing guards to give notice of an enemy's approach. So that David and his little troop came on them unawares, and made a dreadful and long continued slaughter of them, and recovered all their spoil. (8) Perhaps, coming near to the Amalekites in the evening, and witnessing their riotous conduct, they took some refreshment and rest, till the morning; and then at the twilight assaulted the Amalekites, when oppressed with drunkenness and sleep: or else David's company was supernaturally strengthened for these great exertions after all their preceding fatigue.

rid entered their lands, and fetched away some of their cattle also.

V. 22—25. (Marg. Ref.) No doubt many of David's men had profited by his example and instructions: yet there were also wicked men, even "men of Belial," among them; who proposed not only to take all the other spoil, and share it among those who aided in destroying the Amalekites; but likewise to seize the property of their fellow-soldiers, because they had not been able to go with them. David's answer however was full of piety, equity, and meekness, and well worthy of careful notice; and it prevailed against their unjust demands. Had he hearkened to these "men of Belial," the others would have gone away disgusted, and the consequences might have been permanently evil: but by thus mildly taking up the affair, he conciliated the minds of the well-disposed, and silenced the injurious party.—This edict was different from that, by which the spoil of the Midianites had been divided: (Notes, Num. 31: 25—47.) but that related to the whole people; this only to the soldiers, some of whom went to battle, and others guarded the baggage; and in this peculiar case it became a permanent law in Israel.

V. 26—31. It is evident from this, that some law or custom was established, which, in dividing the spoil, allotted a certain portion of it to the commander in the war, and that David sent these presents out of his own share of the booty (20). No doubt he considered those, who secretly favored and assisted him during Saul's persecutions, as his steady friends: but, sending a blessing to them at this crisis, from the spoil of the enemies of God and his people, was the result of genuine policy, and served to remove obstructions to his advancement to the throne. (Notes, 1 Chr. 12:1—8.) He sent no presents to the Ziphites, or to the men of Keilah: (Notes, 23:1—13,19—25. 26:1,2.) for, though enemies should be helped, when in distress; friends alone are entitled to our confidence, gratitude, and liberality.—It is evident, that some of the places, here mentioned, were not situated in the lot of Judah: and David had passed over Jordan, to place his parents under the protection of the king of Moab, whose kingdom was near to Aroer. (Marg. Ref.—28.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—15.

When we leave our families, we cannot foresee what may befall them, or ourselves, ere we return: we ought therefore to commit each other to the protection of God; and to render him unfeigned thanks when we meet, from time to time, in peace and safety.—It is wisdom on all occasions to moderate our expectation of earthly comfort; lest we should, by being too sanguine, meet with the more distressing disappointments.—Many of our troubles may be traced back to our imprudence; all of them in one way or other originate from our sins.—Inordinate passions blind men's minds: excessive fear of one danger often causes them to overlook those which are still more formidable: and they, who give offence to others, may expect to be used by them in like manner. But the Lord restrains the rage of the most barbarous and revengeful; while one selfish principle counteracts another, wicked men proceed as far as his purposes require, and no further; and by various instruments he rebukes and chastens his offending people, but restrains even the most successful from doing them essential detriment. (Note, Ps. 76:10.)—Generous minds are most susceptible of rational affections; and the bravest are not disgraced by mourning the loss or the sufferings of beloved relations: but all our passions are prone to excess; and unless the fear of God possess the heart, men fret against him under afflictions, and vent their impatience against the guilty or innocent occasions of them: and thus our helpers may become our terror, or our destroyers.—Conscious guilt and a sense of the divine displeasure form the keenest aggravations of a believer's distress: yet the very reflection, which pains and humbles his heart, silences the tempest of his passions, and induces hope in God, who chastens that he may not condemn.—"The LORD is rich in mercy, and ready to forgive;" so that the greatest sinner, when first he approaches the mercy-seat in the Redeemer's name, with penitent confessions and fervent prayers, may be encouraged to expect salvation for his soul, and assistance in all his troubles. But the believer, who has long trusted in his mercy, chosen him for his Portion, walked with him in his ordinances, sought his glory, and experienced his faithfulness, power, and love; notwithstanding failures and conscious unworthiness, may with confidence "encourage himself in the LORD his God," amidst the most extreme danger and distress.—Bitter complaints and mutual recriminations are of no use n the hour of trouble: we are then called to perform the present duty; and to inquire the will of God by searching the Scriptures, and prayer. When our sins are forgiven, and we act by the Lord's direction, we shall soon recover all, and be enriched by our very losses and trials: and even if our companions cannot or will not help us, "the LORD of hosts will be for us, the God of Jacob will be our Refuge."—Some of those, who are cordially attached to the cause of God, are less capable of hard services than others: but he mercifully accepts them, and so should their brethren.—It is good policy, as well as charity, to relieve the meanest in their distresses; for in some great emergency God may enable them to render us the most important services: but he will certainly punish inhumanity to the poor and the sick; especially that of masters to their sick and afflicted servants, and oppressed slaves. (Jam. 2:13.)

The success and abundance of ungodly men, increasing their presumption, and being spent on their lusts, frequently accelerate their destruction: and sensual indulgence is a common introduction to "weeping, wailing, and gnashing of teeth." (P. O. 2 Sam. 13:15—39. Notes, Luke 16:19—23.)—In the most favored companies selfish men will be found, who, being ungrateful to God for his kindness, will enrich or pamper themselves, while they leave their more deserving though less prosperous brethren to starve. But those, who consider the Lord as the Giver of their abundance, will dispose of it with equity and in liberality: they will employ their influence to restrain the injustice of others; and take occasions from evil suggestions to establish useful precedents: and instead of spending their wealth on their lusts, will share it with their friends, and with the poor; thus subserving their most important future interests, with the very "mammon of unrighteousness!" (Note, Luke 16:9—13.)—Yet how far do they all come short of the Savior, who divides the spoil of his victories with the meanest of his followers! (Notes, Ps. 68:18. Eph. 4:11—13.) But, though the rebellious are now invited to accept of mercy and participate his favor; if they will not have him to reign over them, they shall receive no benefit from his redemption, the blessings of which will be confined to his friends, who trust and love him, and keep his commandments.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXXI. V. 2. Probably Saul never informed his sons, of what he had been told concerning his own and their approaching death: (28:19.) so that they were in the army, and slain before his eyes. Thus David's way to the throne was cleared: for if a large proportion of Israel stood up for the rights of Ish-bosheth, who was a very insignificant person; (2 Sam. 2:—4:) doubtless far more would have been strenuous for Jonathan. And, though he would readily have given place; yet his brethren and the people in general would no doubt have made much opposition to David's succession to the kingdom. (Note, 23:17,18.)

V. 3—6. Saul, when grievously wounded, and unable to resist or to flee, expressed no concern about his immortal soul; but only desired to be speedily despatched, that the Philistines might not insult over him, and put him to pain! (Note, Judg. 9:50—57.) His armor-bearer seems neither to have feared death, nor the guilt of murder, nor the wrath of God: but he had such reverence for the person of his prince, that he was incapable of lifting up his hand against him. Thus Saul became his own murderer; and his armor-bearer, in a mad expression of respect, imitated his example. Ahithophel and Judas the traitor likewise murdered themselves: (Notes, 2 Sam. 17:23. Matt. 27:3—5.) and I do not recollect any other instances in Scripture of this practice; unless Abimelech be added, who, when mortally wounded, ordered his armor-bearer to despatch him; and Zimri, who burnt his palace and himself in it. (Marg. Ref.) For suicide, whether from real or supposed insanity, or otherwise, seems to have very rarely occurred in Israel; while suicide among the Greeks and Romans, and other Gentiles, was considered as virtue, and never ascribed to insanity. So that the very numerous instances of self-murder, in this and other Christian countries, and generally considered as lunacy, have, in fact, no parallel, either in Israel, or among idolaters; and seem to be occasioned in this peculiar form, by an association of the Christian sentiment, that suicide is crime and murder, with a vain attempt in all parties to extenuate it, by ascribing it to madness. But when the character of the suicides mentioned in scripture is considered, it confirms the opinion, which has been advanced, of the enormous guilt and direful consequences of this crime.

(Note, Ex. 20:13.) Men, either madly presuming on the mercy of God, or despairing of it, in order to escape temporal sufferings or disgrace, despise his gift of life, and thus rush uncalled unto his tribunal, by an act of direct rebellion against his authority, and in proud defiance of his justice, with the guilt of all their unrepented crimes upon their heads! Yet so exceedingly has Satan blinded men's minds, that this worst of murders have been held honorable in very many ages, places, and situations, and has often been committed out of vain glory, in imitation of, or from affection to, those who have obtained renown among their fellow-sinners.—The Jews say, that Doeg was Saul's armor-bearer, having been preferred for slaying the priests of the LORD: and if so, his death was worthy of his life. (Notes, 22:9—19.)—Saul's sons and servants died in the performance of their duty to him and to their country: but he and his armor-bearer died in direct violation of God's commandment.

V. 7. The inhabitants of the cities, near the valley of Jezreel, and of the cities near "the passage of Jordan," or the place where men passed over that river, (בְּעֵבֶר הַיַּרְדֵּן) were so affrighted at these events, that they fled, and left their habitations to the conquerors.—These were the effects of rejecting the Lord and his prophet, and demanding a king! (Notes, 8:1—9. 12:16—19. Hos. 13:10,11.)

V. 8—10. The Philistines sent the head of Saul to be placed in the temple of Dagon, and his armor in that of Ashtaroth, as memorials of their victory, and in honor of their idols. (Notes, 5:1—5. Judg. 16:23,24. Dan. 5:1—9.) But his body, and the bodies of his sons, they fastened to the wall of Beth-shan, a city near to the field of battle. Thus Saul indeed escaped being tortured by them, but no dead body could be more inhumanly abused.—As the death of Saul made way for David to ascend the throne, the Philistines had no great cause to triumph on that account. (Notes, 2 Sam. 5:17—25. 21: 15—22. Is. 14:28—32.)

V. 11—13. This conduct of the men of Jabesh-gilead was a becoming expression of gratitude to Saul, as their deliverer in the beginning of his reign, and a proper rebuke to the barbarity of the Philistines. (Notes, 11: 2 Sam. 2:5—7. 21:9—14.) It is probable that they burned the bodies, lest the Philistines should recover and further abuse them: for though burning the dead was not customary in Israel, it was not prohibited. They fasted seven days, each day until the evening, as a token of their sorrow and humiliation under the divine rebuke. But there was no general lamentation in Israel made for Saul, as there had been for the prophet Samuel. (Notes, 25:1. 2 Chr. 21:18—20. Ec. 6:3—5. 8:9,10.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The objects of the divine displeasure are not only wretched themselves, but likewise the cause of calamities to all around them: yet, while the righteous are often involved with them in temporal troubles and death; they will be separated in the other world, and possess eternal happiness, when the wicked sink into everlasting misery: and frequently men's behavior, in the closing scene of life, strongly indicates their state beyond the grave.—How should we watch and pray, that we may not be given up to presumption or despair; but enabled patiently to bear the evils of life, and quietly to hope for the salvation of the Lord, that Satan may not tempt us to the horrible sin of self-murder!—It is comparatively of little consequence in what manner, or with what circumstances, we die, or what is done with our dead bodies: if our souls be but saved, our bodies likewise will be raised at last, incorruptible and glorious. But to be anxious to avoid pain or disgrace from men, and not to "fear him who is able to destroy both body and soul in hell," is the extreme of infatuation and impiety: yet even here also, ungodly men are often disappointed. Indeed, every worldly object which is inordinately craved, will become our trouble; and the desire, the possession, and the loss of it will all be sources of uneasiness to us.—When inhumanity and impiety attend prosperity, it will be transient: and the successes of ungodly men are commonly introductions to their misfortunes.—It behoves us to shew gratitude to our benefactors, even though they be wicked men; and to venture danger and trouble in doing so: yet how ineffectual is the kindness and respect of fellow-creatures to those, who are enduring the wrath of God!—While pompous funerals, magnificent monuments, and flattering encomiums combine to honor the memory of some illustrious deceased impenitent sinner, his poor soul is suffering the extremest misery and disgrace, in the regions of darkness and despair! "This also is a sore vanity." (Note, Luke 16: 22,23.) May we seek and find that honor which cometh from God only.

THE

SECOND BOOK OF SAMUEL,

OTHERWISE CALLED

THE SECOND BOOK OF THE KINGS.

THIS book derives the name, by which it is generally called, from the prophet Samuel, though he had been dead some time, when the history contained in it commences. Perhaps it was so named, because he anointed that king whose actions it records; or because the prophets by whom it was written were raised up in those seminaries, which he instituted. The names, however, of the books are no part of divine revelation; and its authority, as a part of the sacred oracles is not at all lessened, by conceding, that the title given it in the Septuagint, and the Vulgate, namely, 'The Second Book of the Kings,' is more appropriate.—The book itself most evidently continues the preceding narrative, and introduces that which follows: and its authenticity is considered as undoubted in every subsequent part of Scripture. The Psalms abound with references to the events recorded in it. (Ps. 3: title. 72. 78:70—72: 89:19—36. 132:) The narrative of David's fall in the matter of Uriah, related only in this book, is mentioned in other parts of Scripture. (1 Kings 15:5. Ps. 51: title. Matt. 1:6.) In short, wherever the covenant made with David, concerning the regal authority, as perpetuated in his family, and at length inherited by the Messiah to descend from him; or the promises made respecting Solomon, the especial type of Christ; or the Lord's choice of Jerusalem, and of mount Zion, as the place of his sanctuary, to which the Israelites should resort; or the building and continuance of the temple there, are mentioned; the events recorded in this book are divinely attested.—As containing the history of almost the whole of David's reign, and exclusively that of many important transactions, during this interesting period, there are perhaps more references directly or indirectly made to it in other parts of the Scripture, than to any other portion of the sacred narrative. The promises made to David, were, both in the literal and typical sense of them, evident prophecies, the fulfilment of which, as recorded in the subsequent books of Scripture, and in the history of the church and kingdom of Christ even to this day, are a divine attestation, that it was written by inspiration of that God, "to whom were known all his works from the beginning of the world." (Notes, 7: 22: 23:1—7.)—It opens with David's accession to the throne, his gradual prevalence against the house of Saul, and his establishment in the kingdom; it proceeds to relate his victories over his enemies, together with his zealous endeavors to reform the state of religion among his people, as well as to enlarge their territory and advance their prosperity. But with these more pleasing events are recorded the grievous sins which he committed, and the many domestic and public calamities with which he was chastised. These, as a dark cloud, cover the latter part of the history of this book; (which brings us almost to the close of his reign of forty years;) yet, through all, his character shines very bright in many instances, and we learn from another place, that he closed his life in a most honorable manner. (Notes, 1 Chr. 28: 29:)

CHAP. I. V. 1. David and his men had returned to Ziklag, and probably were employed in repairing its desolations, when tidings were brought him of the death of Saul. It does not appear that he made much inquiry concerning the event of the war, though he had every reason to be anxious about it. The decisive blow must have been given about the time when he was so exceedingly distressed. (Notes, 1 Sam. 30:1—6.)

it was, when he came to David, that [g] he fell to the earth, and did obeisance.

3 And David said unto him, [h] From whence comest thou? And he said unto him, Out of the camp of Israel [i] am I escaped.

4 And David said unto him, * How went the matter? I pray thee tell me. And he answered, That [k] the people are fled from the battle, and many of the people also are fallen and dead, and Saul and Jonathan his son are dead also.

5 And David said unto the young man that told him, [l] How knowest thou that Saul and Jonathan his son be dead?

6 And the young man that told him said, As [m] I happened by chance upon [n] mount Gilboa, behold, [o] Saul leaned upon his spear; and lo, the chariots and horsemen followed hard after him.

7 And when he looked behind him, he saw me, and called unto me: and I answered, † Here am I.

8 And he said unto me, Who art thou? And I answered him, I am [p] an Amalekite.

9 He said unto me again, Stand, I pray thee, upon me, and slay me; for ‡ anguish is come upon me, because my life is yet whole in me.

10 So I stood upon him, and [q] slew him, because I was sure that he could not live after that he was fallen: and I took [r] the crown that was upon his head, and the bracelet that was on his arm, and have brought them hither unto my lord.

11 Then David took hold on his clothes, and [s] rent them, and [t] likewise all the men that were with him.

12 And they [u] mourned and wept, and fasted until even, for Saul, and for Jonathan his son, and for the people of the LORD, and for the house of Israel, because they were fallen by the sword.

13 And David said unto the young man that told him, [x] Whence art thou? And he answered, I am the son of a stranger, an Amalekite.

14 And David said unto him, [y] How, wast thou not afraid [z] to stretch forth thine hand to destroy the LORD'S anointed?

V. 2—10. As it is expressly said, that the armor-bearer saw that Saul was dead, before he slew himself, (1 Sam. 31:5.) we must conclude that this man feigned many circumstances of his story. But happening to pass by the field of battle, and finding Saul's dead body, with the insignia of royalty on it, or near to it, he knew who it was; and by bringing these away he sufficiently proved Saul's death. He therefore framed his story, and ordered his behavior, in that manner which he supposed would most ingratiate him with David.—It is remarkable, that an Amalekite should boast of having slain Saul, who had been rejected for not punctually executing the command of God, concerning that nation. (1 Sam. 15:18—23. 28:18.) But this rendered the story the more improbable; for it might well be supposed, that Saul would be as unwilling to be slain by an Amalekite, as by a Philistine.—Anguish. (9) The marginal reading seems the true meaning of the original.

V. 11, 12. David mourned for Jonathan, as having lost a most excellent and beloved friend; for Saul, as having good will and compassion for him without resentment, and because every circumstance preceding and attending his death, was peculiarly melancholy and affecting; and for Israel, as having lost a multitude of valiant men, as disgracefully triumphed over by the Philistines, and as exposed to further injuries and oppressions. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 13—16. This man was an Amalekite, and so devoted by God himself to destruction; and David, as the king of Israel after Saul's death, was appointed to put this sentence in execution. He had boasted of having killed the king of Israel; David could not disprove his testimony: and having received no other intelligence, probably he believed it. By his own confession he deserved death; (for a man's desire to die cannot authorize another to kill him:) and by his punishment, David solemnly protested that he had no hand in the death of Saul; he warned all others not to expect favor from him, by doing violence to any of Saul's family; and he aimed to conciliate their good will, and that of Israel in general. (Notes, 4:8—12.)

V. 18. Perhaps the bow had fallen into disuse among the Israelites, and this had given the Philistines an advantage: at the time therefore 19 The [g] beauty of Israel is slain upon thy high places; [h] how are the mighty fallen!

20 [i] Tell it not in Gath, publish it not in the streets of Askelon; [k] lest the daughters of the Philistines rejoice, lest the [l] daughters of the uncircumcised triumph.

21 Ye [m] mountains of Gilboa, [n] let there be no dew, neither let there be rain upon you, nor fields [o] of offerings: for there the shield of the mighty is vilely cast away, the shield of Saul, as though he had not been [p] anointed with oil.

22 From the blood of the slain, from the fat of the mighty, [q] the bow of Jonathan turned not back, and the sword of Saul returned not empty.

23 Saul and Jonathan were lovely and [*] pleasant in their lives, and in their death [r] they were not divided: they were [s] swifter than eagles, they [t] were stronger than lions.

24 Ye [u] daughters of Israel, weep over Saul, who clothed you in scarlet with other delights, who put on ornaments of gold upon your apparel.

25 [x] How are the mighty fallen in the midst of the battle! O Jonathan, [y] thou wast slain in thine high places.

26 I am distressed for thee, my brother Jonathan; very pleasant hast thou been unto me: [z] thy love to me was wonderful, passing the love of women.

that this poem was inserted in the book of Jasher, (Note, Josh. 10:12—14.) it was also recorded, that David had given orders to the people, to habituate themselves to the expert use of the bow.—Some, however, understand this expression of a tune, or musical instrument, to which this poem was adapted.

V. 19—27. This elegy contains little directly relating to religion; but it is highly poetical. It was intended as a tribute of respect to the memory of Saul, and of affection to that of Jonathan; who perhaps was principally meant by "The beauty of Israel," being in every respect an ornament to his religion and people. Saul's valor and military renown are celebrated, and his faults are veiled; but nothing is spoken of his piety or justice. The charge given to every one, not to mention the catastrophe in the cities of the Philistines, lest the enemies of God should rejoice, is very beautiful. The wish that neither rain nor dew might fructify the fields, on which the fatal battle was fought; and that no sacrifices might thence be brought to the altar of God, because there the anointed of the LORD had cast away his shield, as if he had been a common soldier, is a strong expression of regret for such an event. The harmony, which generally subsisted between Saul and Jonathan, in warring against the enemies of Israel; the impetuosity and fury with which they had together charged and pursued them; and their falling in the same battle, are touched upon in a very poetical manner. It is probable, that Saul had encouraged the manufactures of Israel, and perhaps had increased their wealth: the daughters of Israel therefore, as most delighted with external embellishment, are called upon to lament over their prince. Every thing is mentioned in his commendation, which truth permitted: but Jonathan is named with most passionate affection; as having fallen upon the high places, where he had often successfully displayed his valor; and as having shewn a strong and faithful affection, in such trying circumstances, and in so disinterested a manner, as could not be equalled by any instances of conjugal fidelity, or the most constant love which had ever subsisted between the sexes. Considering therefore how pleasant his friendship had been to David, he could not but be greatly distressed at his premature death.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—16.

The deepest distress sometimes immediately precedes the dawning of deliverance: but those, who have committed their concerns to the Lord, should quietly abide his will; and repress that eagerness and anxiety, with which others disquiet themselves, when they expect important changes.—Many secretly wish for the death of those who keep them from honors or estates, without excepting even their nearest relations; and inwardly rejoice at those events for which they decently appear to mourn. This is well known to mercenary men, who form their plans accordingly; and are apt to conclude that all are actuated by the same selfish principles. But the grace of God subdues this base disposition, and forms the mind to a more liberal temper: the true believer does not allow himself to desire, or to rejoice in, the calamity or death of a rival or an enemy; (Note, Prov. 24:17,18.) much less for that of a kind and superior relation, to whom gratitude and honor are justly due: and his mourning will on such occasions be unfeigned, though moderated by submission to the will of God. He cannot exult in the prospect of worldly advancement: for he considers himself as by it intrusted with more talents, surrounded by greater temptations, and called to increasing cares, duties, and burdens. Those therefore will be deceived, who court his favor, as sycophants do that of ungodly superiors: they will meet with a frown, a rebuke, and perhaps punishment, where they expected a large reward: and this treatment of such mercenary men promises a useful and honorable possession of worldly pre-eminence.

V. 17—27.

The faults even of our enemies should not be needlessly exposed, and all remembrance of injuries should be buried with the deceased, except the glory of God and the benfit of men require the contrary; and the offices and rank of distinguished persons are entitled to respect, though their characters do not deserve our esteem.—Useful endowments are conferred on numbers who are destitute of true piety; and it is in some cases allowable and decent to give them due commendation: yet we must on no account praise them for virtues which they do not possess. But holiness demands our peculiar love, and renders the society of those who possess it very pleasant to the true believer. Next to the love which subsists between the Lord and his people, that endeared affection which springs from it, produces the most vigorous, durable, faithful, and disinterested friendship: (Notes, 1 Pet. 1:22—25.) yet even this heavenly love occasions deep distress in this world, in which it is an exotic; but in its own climate above, it will flourish into unalloyed and eternal pleasure. —The calamities of the Lord's people, and the triumphs of his enemies, always grieve the hearts of true believers, whatever advantages they may incidentally derive from them; and it would be well, if many things which continually occur among professed Christians could be concealed from infidels and profligates, who are exceedingly hardened and emboldened by them. But it is not enough to conceal offences. Indeed the wish to do it is vain, and the thing itself generally impracticable: and the very endeavor often increases the mischief; being considered as an effort to connive at or palliate evil conduct, in those of our own creed or party. And at the same time the hope of escaping disgrace decreases resistance in the hour of temptation; and so multiplies the scandals themselves. We must therefore watch and pray against them, and use all our influence to prevent them. Let us then learn to repress ambition, resentment, and self-love; and to exercise patience, meekness, gratitude to our benefactors, love to our country, and good will to men; with zeal for the glory of God, and the interests of true religion.

NOTES.

CHAP. II. V. 1—3. After the death of Saul many of the Israelites resorted to David at Ziklag, till his forces became very considerable: (Notes, 1 Chr. 12:1—22.) yet he took no step to obtain possession of the vacant throne, without consulting the Lord as in former instances, by Abiathar the priest. (Marg. Ref.—Notes, Ex. 28:30. Num. 27:21.) He trusted in him who had promised him the kingdom, to give it him in his own time and manner; that he might possess it with a clear conscience, and avoid all appearance of those evils, with which he knew Saul's adherents would be ready to charge him. (Note, 1 Kings 11:37.) Judah was his own tribe, and he was decided in his opinion, that he must first go up to some city of that tribe. Accordingly he was directed to go up to Hebron, a chief city of Judah: and his men with their families were placed in the adjacent towns, dependent on Hebron. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 4. David had been privately anointed by Samuel, as Saul's successor; (1 Sam. 16:12,13.) and now the principal persons in the tribe of Judah publicly anointed him to be their king; but they did not attempt to place him over the other tribes. (Note, 5:3.)

V. 5—7. David took every opportunity of expressing the same regard to Saul, as he had done in his life-time.—But he and three of his sons were now dead; and all Israel knew that Saul's family had been rejected by the Lord, who had appointed David his successor. The tribe of Judah had recognized his title: it was proper that he should act as king: and he could not begin his reign by a more conciliating measure, than by sending a deputation to thank those, who had rescued the bodies of Saul and his sons, and performed the funeral ceremonies over them. (Note, 1 Sam. 31:11—13.) He not only besought the Lord to reward the men of Jabesh, but promised that he also would requite them; being determined to shew all kindness to the friends of his predecessor: and he also encouraged them to expect his firm support against the Philistines and other enemies.

V. 8. Abner was a near relation of Saul, and commander of his armies; and Ish-bosheth was 9 And made him king over [q] Gilead, and over the [r] Ashurites, and over Jezreel, and over Ephraim, and over Benjamin, and over all Israel.

10 Ish-bosheth Saul's son was forty years old when he began to reign over Israel, and reigned two years: but the house of Judah followed David.

11 And [s] the * time that David was king in Hebron over the house of Judah, was seven years and six months.

[Practical Observations.]

12 ¶ And Abner the son of Ner, and the servants of Ish-bosheth the son of Saul, went out from Mahanaim to [t] Gibeon.

13 And [u] Joab the son of Zeruiah, and the servants of David, went out, and met [†] together by the [x] pool of Gibeon: and they sat down, the one on the one side of the pool, and the other on the other side of the pool.

14 And Abner said to Joab, Let the young men now arise, and [y] play before us. And Joab said, Let them arise.

15 Then there arose and went over by number twelve of Benjamin, which pertained to Ish-bosheth the son of Saul, and twelve of the servants of David.

16 And they caught every one his fellow by the head, and thrust his sword in his fellow's side; so they fell down together: wherefore that place was called [‡] Helkath-hazzurim, which is in Gibeon.

17 And there was a very sore battle that day: and Abner was beaten, and the men of Israel, before the servants of David.

18 And there were [z] three sons of Zeruiah there, Joab, and Abishai, and Asahel: and Asahel [a] was as light of [§] foot as a [‖] wild roe.

22 And Abner said again to Asahel, Turn thee aside from following me: [c] wherefore should I smite thee to the ground? [d] how then should I hold up my face to Joab thy brother?

23 Howbeit, he refused to turn aside: wherefore Abner, with the hinder end of an insignificant person: Abner therefore doubtless intended to give him only the title of king, and to possess the authority himself. (Marg. Ref.—Notes, 3:6—12,17—21. 1 Sam. 14:47—52.) Either Abner had not been present at the battle in Gilboa, or he had escaped by flight.

V. 9. Abner deemed it prudent to fix Ish-bosheth's residence at Mahanaim, east of Jordan, (Note, Gen. 32:1,2.) as most secure both from David and the Philistines; yet all the tribes west of Jordan adhered to him, except the tribe of Judah.—The Ashurites were the tribe of Asher.—The nation in general had rejected the judges, whom God had raised up for them, and had demanded a king: and, in the same rebellious spirit they refused the prince whom the Lord had selected for them, who was a man of approved abilities and character; and preferred the surviving son of their rejected king, though in every respect an improper person. In this, David was a type of Christ, whom Israel would not submit to, though anointed by the Father to be their Prince and Savior. (Notes, 1 Sam. 8: 1—9. Ps. 2: Luke 19:11—27. Acts 7:51—53.)

V. 10, 11. For two years Ish-bosheth reigned in peace, and David made no attempts against him: but for the remainder of the seven years and six months, there was war. Abner possessed the authority, and Ish-bosheth was only a nominal king. Ish-bosheth signifies a man of shame. He is also called Esh-baal. (1 Chr. 8: 33. Note, Judg. 6:31,32.) He was evidently a very inconsiderable and despised person.

V. 12, 13. David was made king by God himself, and had never been subject to Ish-bosheth: yet he did not begin hostilities, but waited to see how God would order things in his favor. When however Abner made war on him, he was not bound to the same measures of mere self-defence, as when persecuted by the Lord's anointed.—Abner marched his army over Jordan, unto Gibeon of Benjamin, doubtless expecting to be effectually supported, in subjecting the tribe of Judah to Ish-bosheth· but David opposed an army to him under the command of Joab, his sister's son; and to the instructions given him we may ascribe the mod eration with which he conducted the war. 'For 'he had sworn to Saul, that he would not cut off 'his seed, and therefore would not willingly en-'gage against Ish-bosheth.' Bp. Patrick. (Note, 1 Sam. 24:16—22.)

V. 14—16. It is probable that Joab kept upon the defensive, and gave Abner no opportunity of attacking him; and that Abner's impatience to engage induced him to give this rash challenge. He expressed himself, as if he only intended to make diversion for the two armies, according to the horrible custom of gladiators in after ages, who gratified the diabolical spectators by murdering each other. Joab, though backward to engage, had not resolution to refuse the challenge. Some think that only the the spear smote him under [e] the fifth rib, that the spear came out behind him; and he fell down there, and died in the same place: and it came to pass, that as many as came to the place where Asahel fell down and died, [f] stood still.

24 Joab also and Abishai pursued after Abner: and the sun went down when they were come to the hill of Ammah, that lieth before Giah, by the way of the wilderness of Gibeon.

25 And the children of Benjamin gathered themselves together after Abner, and became one troop, and stood on the top of an hill.

26 Then Abner called to Joab, and said, [g] Shall the [h] sword devour for ever? knowest thou not that it will be bitterness in the latter end? [i] how long shall it be then, ere thou bid the people return from following their brethren?

27 And Joab said, As [k] God liveth, [l] unless thou hadst spoken, surely then [*] in the morning the people had [†] gone up every one from following his brother.

28 So Joab blew a trumpet, and all the people stood still, and pursued after Israel no more, neither fought they any more.

29 And Abner and his men walked all that night through the plain, and passed over Jordan, and went through all [m] Bithron, and they came to Mahanaim.

30 And Joab returned from following Abner: and when he had gathered all the people together, there lacked of David's servants nineteen men and Asahel.

31 But the servants of David had smitten of Benjamin, and of Abner's men, so that [n] three hundred and threescore men died.

32 And they took up Asahel, and [o] buried him in the sepulchre of his father which was in Beth-lehem. And Joab and his men [p] went all night, and they came to Hebron at break of day.

twelve Benjamites were slain: but the words more obviously mean, that all the company were butchered.

V. 18—23. The circumstances, stated in these verses, shew that Abner was not at all to blame in the death of Asahel: for he was constrained to slay him in his own defence; as nothing could satisfy Asahel, but either killing or taking captive the commander of Ish-bosheth's army, for which he was wholly incompetent. (Notes, 3:26,27,31.)

Sons of Zeruiah. (18) Zeruiah was David's sister: (1 Chr. 2:16.) and Joab, Abishai, and Asahel were his nephews. (Notes, 23:18—24. 1 Chr. 11:6.)

V. 26—29. Abner used very different language when vanquished, than when eager to engage. (Note, 14—16.) Now he spoke "of the sword devouring for ever," and of the bitterness which the slaughter would occasion in the event; and recollected that the combatants were brethren. He forgot himself, however, when he threw the blame upon Joab; and he would not have made so moderate a use of victory had he obtained it. Though Joab was deeply exasperated by the death of his brother; yet, in regard to David's inclinations and Israel's advantage, he stopped the pursuit, and gave Abner and his troops an opportunity of retiring to a place of safety.

V. 30—32. (Marg. Ref.) The slain of Israel, though much exceeding that of David's men, were not numerous. This might be owing to the directions given by David, to be as lenient as possible: but the death of Asahel seems to have stopped the pursuers, and greatly to have favored the escape of the vanquished. (23. Note, 26—29.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—11.

If we would possess temporal things with a blessing, we must not eagerly seize upon them, nor be determined by favorable events or carnal counsellors: but we must observe the rules of God's word, and pray for his direction; using those means, and those only, which he has appointed or allowed, and avoiding all evil and "appearance of evil," in our pursuit of them: and then whatever else we fail in, we shall certainly be directed in the way to the kingdom of heaven.—Those who have shared our afflictions should be associated in our prosperity; as they, "who suffer with Christ, shall also reign with him."—When we are influenced by faith, and the fear and love of God, and act with integrity, kindness, forgiveness, and a desire of peace, we conduct our affairs with the best wisdom.—We are bound to pray for and do good to those who have acted properly, even to our enemies; and to use conciliatory measures towards all men, but especially those who have behaved with gratitude and fidelity, in dangerous circumstances and without prospect of advantage: for such friends are worthy of attention; and they, who have been grateful to one benefactor, will find another to protect them when he is removed. But the believer's progress must be gradual: his faith and graces must be exercised and proved, and his pride subdued, before he can properly endure any kind of prosperity: and for these purposes, the Lord often employs the perverseness of his brethren, without their knowledge or contrary to their intention.—In the professing church few honor those whom the Lord will honor: before Jesus came, and in every succeeding generation, the very builders have rejected such as He intended for eminent situations; and his servants must be conformed to him.—Ambition, jealousy, envy, and other evil passions, cause men to rebel against the word of God: but they generally attempt to conceal their real motives under plausible pretences. The believer's wisdom, however, consists in waiting quietly and silently under injuries, and in leaving God to plead his cause, except it is evidently his duty to be active. But there is a respect due to superior relations, to which equals or inferiors, in similar circumstances, are not entitled.

CHAP. III.

David grows stronger, and Ish-bosheth weaker, during the war, 1. Six sons are born to David in Hebron, 2—5. Abner quarrels with Ish-bosheth, and offers his services to David, 6—12. David demands and receives back Michal, 13—16. Abner communes with the Israelites, goes to David, and is feasted by him, and sent away in peace, 17—21. Joab is angry with David, and murders Abner, 22—27. David protests against his wickedness, and denounces a curse upon him, 28—30. David mourns for Abner, 31—39.

NOW there was [a] long war [b] between the house of Saul and the house of David: but [c] David waxed stronger and stronger, and the house of Saul waxed weaker and weaker.

2 And unto David were [d] sons born in Hebron: and his first born was [e] Amnon, of [f] Ahinoam the Jezreelitess;

4 And the fourth [l] Adonijah the son of Haggith; and the fifth, Shephatiah the son of Abital;

5 And the sixth, Ithream, by Eglah David's wife. These were born to David in Hebron.

6 ¶ And it came to pass, while there was war between the house of Saul and the house of David, that [m] Abner made himself strong for the house of Saul.

7 And Saul had a concubine, whose name was [n] Rizpah, the daughter of Aiah: and Ish-bosheth said to Abner, Wherefore hast thou [o] gone in unto my father's concubine?

8 Then was Abner [p] very wroth for the words of Ish-bosheth, and said, Am [q] I a dog's head, which against Judah [r] do shew kindness this day unto the house of Saul thy father, to his brethren, and to his friends, and have not delivered thee into the hand of David, that thou chargest me to-day with a fault concerning this woman?

V. 12—32.

Ambitious and bloody men often consider the dire trade of war, and the slaughter of their fellow-creatures, as a mere diversion; and the lives of millions have been trifled away, out of an irrational point of honor, to the great gratification of Satan, that first great murderer of the bodies and souls of men. From age to age numbers are ambitious of venturing their lives and souls, for the empty hope of being celebrated as valiant men, after they are dead! and from the same motive they mingle the blood of their brethren with their own; though they bear them no resentment, and have received no provocation from them! But what can be more senseless and infatuated than such a conduct?—The sword of civil war, when once unsheathed, is not easily returned into the scabbard; and those who, in their eagerness to engage, make light of such unnatural contests, will perceive in the event that they are bitterness to all concerned.—Men are exceedingly disposed to throw the blame of manifest evil upon others, that they may exculpate themselves: and those arguments which were disregarded as futile when employed against them, will often be deemed very conclusive when urged on their own behalf.—Success, as well as self-love, has a great effect in determining men's judgments: of the evil of prosperous attempts they cannot be convinced; yet they can easily perceive those measures to be wrong, which occasion loss or peril to themselves! Such partial decisions should be exposed and rebuked: yet it is always right to exercise clemency to the vanquished, and generosity to the wretched; to spare the shedding of human blood; to alleviate, in every way we possibly can, the sum of human misery; and to strive for peace, especially in the intestine contentions of nations or churches, where the common cause must suffer, which party soever may acquire the ascendency.—Different endowments qualify us for varied kinds of service, and should be improved for that purpose. But when talents are over-rated, and when men confide and glory in them, they will go beyond the dictates of prudence, as well as out of the line of duty, in order to distinguish themselves; they will despise warning and counsel, as the effect of envy and cowardice; and they will always be shamed, and frequently ruined, by those qualifications in which they prided themselves. Often do men fancy themselves about to seize upon happiness, when death stops their career, and lays them in the dust: and if they will rush forwards in the road to destruction, though plainly warned of their danger, they can blame none but themselves.—Finally, there are many distinctions among us, both during life, and in the disposal of our bodies after death; but in the eternal world no distinction subsists, except between those, "who have served the LORD, and those who have not served him."

NOTES.

CHAP. III. V. 1. The civil war, between David and Ish-bosheth, continued about five years and a half: but it seems to have been conducted with great moderation on the part of David. He, however, gained continually upon the esteem and affections of the people, and in the extent of his dominions and the number of his subjects; while Ish-bosheth gradually sunk into insignificance and contempt. (Notes, 2:10, 11. Prov. 4:18,19.)

V. 2—5. (Marg. Ref.) David's motives for multiplying wives must have been carnal, in one way or other; and his conduct in this respect proved the occasion of much sin and trouble, in the subsequent part of his life. He had by all his wives no more than six sons, during the seven years that he reigned at Hebron; though probably he had some daughters, who are not mentioned.—Perhaps Maacah, the 11 And he could not answer Abner a word again, [x] because he feared him.

12 ¶ And Abner sent messengers to David on his behalf, saying, [y] Whose is the land? saying also, [z] Make thy league with me, and behold, [a] my hand shall be with thee, to bring about all Israel unto thee.

13 And he said, Well; I will make a league with thee: but one thing I require of thee, * that is, [b] Thou shalt not see my face, except thou first bring [c] Michal Saul's daughter, when thou comest to see my face.

14 And David sent messengers to Ish-bosheth Saul's son, saying, Deliver me my wife Michal, which I espoused to me for a hundred foreskins of the Philistines.

15 And Ish-bosheth sent, and took her from her husband, even from [d] Phaltiel the son of Laish.

16 And her husband went with her † along weeping behind her to [e] Bahurim. Then said Abner unto him, Go, return. And he returned. [Practical Observations]

18 Now then do it: [f] for the LORD hath spoken of David, saying, [g] By the hand of my servant David I will save my people Israel out of the hand of the Philistines, and out of the hand of all their enemies.

19 And Abner also spake in the ears of [h] Benjamin: and Abner went also to speak in the ears of David in Hebron, all that seemed good to Israel, and that seemed good to the whole house of Benjamin.

20 So Abner came to David to Hebron, and twenty men with him. And [i] David made Abner, and the men that were with him, a feast.

21 And Abner said unto David, I will arise and go, and [j] will gather all Israel unto my lord the king, that they may make a league with thee, and that thou mayest [k] reign over all that thine heart desireth. And David sent Abner away; and he went in peace.

daughter of Talmai, had been taken prisoner, and proselyted before David married her: though some think David had contracted affinity with the king of Geshur, to strengthen himself against Ish-bosheth.—It is not known, why Eglah only is called "David's wife."

V. 6—10. (Marg. Ref.) Perhaps Abner was weary of Ish-bosheth's unsuccessful cause, and was glad of an occasion of seeking preferment in David's service. No doubt he was guilty of the crime charged upon him, which was considered as a claim to the kingdom of a deceased prince. (Notes, 1 Kings 2:15—25.) Ish-bosheth however was very imprudent to mention it, as he was entirely dependent upon Abner. He proudly disdained to be called to an account by Ish-bosheth, after all his boasted services to the house of Saul; which he had supported, not only against the house of Judah, but against the known appointment of God confirmed by an oath, (17, 18.) and against the convictions of his own conscience. Ambition, and not regard to Ish-bosheth, had hitherto induced him to support his interest: and revenge and policy, not regard to the will of God, at length prevailed with him at this time to join David's party. 'Such is the genius of many great courtiers, who 'are irritated on slight occasions; and rather 'rule over kings, than are ruled by them.' Pellicanus.

Dog's head. (8) (Marg. Ref.) A proverbial expression for what was deemed worthless and contemptible.—Some explain it to mean, 'As if I were only fit to be set over a company 'of dogs.'

V. 12. Whose is the land?] Abner by this expression seems to have insinuated, that he, not Ish-bosheth, retained the authority: if therefore David would grant him advantageous terms, he would put him in possession of the whole land.—Some however interpret the words, as an acknowledgment of David's title by the appointment of God to the kingdom over all Israel.

V. 13—16. David knew that the kingdom was his, in the purpose of God; it was desirable to sheath the sword of civil war, and to unite all Israel voluntarily under one king; he was not accountable for Abner's secret motives; and doubtless he meant to grant Ish-bosheth very favorable terms, had not his purposes been prevented.—If David had divorced Michal, and she had in consequence been married to another, he must not have received her again: but the separation was violent on both sides. (Notes, 1 Sam. 18:23—27. 25:43,44.) It is probable that her marriage to Phaltiel was a force upon her inclinations: and Phaltiel was very criminal in taking another man's wife, whatever affection he had for her.—David required Michal to be restored, perhaps out of affection for her; or to strengthen his interest by asserting his affinity with the house of Saul, and shewing the value he put upon it; or to shew his regard for the law of God, and to rebuke a man who openly violated it.—As Abner did not deem it politic, at that juncture, directly to take Michal from Phaltiel, David addressed himself to Ish-bosheth, whose sister she was, who complied with his demand; perhaps being willing to be upon amicable terms with him, as he could not overcome him by arms.

V. 17—21. Abner, being satisfied that David would recompense his services, was very active in bringing the elders of the other tribes, and of Benjamin in particular, to receive David as their king.—It seems, that the people in general had desired this, especially when Saul and his sons were slain; but that Abner's great authority had induced them to set up Ish-bosheth: so that now, when Abner entered into the interests of David, he had little difficulty in bringing them over to him. The words which Abner mentions, as spoken by the LORD concerning David, are not found in the preceding history; but the meaning of them is implied in the promises given him. (Marg. Ref. f, g.)—Having made all requisite preparations, Abner went to David, and being cordially entertained, and peaceably dismissed, he expected, no doubt, to obtain high preferment under him.

V. 22. A troop.] Probably, this was a troop of Philistines, or other enemies, not of Ish-bosheth's forces.

V. 24, 25. Joab, and his brother Abishai, David's nephews, had been very faithful and useful to him in his afflictions; and from gratitude and natural affection, he had inadvertently given them almost as great an ascendency over him, as Abner had over Ish-bosheth: so that he had trusted and feared them too much, and allowed them all the importance which they claimed; and that had emboldened them, especially Joab, to a high degree of presumption. Indeed nothing could well be more affronting than this address of Joab to his prince, whom he grossly charged with the most egregious folly, and then left his presence without waiting for an answer! (Marg. Ref.) But it was the language of envy and ambition, as well as of resentment: he supposed that he had missed an opportunity of avenging the death of Asahel, and he feared a formidable rival, if Abner made a league with David; for it is evident he only pretended to doubt his sincerity.

V. 26, 27. Joab seems to have recalled Abner, in David's name, without his knowledge; which was very base treatment of him, as if he meant to bring him under suspicion of conniving at the murder: and when Abner, imprudently indeed, but in confidence, stepped aside to confer with him as the officer of David, he treacherously assassinated him, in violation of every law of hospitality and public faith. Abishai also was privy to, or concerned in, the base transaction. (30) But, while Joab's conduct cannot be too severely reprobated, the wisdom and justice of God are manifest in Abner's punishment. From ambition he had pertinaciously, against his conscience, opposed the declared and known will of God; and was induced by base resentment to desert Ish-bosheth, and offer his services to David. (Note, 6—10.) He was therefore thrown aside, as unworthy to raise David to the throne, or to give peace to Israel. Indeed it is probable, that if he had lived, his ambition, talents, influence, and ungodliness would have occasioned further mischief to all parties.

V. 28, 29. (Marg. Ref.) David no doubt intended by these protestations, and imprecations upon Joab and his family, to wipe off all suspicion of his own guilt, and to remove it from the land; being perhaps afraid of a revolt of the soldiers, if he proceeded to execute vengeance on the murderer. But he should have remembered, that He, "who stilleth the raging of the sea," is able also "to still the madness of the people." In so just a cause he ought to have risked all consequences. He was anointed king to administer justice without respect of persons; and he might have been assured of the Lord's support in doing so important a duty: the example would have been very salutary; all impartial persons would have applauded his firmness; perhaps Ish-bosheth's murder would have been prevented, as well as many other crimes and calamities, in the latter part of his reign. But his fear of man in this instance overcame his faith in God, and Joab continued and increased in authority, and in crimes, to the end of David's life: he was at length, however, called to account for them all. (Notes, 38,39. 4:

V. 31. Joab was constrained to do penance, so to speak, by appearing as a mourner for Abner: but, as his revenge was gratified, his rival removed, and no heavier punishment inflicted, it is likely he would have but little objection to such a ceremonial. David, however, no doubt intended to lessen Joab's authority with the people, by requiring his attendance: but his military rank and achievements counteracted and rendered ineffectual this design; as might have been foreseen.

V. 33, 34. Abner did not die as criminals do, who are bound, fettered, put to shame, and executed for their offences; nor as a coward fleeing from enemies, or taken prisoner by them; nor as a rash man, who had needlessly run himself into danger: but as an honest man, who is unexpectedly set upon by ruffians, and murdered. —It must have been very mortifying to Joab, to be thus publicly reproached as an assassin.

V. 35. The Israelites had a custom of inviting, and pressing, the friends of the dead to take food, after the funeral was over; it being supposed that their sorrow would indispose them to it. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 38, 39. David, in thus addressing his officers, seems first to have given a reason, why he made such lamentation over Abner; and then to have excused himself for not punishing Joab and Abishai. The near relation, in which Joab and Abishai stood to David; (Note, 2:18.) their steady adherence to him, during Saul's persecutions; the important services which they had rendered him; and the influence, which they had thus acquired among his soldiers and friends, and even with him; combined to render it extremely difficult, and even perilous to oppose and punish them. But the satisfaction, which the people expressed in the former part of his conduct, shewed, that he might notwithstanding very safely have proceeded to execute the divine law on the offenders, in its utmost strictness.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.
V. 1—16.

The power and policy of Satan, and of wicked men, may struggle against the purposes of God, and the cause of his anointed King, and occasion apparent delays: but his interest is gaining ground, though by unnoticed degrees, and his glory will ere long be displayed throughout the earth.—When he sets up his kingdom in any heart, inbred lusts and outward temptations will powerfully oppose it: but grace will gather strength, and every corruption be weakened continually in the conflict, till the believer is at length sanctified wholly in spirit, soul, and body.—Inconstancy must be incident to selfish men: if their avarice or ambition meets with disappointment in one course, they will turn into another: and sometimes making pretensions to religion seems the readiest way to the gratification of worldly ambition, rapacity, or revenge.—Many are not above committing very base crimes, who are too proud to bear reproof, or even the suspicion of being guilty: and while men go on in their sins apparently without concern, they are often conscious that they are fighting against God!—Little confidence can be placed in those who affront their Maker, betray their country, or deceive those who confide in them, under the pretence of serving their friends: most certainly they mean to serve their own purposes; and will betray those also who now trust them, when they can obtain advantageous terms for doing it. Yet even by such as act from revenge, ambition, lust, or avarice, the Lord secretly carries on his own designs: but as they intend not to honor him, whatever they profess; so when his ends are answered, he will throw them aside with contempt.—In some cases, and for some purposes, we too may use their help, without inquiring about their motives: but it will require great caution and wisdom, else we shall not escape guilt or reproach.—The re-union of near relatives, who have been involuntarily separated, is right in itself: and it is always our duty to express our regard for the divine law, and to bear testimony against sin.—Though guilt commonly renders men the objects of our deepest compassion; yet no affection can be either truly amiable or allowable, which is not regulated according to the word of God.

V. 17—39.

The bulk of mankind, in all ages, are guided by those who rule or teach them, and address their passions by eloquence or flattery: but let us seek for a sound judgment, a good conscience, and an upright heart; that we may know and adhere to the truth and will of God, amidst all changes.—Those who have deceived others, should endeavor to undeceive them: but good words will do little, while a man continues the slave of his lusts.—In cultivating Christian tempers and performing relative duties, extremes and counterfeits must be guarded against: as zeal and boldness may become furious and contentious; so meekness, and the love of peace may degenerate into imbecility and irresolution; and through undue ascendency of those inferiors, who ought "to be kept in subjection with all gravity," shameful things will often be done or connived at, to the disgrace of individuals, and the reproach of the common cause. Every one therefore should know his own place and duties, and exercise the Christian temper in doing them; and not make the fear of being ruffled or discomposed an excuse for neglecting them.—Proud men rate their services so high, and are so regardless of relative duties and decorum, that it is not desirable to be under obligations to them: we should however receive every thing as from God; and consider every man as a channel through which the gift is communicated, of whom there is indeed no real necessity, on whom we should rest no dependence, and to whom that gratitude is due, and that alone, which consists with every other duty.—Ungodly men, who cannot brook an affront or a rival, and who deem themselves too powerful for human justice, have little to restrain them from the commission of the most horrid crimes: and the human heart is capable of making the highest professions of friendship subservient to the most cruel murders, and of violating every sacred tie. It is not enough for those, who are invested with authority, to express their abhorrence of such crimes and criminals, or their compassion for those who suffer by them: but all partialities, relative affections, and interested considerations should be laid aside, and condign punishment inflicted; that "others may hear, and fear, and do no more such wickedness:" and in every state, the executive authority should possess power sufficient to punish the proudest subject, lest blood be imputed to the land. As our lives are so exposed on every side; and as he most emphatically "dieth as a fool," who dies in his sins; we should be careful to be always ready: for all the honor or commendations, that men can bestow on us after our decease, will not affect or amend the state of the departed soul.—Alas, what are the imagined advantages of royalty? The king "after God's own heart" finds as much cause for lamentation and complaint, as when a poor fugitive! But he who now reigns upon the throne of David, has a kingdom of a nobler kind: whatever he does is noticed by and pleases all his willing people: and he will bring them all to share his glory and joy. Many however are outwardly serviceable to his cause, who only seek themselves in all they do, and from time to time disgrace it with their crimes: these may escape for a season, but at length they shall be numbered with his enemies, and shall perish for ever.

NOTES.

CHAP. IV. V. 1. Perhaps Ish-bosheth had not before been certainly informed, that Abner had deserted to David: or, both he and the people hoped by Abner's means to have obtained better terms. But by his death their affairs were left in a most unsettled and dangerous situation; and they had no person in whom they could place confidence, either as leading them to battle, or as negotiating a treaty.

V. 2—4. Beeroth was one of the cities of Gibeon, (Josh. 9:17.) and it was allotted to Benjamin; (Josh. 18:25.) but when Saul's army was routed, and he and his sons slain, the inhabitants of Beeroth deserted their city, and went to sojourn at Gittaim; where they remained, when this history was written. (Neh. 11:33. Note, 1 Sam. 31:7.) At the same time Mephibosheth fell and was lamed.—These facts seem to have been recorded, to illustrate the consternation which followed the death of Saul and his sons: and perhaps Mephibosheth's youth and lameness emboldened Rechab and Baanah to murder Ish-bosheth; as Mephibosheth was the next heir of Saul, and the avenger of blood. (Note, Num. 35:11—15.)

V. 5. Ish-bosheth had enough to employ him in this emergency, without sleeping on his bed

6 And they came thither into the midst of the house, as though they would have fetched wheat; and they smote him [k] under the fifth rib: and Rechab and Baanah his brother escaped.

7 For when they came into the house, he lay on his bed in his bed-chamber, and they smote him, and slew him, and beheaded him, and [l] took his head, and gat them away through the plain all night.

8 And they brought the head of Ish-bosheth unto David to Hebron, and said to the king, Behold the head of Ish-bosheth the son of Saul, thine enemy, which [m] sought thy life; and [n] the LORD hath avenged my lord the king this day of Saul, and of his seed.

9 And David answered Rechab and Baanah his brother the sons of Rimmon the Beerothite, and said unto them, As the LORD liveth, [o] who hath redeemed my soul out of all adversity, at noon. But he appears to have been an inactive, self-indulgent man. It was indeed, and is still, a custom in the east countries, to retire for sleep about noon; that is, for such as live in ease and luxury, not for others, except in very sultry regions. The Scripture gives no intimation that this was a common practice in Israel. (Marg. Ref. j.)

V. 6, 7. Rechab and Baanah, as captains of bands, had access to some granary attached to Ish-bosheth's house, whence their soldiers had provisions; and under this pretence, without being suspected, they entered into his apartments and stabbed him, in that part of the body where a wound was known to be most certainly fatal. (Marg. Ref. k.)—And when he was thus slain, they cut off his head also, and escaped.

V. 8. These men entirely mistook David's character, as if he had such a thirst for revenge, that he would reward any villany by which it could be accomplished: and they presumed that they had performed the will of God, in this complicated treason and parricide! The LORD had indeed avenged his servant of his enemies: but neither David, nor David's LORD, had commissioned them to murder their prince, whom they professed to serve. (Note, 3:6—10.)

V. 9, 10. Redeemed, &c. (9) (Marg. Ref. —Note, Gen. 48:16.) By using this language, David reminded all who heard him, that in his most extreme dangers, he had neither used treachery or cruelty himself, nor allowed his men to use them. It must therefore be evident, that now the Lord had rescued and prospered him, he had no temptation to countenance such traitors as Rechab and Baanah.

V. 11, 12. (Note, 1:13—16.) Whatever Ish-bosheth's character was before God, he was righteous as to his murderers, having done them no injury, and given them no provocation: so that in slaying him, they "shed innocent blood," from the basest motives, and with the greatest aggravations: and David, as God's vicegerent, most justly executed vengeance upon them for it. (Note, Ex. 23:6—9.)—It would have been well, if he had been equally decisive in the case of Joab: that there might have been no appearance of partiality, and no hope of impunity to any criminal. (Note, 3:28,29.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Innumerable are the perils, to which our tender years are exposed: and we owe much gratitude both to God and to our parents, if preserved during that period, from losing our limbs or senses, or contracting harms, which would have rendered our whole lives uncomfortable to ourselves and others. Parents too should take occasion from this reflection, not only to be very attentive to their offspring, but by prayer to commit them continually to the Lord's keeping.—Every thing will concur in forwarding the accomplishment of God's word, whether of promise or of wrath, when the appointed time approaches: on one hand there can be no failure; on the other, no escape.—Wretched indeed are they, who are engaged in undertakings, in which none can serve them without opposing the known will of God! The more exalted their station, the greater is their danger: for the very men, in whom they repose their chief confidence, are destitute of principle, serve them only for gain, and will betray or murder them when their mercenary schemes require it.—Alas! what numbers sink from self-indulgence and carnal security, into unsuspected and inevitable destruction!—Many are conscious, that they should be pleased with villany, provided it conduced greatly to their profit: thus they are led confidently to conclude, that others will be so too; and as numbers are rewarded for villa nous actions, they expect the same. Persons in authority should therefore decidedly manifest, that they will not be served by such base characters, but will, instead of rewarding, severely punish their crimes.—The servants of God are encouraged by the Scriptures, and by their own experience, to trust him in the path of duty; and confidently to expect that he will redeem them from all adversity, without countenancing sin,

CHAP. V.

The elders of the tribes, at Hebron, anoint David king over all Israel, 1—3. His age at the beginning of his reign, and the length of his reign, 4, 5. He takes Zion from the Jebusites, and calls it the city of David, 6—10. Hiram sends him timber and workmen to build him a house, 11. He prospers, and takes more wives; and eleven sons are born to him, 12—16. By divine direction, he gains two victories over the Philistines, 17—25.

THEN [a] came all the tribes of Israel to David unto Hebron, and spake, saying, Behold, [b] we are thy bone and thy flesh.

2 Also in time past, when Saul was king over us, thou wast he that [c] leddest out and broughtest in Israel: and the LORD said to thee, [d] Thou shalt feed my people Israel, and thou shalt be [e] a captain over Israel.

3 So [f] all the elders of Israel came to the king to Hebron; and king David [g] made a league with them in Hebron [h] before the LORD: and they [i] anointed David king over Israel.

4 David was [k] thirty years old when he began to reign, and he reigned [l] forty years.

5 In Hebron he reigned over Judah [m] seven years and six months: and in Jerusalem he reigned thirty and three years over all Israel and Judah.

6 ¶ And the king and his men [n] went to [o] Jerusalem unto [p] the Jebusites, the inhabitants of the land: which spake unto David, saying, [q] Except thou take away the blind and the lame, thou shalt not come in hither: * thinking, David cannot come in hither.

7 Nevertheless David took the strong hold of [r] Zion: [s] the same is the city of David.

8 And David said on that day, [t] Whosoever getteth up to the gutter, and smiteth the Jebusites, and the lame and the blind, that are hated of David's soul, he shall be chief and captain. † Wherefore they said, The blind and the lame shall not come into the house.

any more than committing it, for that purpose: they will also pity and pray for, and behave kindly to, their opposers, and speak as favorably of them as they can; and on no account become their own avengers.—Finally, the son of David will requite those, who pretend to serve his cause by frauds, treasons, massacres, and persecutions, with far more dreadful vengeance, than was inflicted by David on Ish-bosheth's murderers.

NOTES.

CHAP. V. V. 1, 2. (Note, 1 Chr. 12:23—40.) When Abner and Ish-bosheth were dead, the tribes of Israel were left "as sheep without a shepherd:" they had no inclination to set up another of Saul's family in opposition to David: and having observed the prosperous state of Judah under his government, they began to entertain higher and more honorable thoughts of him. Of their own accord therefore they applied to him, by their elders, to take the government upon him; and as a reason why he should forgive their ill-usage, they pleaded their near relation to him, being his brethren, the descendants of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. (Marg. Ref. b.) They now praised his former services, which before they had overlooked; and they acknowledged the Lord's appointment of him, which before they had resisted. They therefore desired to put themselves under his protection: and hoped that he would rule over them in tenderness and equity, for their safety and comfort, as a shepherd feeds his flock; as well as that he would lead them forth to victory over their enemies. This is introduced, as a part of the Lord's commission to him, when he appointed him to the kingdom; by which they conveyed the intimation in the most unexceptionable and efficacious manner.—This is the first time good rulers are spoken of, under the emblem of shepherds, which is afterwards very common, and is especially applied to Christ our King. (Marg. Ref. d.) But wicked rulers are characterized as lions, bears, wolves, and leopards. (Notes, Prov. 28:15,16. Ez. 19:2—9. 22:27,28. Dan. 7:2—8.)

V. 3. It is probable, that David agreed to an act of indemnity for past offences, and engaged to rule over his people according to the law of God; and they submitted to his authority according to the same rule.—On this occasion he was anointed a third time, probably by the high priest. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 4, 5. (Marg. Ref. m.) If David was twenty years of age, when Samuel anointed him, Saul reigned ten years after that transaction, but it is not certainly known how long he had reigned before. (Note, Acts 13:21.)

V. 6—8. The greater part of Jerusalem lay in the lot of Benjamin, and had hitherto been possessed by the Jebusites. (Notes, Josh. 15:63. Judg. 1:8,21.) But as soon as Israel had submitted to David, he marched to dispossess them. The citadel, called "the Strong hold of Zion," was fortified by nature and art, and the Jebusites set him at defiance. Confiding in its strength, they told him that blind and lame men could defend it against his army; and perhaps in derision, placed a company of invalids upon it, who insulted David and his soldiers: for the last clause (8) may be translated "They had said, even the blind and the lame, that he shall not come into the house." But David commanded his men, "when they smote the Jebusites, to throw down the blind and the lame into the gutter," or ditch, as it might be rendered; which, under the conduct of Joab, they effected accordingly. These were said to be "hated of David's soul;" for they were devoted Canaanites and idolaters, if not blasphemers of God.—But, by "the blind

12 And [z] David perceived that the LORD had established him king over Israel, and that he had exalted his kingdom for [a] his people Israel's sake.

13 And [b] David took him more concubines and wives out of Jerusalem, after he was come from Hebron: and there were yet sons and daughters born to David.

17 ¶ But [i] when the Philistines B. C. 1046. heard that they had anointed David king over Israel, all the Philistines came up to seek David; and David heard of it, and went down to [k] the hold.

18 The Philistines also came, and spread themselves in [l] the valley of Rephaim.

19 And David [m] inquired of the LORD, saying, Shall I go up to the Philistines? wilt thou deliver them into mine hand? And [n] the LORD said unto David, Go up; for I will doubtless deliver the Philistines into thine hand.

20 And David came to [o] Baal-perazim, and David smote them there, and said, The LORD hath broken forth upon mine enemies before me, as the breach of waters. Therefore he called the name of that place § Baal-perazim.

and the lame," some understand the idols of the Jebusites, which David's soldiers had thus called in contempt: yet their worshippers so confided in them, that they defied David to take the citadel while they kept their station, or by any means to remove them; and declared, that if he did, they would no longer admit them into their temples or houses.—David, however, got possession: and near to this mount the ark was placed, and the temple was built; and the residence of the family of David was fixed. (Notes, 11. 6:1, 17. Ps. 122: 132:13—18.)

V. 9. Millo seems to have been a place of public convention, all around which David erected such buildings, as were proper for rendering the city the seat of government. (Note, Judg. 9:16—20, v. 20. 2 Kings 12:20,21.)

V. 11. Hiram sent to congratulate David on his accession to the throne, and to enter into a league with him; and as Hiram's subjects were better architects than the Israelites, they were employed in building David a palace, suited to his exalted station. Though Saul affected the splendor of royalty, yet he did not build a royal palace; but David built one, perhaps as a token of his assured belief that the kingdom would be continued in his family.

V. 12. David was sensible, that God had advanced him to the kingdom, not so much that he might be honorable and prosperous, as that he might promote the temporal and eternal interests of his people. 'This is the greatest grace 'of a king, that he certainly believes himself to 'be made a king by God, for the sake of the 'people: and let him often call to mind, the peo-'ple were not created or ordained by God for 'the king.' Conradus Pellicanus in Bp. Patrick.

V. 13—16. (Marg. Ref.) It was customary for kings to multiply wives, and to strengthen their interest by many alliances; and to this David very improperly conformed. (Notes, 3:2—5. 11:1—5. 15:16. 16:20—23. 1 Kings 11:1—8.) Some names are mentioned in Chronicles, not found here; perhaps the sons there mentioned died in infancy. (Note, 1 Chr. 3:1—9.)

V. 17, 18. The Philistines, satisfied with the advantages which they had enjoyed since the death of Saul, had been restrained from molesting the Israelites during their civil dissensions: but they invaded them as soon as they were united again under one king. Thus, by beginning war, they delivered David from any embarrassment, about warring against those who had previously protected him. (Notes, 1 Sam. 27:1—3. 28:1,2.) He immediately therefore marched to some fortified place, where he might check their incursions, and consult what measures to take.—The valley of Rephaim was not far from Jerusalem. (Marg. Ref. l.)

V. 19. Notes, 2:1—3. Ex. 28:30. Num 27:21.

V. 20. Baal-perazim properly signifies the lord of breaches. By some evident interposition the Lord himself fought against the Philistines, like the breaking forth of impetuous torrents, which bear all down before them. David therefore gave the place the name of Baal-perazim, by way of ascribing to God all the honor of the victory.

V. 21. The Philistines expected protection from their images, but they became a prey to the conquerors. When the Philistines had taken the ark of the Lord, he by grievous judgments constrained them to restore it: (Notes, 1 Sam. 5: 6:) but the Israelites burnt the idols of 24 And let it be, when thou hearest [t] the sound of a going in the tops of the mulberry-trees, that then [u] thou shalt bestir thyself: for then shall the LORD go out before thee, to smite the host of the Philistines.

V. 24. When David heard a sound among the mulberry-trees, like the marching of an army, denoting the assistance of angels, or of God himself; he was directed to bestir himself. Sometimes the Lord commands and employs man's concurrence, and sometimes he rejects it; that we may neither be self-important nor negligent.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Mercies, long waited for in faith and patience, will be conferred in the most reputable and comfortable manner: nor shall any go unrewarded, who persist in refusing to employ sinful means for their own deliverance, or advancement.—Civil government is fixed on its firmest basis, and is likely to produce the most permanent blessings, when it is regulated by wholesome laws; marking out duties, prerogatives, and privileges to the prince and people, and reciprocally ratified, as in the presence of the Lord, by the most solemn assurances, with a view to his authority, appointments, and commandments.—We are all brethren; "of one bone, and of one flesh;" and none ought to oppress or to be cruel to another: princes should use clemency, and tenderly watch over their people, like shepherds over their flocks; and the people should gratefully acknowledge the blessings which they enjoy under their government, honor the authority of God in them, and yield them willing submission in all things lawful.—Thus Jesus became our Brother, assumed and inhabits our nature, that he might be our Prince and Savior: and thus the humbled sinner takes encouragement from this endearing relation; applies for his salvation, voluntarily submits to his kind authority, and craves his powerful protection.—The false confidences of ungodly men will assuredly deceive them, and their proud boastings will hasten their ruin: while those, with whom is the LORD God of osts, go forward and grow great. In the day of his power Satan's strong-hold, the human heart, is converted into "an habitation of God through the Spirit;" and into a throne, on which the Son of David rules, and brings every thought into obedience to himself. May he thus come and claim and cleanse each of our hearts; and having destroyed every idol, may he dwell and reign there for ever. (Notes, Gal. 2:17—21. Eph. 2:19—22. 3:14—19.)—It is in mercy to a nation, when wise and righteous persons are exalted to authority: and every advancement or endowment which we receive, should remind us, that the Lord alone has conferred the distinction; and that he did it, that we might be useful to his people by the talents intrusted to us. We have therefore cause to be thankful and watchful; and to pray earnestly for grace sufficient to enable us duly to improve them: (Note, 1 Kings 3:5—14. P. O. 1—15.) nay, we have double cause for humility, when we reflect how little we do so.—Alas! even good men are apt to grow secure and self-indulgent in prosperity, and to sanction by their example those abuses, which they should oppose or repress: and all our returns for the Lord's mercies are deeply tinged with ingratitude.—When the church of God begins to prosper, its enemies will generally exert themselves: and the great exemption from all kinds of persecution, and the seeming friendliness of the world to religion, with which many are pleased, arise from the policy of the enemy, who determines to let men alone with their empty notions, forms, and profession.—In our spiritual warfare, we must decidedly declare for the Lord, though against relatives or benefactors; and if we consult him, he will teach us to do it without even the appearance of evil.—All those objects, which men idolize, will prove a useless encumbrance to them, when the Lord shall arise to execute judgment on his enemies: and when the wicked shall be swept into destruction, as with an impetuous flood, the earth and all its contents shall be burnt up. But those who depend upon the Lord, and act according to his directions, and are ready to give him all the praise, will doubtless prevail against all enemies, add one victory to another, and at length be admitted into his presence, to see and adore their before invisible Helper.

NOTES.

CHAP. VI. V. 1. In a short time after David had obtained two victories over the Philistines, he formed the plan of bringing the ark to Jerusalem; and he collected thirty thousand of the chief, or most valiant men, in order to put honor upon the ark, which had been so long left in obscurity.

former masculine, the latter feminine,) was another name for Kirjath-jearim. (Josh. 15:9, 60. 1 Chr. 13:6. Notes, 1 Sam. 7:1,2,17. 1 Chr. 13:1—4.)—The terms used in speaking of the ark are very expressive of reverence: "The ark of God, whose name is called by the name of the LORD of hosts, that dwelleth between the cherubims." The name of JEHOVAH Sabbaoth, the LORD of hosts, was, as it were, affixed to the ark, because it was the most honored external representation of his invisible glory: and when the ark was in its proper place, in the holy of holies, the Lord manifested his presence, by the visible glory above it, as the Protector and Glory of Israel. It especially typified Christ, and his merits and mediation, in which the name of JEHOVAH, and all his glorious excellences are harmoniously displayed; while all his hosts of angels, (represented by "the cherubim,") desire to look down into those mysteries, or to be employed by him who is the Savior and Glory of his redeemed people, and whom sinners now approach upon a mercy-seat. (Notes, Ex. 25: 10—22. Ps. 80:1. 1 Pet. 1:10—12.)

V. 3. David and the Israelites seem to have taken the Philistines for their precedent on this occasion, (Notes, 1 Sam. 6:2—16.) instead of consulting the law of God! (Note, Num. 7:4—9.) It is probable, that Abinadab and Eleazar his son were dead before this time, as the ark had continued at Kirjath-jearim at least seventy years; (Note, 1 Sam. 7:1,2.) but Uzzah and Ahio, two other sons or descendants of Abinadab, had succeeded in attendance upon the ark; and they now undertook to drive the cart upon which it was conveyed. There is no proof that they were Levites; though some expositors think they were: and if any of the priests attended, they seem not to have taken an active part in the service. It does not even appear, that the ark was covered previously to its removal, according to the law! (Notes, Num. 4:5,6.)—Gibeah signifies the hill, and means that division of the city, in which the house of Abinadab stood.

V. 5. (Marg. Ref.—Notes, 1 Chr. 15:16—24.)

V. 6, 7. When the oxen shook the ark, or stumbled, (marg.) Uzzah, fearing lest the ark should fall, apparently with a good intention, laid hold of it: yet "God smote him for his error." But in what did his error consist? On this question, it should be remembered, that even the Kohathites, who were appointed to carry the ark, were forbidden to touch it on pain of death: that is, it must first be covered by the priests, and then the Kohathites must carry it by the staves only, and not touch the ark itself: (Num. 4:15.) but Uzzah, who certainly was not a priest, laid hold on the ark, which probably was not covered. It may be supposed, that neither Eleazar, nor Uzzah, nor Ahio, had thus touched it during all the years it had remained with them; and that it was placed on the cart by the staves only: and though it seemed necessary for Uzzah to lay hold of it; yet the necessity arose from the method of conveyance, which some think Uzzah had proposed, and he was therefore answerable for all the consequences. It is probable, that he had become too familiar with this sacred symbol of the Lord's especial presence: and that he presumed on the services which he and his family had rendered in taking care of it, when generally neglected; as if that had given him a sanctity equal or even superior to that of the priests; so that he and his brother seem to have taken the principal management of the business on themselves. Whereas, when all orders of men concurred in shewing honor to the ark, they ought to have declined any further interference; and referred the care of it to the priests, on whom it properly devolved. No doubt the Lord saw, in Uzzah's conduct, what indicated irreverence and presumption; not wholly unlike the sin of Nadab and Abihu, when they offered strange fire before him: and therefore he smote him, perhaps in a similar manner, and for the same reasons. (Notes, Lev. 10:1—5. 1 Sam. 6: 19—21.) But though he was singled out to be made an example of, his death was a pointed rebuke and warning to David, to the priests, and to all Israel.

V. 8, 9. David's heart was upright, and his zeal and love very fervent: but there were many things very faulty in his frame of mind, as well as irregular in his proceedings, on this occasion. He seems to have been possessed with some measure of self-complacency, on account of the important service which he was performing, in honoring the ark after it had been so long neglected; and to have thought that the goodness of the work would counterbalance a degree of informality in the manner of doing it, and ensure to him comfort and commendation: and he had not taken time to examine the law of God, or to consult the priests,

10 So David would not remove the ark of the LORD unto him into the city of David; but David carried it aside into the house of [n] Obed-edom the [o] Gittite.

11 And the ark of the LORD continued in the house of Obed-edom the Gittite three months: and [p] the LORD blessed Obed-edom, and all his household.

[Practical Observations.]

12 And it was told king David, saying, The LORD hath blessed the house of Obed-edom, and all that pertaineth unto him, because of the ark of God. [q] So David went and brought up the ark of God from the house of Obed-edom into the city of David with gladness.

13 And it was so, that [r] when they that bare the ark of the LORD had gone six paces, he sacrificed [s] oxen and fatlings.

14 And David [t] danced before the LORD [u] with all his might; and David was [v] girded with a linen ephod.

15 So David and all the house of Israel brought up the ark of the LORD [x] with shouting, and with [y] the sound of the trumpet.

16 And as the ark of the LORD came into the city of David, [z] Michal Saul's daughter looked through a window, and saw king David leaping and dancing before the LORD; and she [a] despised him in her heart.

17 And [b] they brought in the ark of the LORD, and set it in his place, in the midst of the tabernacle that David had * pitched for it: and David [c] offered burnt-offerings and peace-offerings before the LORD.

how this good work ought to be performed. When therefore the event turned out contrary to his expectations, he was greatly disconcerted, and his lively religious affections were extinguished. He was angry, (so the word signifies,) that occasion had been given for this unexpected stroke; though it does not appear with whom he was displeased, and certainly his anger implied a degree of rebellion against the dispensation of God in smiting Uzzah! A measure of servile fear succeeded to zeal, hope, and joy: so that he would not venture to bring the ark any nearer to him, lest he should be destroyed in like manner. (Notes, Num. 17:12,13. Josh. 7:6—9. 1 Sam. 6:19—21. 1 Chr. 15:12—14. *Ps.*119: 120. Is. 6:5.)

V. 10, 11. Until David had further considered the matter, and come to some determination what to do with the ark, it was carried to the house of Obed-edom; who with humble confidence was ready to receive it, notwithstanding the example of Uzzah. There it abode three months, and the whole multitude returned home, and left the business unfinished. Obed-edom was a Levite; (Marg. Ref. n;) and he is called a Gittite, perhaps from Gathrimmon, the place of his birth, or of his abode. (Josh. 21:24,25.) All things relating to his health, family, and circumstances, prospered in so extraordinary a manner, while the ark was with him, that every one noticed it.—Doubtless Obed-edom behaved to the ark with due reverence. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 12, 13. When David heard of the extraordinary blessing, bestowed on Obed-edom because of the ark of God, he was encouraged to resume his design of bringing it to Jerusalem. He had now learned his mistake, and the reason of the breach made on Uzzah. His mind was also become calm; and his zeal, love, and joy, had revived. Having likewise learned that none but the Levites of the family of Kohath ought to carry the ark, (Notes, 1 Chr. 15:) his "love now abounded in knowledge, and in all judgment." (Note, Phil. 1:9—11.) Conscious therefore that he was unworthy of being employed in such a service, and sensible of his cause for gratitude, if preserved from grievous miscarriages, he set out with offering sacrifices: and, as he thus united humble faith and holy fear with his fervent affections, he was accepted and prospered accordingly. (Note, Judg. 20:26—28.)

V. 14, 15. On this solemn occasion David laid aside the distinctions of royalty: and, as taking the lead in the worship of God, he wore a linen ephod, the ordinary garment of the priests when officiating, yet sometimes worn by others. (Marg. Ref. v.) But it does not appear that he in the least attempted to encroach upon the priestly office.—The methods adopted by the Israelites on this occasion, in expressing their joy and gratitude, were such as were customary among them; and the music, blowing of trumpets, and sacred dances, were accompanied with psalms of praise, sung to the glory of God, by very great multitudes in concert. (Notes, Ex. 15:20,21. 2 Chr. 15: 16:)

V. 16. Saul had neglected the ark and religion; and Michal seems to have had no deep sense of the importance and excellency of heavenly things: but she was possessed with high thoughts of temporal dignity and royalty. Perhaps, she considered David's zeal for the ark as a reproach of her father's negligence: at least she considered his transports of religious joy, in the midst of the people, as a degradation of his character, and as exposing him to contempt. David the brave captain, leading forth the people to battle, and returning with them in triumph, she had admired: but David the saint, leading the people in the ordinances of God, and setting them an example of fervency of spirit in his service, she despised in her heart; yet this was by far the most illustrious part of his character.

V. 17. The tabernacle, which had been situated at Shiloh, was from thence carried to Nob, and perhaps when Samuel died it was placed at Gibeon, with the altar of burnt-offering, and all other things belonging to its sacred services. (Note, 1 Sam. 7:1,2. 21:1,2.) David, however, prepared another tent for the recep-

18 And as soon [d] as David had made an end of offering burnt-offerings and peace-offerings, [e] he blessed the people in the name of the LORD of hosts.

19 And [f] he dealt among all the people, even among the whole multitude of Israel, as well to the women as men, to every one a cake of bread, and a good piece of flesh, and a flagon of wine. [g] So all the people departed every one to his house.

20 Then David returned to [h] bless his household. And [i] Michal the daughter of Saul came out to meet David, and said, How [k] glorious was the king of Israel to-day, who [l] uncovered himself to-day in the eyes of the handmaids of his servants, as one of the [m] vain fellows [*] shamelessly uncovereth himself!

21 And David said unto Michal, It was [n] before the LORD, which [o] chose me before thy father, and before all his house, to appoint me ruler over the people of the LORD, over Israel: therefore will I [p] play before the LORD.

22 And I will yet be [q] more vile than thus, and will be base [r] in mine own sight; and of the [†] maid-servants, which thou hast spoken of, of them shall [s] I be had in honor.

23 Therefore [t] Michal the daughter of Saul had no child [u] unto the day of her death.

tion of the ark, where an altar was erected and sacrifices offered; as also there were on the former altar. (Note, 1 Chr. 16:37—43.) It may be supposed that the building of a temple was already in contemplation, and that this tabernacle was intended for a temporary accommodation, until that should be accomplished.

V. 18, 19. David prayed for the people; and as a prophet he solemnly blessed them in the name of the Lord, not using the ministry of the priests. (Notes, Num. 6:23—26.) Afterwards he distributed of the flesh of the peace-offerings, which he sacrificed at his own expense, a sufficiency to every one present for a sacred feast, with bread and wine in proportion.

V. 20. After all these public solemnities, "David returned to bless his household;" to worship God with them, as no doubt he was wont to do, and to join with them in a religious feast.—Michal spoke the language of passion and contempt. Because David had expressed great zeal and earnestness, she suggested that he had behaved in an indecent manner: and as he had laid aside his royal robes, she would represent it as if he had improperly stripped himself. (Note, 1 Sam. 19:23,24.) But it cannot be supposed that David did any thing indecorous on the occasion; except as Michal considered his piety and activity in religion as unbecoming the dignity of a king.

V. 21—23. David very properly gloried in his zeal for the service and glory of God: before him, he was willing to be abased both in his own eyes, and in those of others. And if his earnestness in religion was considered as playing the fool, and rendering himself vile, he desired to be still more vile; for he resolved to be still more zealous in that good cause. But he intimated to Michal, that for want of similar zeal, her father had been rejected; and that he was chosen in his stead to be "ruler of the people of the LORD." He was therefore bound by every tie to be very earnest in promoting his worship: and that which she despised as disgraceful to him, would in the event prove his greatest honor. (Marg. Ref.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—11

Our judgment in religion must be regulated by the word of God, and not by the customs of the world, or even of the church: for human inventions have often long prevailed, when divine appointments have grown into disuse and contempt. But true believers are accepted, notwithstanding such errors and abuses as they either do not discern, or are unable to rectify: yet those, who have it in their power, should embrace the first opportunity of replacing matters upon the scriptural foundation, and of bringing to light and reputation those parts of true religion, which have been most neglected and obscured. This is best done by shewing their nature, use, and importance, that others may willingly concur, and gradually call the attention of more and more towards them: for thus the change will appear to be effected by the authority of God, and not by that of man.—That the LORD dwells upon the mercy-seat "between the cherubim," that the name and perfections of JEHOVAH are in Jesus, the true Ark of the covenant, forms the foundation of every genuine human hope of felicity, and is the source of every believer's privileges and comforts: while with all his hosts and all his authority, God is his reconciled Friend, Father, and Protector. Whatever else may be overlooked, these essential truths should be always placed in the most convincing and conspicuous light, in every sermon and religious ordinance; that sinners may be called on to believe, and believers to rejoice, and glorify God our Savior.—But ignorance and error, in the great doctrines of religion, are not the only dangers to which men are exposed: the irreverent abuse of the gospel may be equally destructive.—Men frequently, by office, or by habit, are conversant about the most important truths or observances of religion with a carnal mind, till they contract a contemptuous familiarity with them, grow proud of their formal exercises, presumptuously intrude into services which do not belong to them, and, in rash zeal for the supposed cause of godliness, use such means as the Lord has not commanded, nay, such as he has prohibited. But whatever necessity may be imagined, or whatever good intentions may be pleaded, he will resent, and perhaps in this world punish, such forbidden touches of his ark: we should therefore be careful to keep our proper place, to do our own work, and to proceed in the manner prescribed in his word.—Even eminently wise and good men cannot perform very important services, without feeling, at times and in some degree, the emotions of pride and self-preference. And, though religion consists very much in high affections, and great love and delight in spiritual things; yet even when the affections are genuine and gracious, except they are accompanied with proportionable knowledge, judgment, and humility, they will betray us into many unwarrantable actions, and expose us to severe rebukes. In the fervency of zeal we are all very prone to forget the precepts of God; and are too eager about the substance of our services, to consult the Scriptures concerning the right method of conducting them. Thus, we are unawares drawn into transgression, and meet with severe checks, when we expected great success and comfort. This is indeed needful and salutary, but it often exceedingly disconcerts the mind: and then the transition is very sudden from elevated joy and confidence, to great dejection and fretfulness; from a hope bordering on irreverence, to slavish fear which verges to despondency, and disheartens from present duty. Such sudden changes the experienced and vigilant believer recollects with shame. He too has often, especially in the time of his injudicious and inexperienced zeal, been "greatly displeased" or discouraged by those things, which were only intended to humble and instruct him: and while he cannot excuse David, he sees more cause to condemn himself, and to pray, "Enter not into judgment with thy servant, O LORD, for in thy sight shall no man living be justified."—But while one is disheartened from active service through servile fear, others will be animated with humble faith and hope; and not dread the ark, or the ordinance, but only the sin which occasioned the rebuke, or against which the threatening is denounced. And the Lord will abundantly recompense those, who are humbly bold for him, while others are either presumptuous or desponding. (P. O. 1 Sam. 6:)

V. 12—23.

When pious men, who have been betrayed into unwarrantable conduct, have had time for self-examination, searching the Scriptures, and prayer, they will discover and confess their mistakes, and be reduced to a better temper; they will justify God in his corrections; they will be convinced, that safety and comfort consist, not in absenting themselves from his ordinances, or in declining dangerous services, but n attending to their duty in a proper spirit and manner; (Notes, Matt. 5:23,24.—1 Cor. 11:29—34. P. O. 23—31.) they will profit by their own errors, stand the stronger for their falls, and not abate in their zeal and affections, but learn to connect them with humility, and to regulate them according to the precepts of the sacred Scripture. Then they may expect to prosper in their attempts to glorify God, and promote the cause of true religion.—We are so unworthy, and our services so defiled, that all our joy in divine ordinances must be connected with the exercise of repentance, and faith in the Redeemer's atoning blood; so that the more we are preserved from sin, and the more we are enabled to do in the work of God, with acceptance and comfort, the greater obligations we are brought under, and the more thankful we ought to be. (Note, 1 Chr. 29:10—19.)—We ought to serve the Lord with our whole body and soul, and with every endowment or capacity we possess; our religious affections cannot be too intense, if properly directed; nor our expressions of them too strong, provided "all be done decently and in order," according to the spirit of that dispensation under which we live.—The greatest of men are as nothing before the infinite God; their dependence is as entire as that of their inferiors, and their obligations and accountableness are greater: the meanest employment in his service is in truth the greatest honor of the mightiest princes: they ought to be as base in their own eyes, when worshipping the Lord, and confessing their sins, as their meanest subjects; while they should take the lead, and set the example in every thing good: (Note, Jam. 1:9—11.) and though some will despise their piety as madness or meanness, they will be had in honor for it by numbers, yea, by many who are not themselves religious.—Indeed proud and carnal persons have always ridiculed fervent devotion, as folly or enthusiasm. Satan has long deluded men into a persuasion, that such holy earnestness is unprincely, nay, unmanly, unbecoming persons of genius, learning, wealth, or influence, and only fit for ignorant poor people, women, or children. However wise or eminent a man may be in other respects, if he be scripturally zealous and devoted to God, he must expect contempt and insult, even from his inferiors and relatives: nay, he needs not wonder, if he be falsely accused of the most shameless practices. But if the Lord has chosen and accepted us, we should deem such reproaches honorable, and determine to become still more vile in the eyes of ungodly revilers, by abounding in those services which they despise.—While we meekly rebuke such opposers, the Lord will certainly plead our cause against them: for "them that honor him, he will honor; but they who despise him shall be lightly esteemed."—Piety should always be attended with liberality; and public exercises of religion must not exclude private prayer and family-worship, which should be neglected by none in any rank of life.—Finally in this removal of the ark, let us contemplate the Redeemer's ascension to glory, and seek to participate his precious gifts, and to serve him with ardent love and joy.

4 And it came to pass [j] that night, that the word of the LORD came unto Nathan, saying,

5 Go and tell * my servant David, Thus saith the LORD, [k] Shalt thou build me an house for me to dwell in?

6 Whereas [l] I have not dwelt in any house since the time that I brought up the children of Israel out of Egypt, even to this day, but have [m] walked in a [n] tent and in a tabernacle.

7 In all the places wherein I have walked with all the children of Israel, spake I a word with any of the [o] tribes of Israel, whom I commanded to [p] feed my people Israel, saying, Why build ye not me an house of cedar?

8 Now therefore so shalt thou say unto my servant David, Thus saith the LORD of hosts, [q] I took thee from the sheep-cote, from † following the sheep, to be [r] ruler over my people, over Israel.

9 And [s] I was with thee whithersoever thou wentest, and have [t] cut off all thine enemies ‡ out of thy sight, and have made thee [u] a great name, [x] like unto the name of the great men that are in the earth.

10 Moreover I will appoint a place for my people Israel, and will [y] plant them, that they may dwell in a place of their own, and move no more; [z] neither shall the children of wickedness afflict them any more, [a] as before-time.

11 And as [b] since the time that I commanded judges to be over my people Israel, and [c] have caused thee to rest from all thine enemies. Also the LORD telleth thee, that [d] he will make thee an house.

over all his enemies, and at rest in his palace, considered how he might employ his leisure and prosperity in the service of God: when it occurred to his mind how stately his own house was, and how meanly the ark was lodged; and he conceived a design of building a magnificent temple for its reception. (Notes, Ps. 132:2—5. Matt. 6:33,34.) This he intimated to Nathan the prophet, a man of great piety and wisdom, who appears to have been his companion and counsellor. And Nathan, assured that the design arose from zeal for the glory of God, who was with David in all his undertakings, encouraged him to proceed; yet he gave his advice, not by revelation from God, but according to his own private judgment. (Note, 1 Cor. 7:39,40.)

V. 4. The message which follows was sent without delay, probably that David might not remain under a mistake, or set his heart on a work not intended for him: and it was sent by Nathan, that he might not be discouraged by having his counsel contradicted by another prophet.—Nathan was not faulty in encouraging David, any more than David was in purposing to build a temple: they both did well, but the Lord had wise reasons for determining otherwise. (Marg. Ref.—Note, 1 Kings 8:15—21.)

V. 5. Shalt thou, &c.] That is, 'Dost thou 'entertain such a purpose, which did not enter 'into the thoughts of any that were before thee? 'yet thou shalt not accomplish that design; for 'the work is assigned to another person.'—It appears that Nathan spoke more to David than is here recorded: for other reasons are afterwards given, why David was not permitted to build the temple. (Notes, 2 Chr. 22:6—10. 28:2—8.)

V. 6, 7. Though the building of a temple accorded with the spirit of the Mosaic dispensation, it was not commanded by any law; and was not therefore peculiarly any one's duty, without some further intimation from God. In the days of Moses the Lord had, by the ark the symbol of his presence, dwelt and removed with his people, in a tabernacle of his own appointing. (Notes, Num. 10:33—36.) Since Israel had been settled in Canaan, none of the rulers or judges, who had been raised up out of several of their tribes, were commanded to build a temple: yet the Lord had accepted their worship, while the ark abode within curtains. It was not therefore necessary either to the glory of God, or the good of Israel, to have a temple; and the erecting of one might therefore very well be delayed a little longer. (Notes, Is. 66:1,2. Acts 7:44—50.)

V. 8—11. The Lord did not employ David in building the temple, but he did not in anger reject his intended service: for it was not proper, either that he should engross all the honor, or do all the work. He had been advanced from a very inferior situation to the throne of Israel, and employed in subduing their enemies, as well as made triumphant over his own; and he was, or would become, one of the most honorable and renowned characters in the world. (Marg. Ref. u, x.) Moreover the Lord had further employment for him of another sort, which was proper to be done before the building of the temple. The Canaanites still dwelt in the land, and greatly harassed the people; and the neighboring nations frequently afflicted them. This had been the case from their first entrance into Canaan, even in the time of the judges, who wrought only temporary deliverances from their more grievous oppressors. Indeed, it was reserved for David to crush the remnant of the Canaanites, to subjugate the other enemies of Israel, and to put them in full and quiet possession of the land of promise; so that it was by their subsequent revolts and apostacies alone, that they afterwards lost the benefit of his victories. This was his peculiar work; and as a promise thus given to Israel, was intended to mark out David's line of usefulness.—He was also employed in reforming the state of religion, 12 And [e] when thy days be fulfilled, and thou shalt [f] sleep with thy fathers, I will set up thy seed after thee, which shall proceed out of thy bowels, and I will establish his kingdom.

13 [h] He shall build an house for my name, and [i] I will establish the throne of his kingdom for ever.

14 [k] I will be his father, and he shall be my son: [l] if he commit iniquity, [m] I will chasten him with the rod of men, and with the stripes of the children of men:

15 But [n] my mercy shall not depart away from him, [o] as I took it from Saul, whom I put away before thee.

regulating the courses of the priests and Levites, and composing hymns of praise for the use of the church in after ages; and he made immense preparations even for the temple itself. (Notes, 23:1,2. 1 Chr. 22: 23: 26: 28: 29:)

V. 12—16. The Lord intended to establish David's posterity upon the throne of Israel; which was a special favor not granted to Moses, to Joshua, or to any of David's predecessors: and therefore the work and honor of building the temple were reserved for his son, who was hereafter to be born; for, by the future tense in this connexion, both Absalom and Adonijah, and all the children which David then had, were excluded from the succession. This son and successor of David would be of a peaceable disposition, and enabled to live at peace, through the success of his father's wars, and would have more leisure and ability to complete the design. To him and his posterity very precious promises were given: the Lord engaged to be a Father to him, to deal with him as his son, and to establish the throne of his kingdom; and if he sinned, to correct him, as men do their children, according to what they are able to endure, and for their good; yet not to take the kingdom from him, as he had done from Saul, but to establish it from generation to generation.—Though for Solomon's sin the ten tribes were rent from his son; (Notes, 1 Kings 11:9—13, 29—31. 12:21—24.) yet the kingdom over Judah remained, unto the Babylonish captivity, in the family of David and Solomon.—These promises were, however, in an especial manner, predictions of Christ, the son of David, the true Solomon, "the Prince of peace," who builds the spiritual temple of true believers, to be "an habitation of God through the Spirit." (Notes, Zech. 6:12,13. Eph. 2:19—22.) Accordingly a part of the prophecy is applied to Christ in the New Testament. (Heb. 1:5.) The stability and perpetuity of the kingdom in the house of David is, in Christ, fully accomplished. (Notes, Ps. 2: 72: 89:19—37.) The clause concerning the merciful chastisement of David's son if he offended, and the engagement not to reject him for his transgressions, belongs to his people, who are his seed, and one with him. In a parallel passage, it is put in the plural number, "If his children forsake my law, &c." (Ps. 89:30—33.)—The expression, "before thee," might perhaps be a gracious intimation, that though these things would take place after David's death, yet he would be acquainted with them, and rejoice in them.

V. 17. Nathan did not hesitate to contradict his own counsel; nor did he fear lest this should expose him to censure or contempt! (Notes, 2 Kings 20:1—6.)

V. 18. David cordially acquiesced in the will of God; and likewise found his love, gratitude, hope, and joy greatly excited, by these remembrances of past, and promises of future mercies, to himself, his people, and posterity; especially as they all centered in the promised Savior who was to descend from him. Without delay, therefore, he went to the tabernacle of God before the ark, and poured out his heart in prayer.—It is said, that "he sat before the LORD;" but it is the only place in Scripture. which mentions sitting as the posture of any servant of God in religious worship; and, though circumstances may sometimes render it necessary, it does not otherwise seem becoming. Probably, the expression only means his continuance before the LORD for a considerable time, and does not determine the posture in which he prayed.—When David considered the mean estate from which he had been advanced to the throne, and how he had been employed, prospered, and honored; and when he recollected the infinite majesty and holiness of God, and his own sinfulness and insignificancy before him: he thought nothing of his own endowments or performances, but regarded the whole as the subject of admiring gratitude and praise; and was surprised that the Lord had hitherto upheld and blessed so insignificant and worthless a person in such an extraordinary manner. (Notes, Gen. 32:9—12. 1 Chr. 29:10—19.)

V. 19. A more particular consideration of the blessings, which had now been entailed upon his family, as well as upon himself, still more enhanced David's holy admiration; and he adored the riches of the divine mercy, as infinitely surpassing the largest bounty of man. It is not the manner of men thus to notice the mean, the base, the unworthy: thus to make one kindness an introduction to another, and an earnest of further favors, and a reason for bestowing them. No, this is beyond example or conception!—Or, 'Is this thy manner of dealing with polluted, re-'bellious man!' (Note, Is. 55:8,9.) How wonderful then the love of a holy God to us sinful creatures, especially in the gift of his "only begotten Son, to be the Propitiation for our sins!" (Notes, 1 John 3:1—3. 4:9—12.)

V. 20, 21. David could find nothing to ask for himself, or his people, or his posterity, but what had already been covenanted to him: so that his prayer consisted of thankful repetitions of the promises. For the Lord knew his servant, and would do every thing in perfect truth, wisdom, and love, for his good; and he desired no prosperity, wealth, or honor, except in reference to the will and glory of God. He could assign no reason for the Lord's former kindness to him, but his sovereign will, according to his own heart, dictating his gracious promises, and then for his word's sake fulfilling them: and he had the same ground for expecting all other blessings, according to his holy covenant. (Notes, Deut. 7:6—8. Rom. 8:28—31. Eph. 1:3—8. 2:4—10. Jam. 1:16—18. 1 Pet. 1:3—5.)—'God, he knew, would fulfil his promise made 'by Samuel and Nathan; to the making of which 'he had no other motive, but his own good will.' Bp. Patrick.

V. 22—25. (Marg. Ref.—Notes, Deut. 4:20, 32—40. 1 Sam. 2:2. 1 Kings 8:23,24. Neh. 9:5—8.) For you. (23) These words are not found in the parallel passage, (1 Chr. 17:21.) and seem here redundant.

V. 26. The Lord by his promises had connected the glory of his own truth, with the establishment of David's family; and David also expected and desired, that his descendants might be instrumental in maintaining true religion for the glory of God.—In Christ all the perfections of the Godhead are glorified; and by him the cause of truth and righteousness is, and will be, established upon earth. (Notes, 1 Chr. 29:10—19. Ps. 21:13. 72:17—19. Matt. 6:13.) In all these respects David prayed for the magnifying of God's name, in the establishment of his posterity. (Note, 1 Chr. 17:17—24. v. 24.)

V. 27—29. (Marg. Ref.) David could not have ventured to make such large requests, if the Lord had not promised the blessings which he implored: but he was humbly bold to ask all that God had engaged to give.—The promises of Scripture are not made personally to us by name, as these were to David; but they belong to all who believe in Jesus Christ, and plead them in his name. (Note, 2 Pet. 1:3,4.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.
V 1—17.

The greater leisure and ability any man is favored with, the more should he form, and attempt to execute, plans of important usefulness; and those who are largely supplied with the providential gifts of God, and at the same time are richly replenished by his grace, will most comfortably enjoy their possessions, when they can render them subservient to his glory and the salvation of souls: they will often be grieved to reflect how much is expended on themselves, and how little in the service of God; and scarcely deem any thing done for him while so much remains undone. Such zealous and liberal Christians should be encouraged by their brethren, and by ministers, in the great designs which they conceive for the advancement of religion, as far as they agree with the Scripture. Yet many unexceptionable undertakings may fail of success, because they do not accord with the perfect plan of God; but none of them will fail to meet with a gracious recompense.—The wisest and best of men (not excepting prophets and apostles, unless when immediately speaking by divine inspiration,) have been liable to error; and therefore the claim of infallibility forms the very essence of blasphemous arrogance. But God will rectify the prejudicial mistakes of his upright servants, and prevent every bad consequence: and it is their true honor, as well as their duty, to retract what they have unadvisedly advanced, and to acknowledge themselves mistaken; and all wise men will respect them the more for doing so.—The Lord does not need the services of man, neither does he regard external splendor; we cannot therefore please him in his instituted worship, if we have not the warrant of his word for what we do.—He has accepted and blessed those, who spiritually worshipped him in the midst of external meanness; and he never rejected or found fault with them on that account: but no outward magnificence will render formal services pleasing to him.—Our desires, even of usefulness, must be subjected to his holy will, and regulated by his precept. He appoints unto every man his work, and endows him with suitable qualifications: and each of us should thankfully and faithfully mind our proper business; and rejoice in the superior talents, and more honorable and important services, of our brethren.—When we feel the risings of envy or discontent, and are ready to murmur at disappointment, we should reflect on what the Lord has already done for us; from what a wretched condition he has brought us; and what blessings he has prepared for us: and we shall readily perceive that we have been dealt with far better than we have deserved, or could reasonably have expected; nay, that if our desires be not granted, it is merely because our wise and gracious Lord sees it better for us that they should be refused.—Our own plans, though well intended, are often fit for nothing but to be laid aside, to make way for the Lord's purposes respecting us, of which perhaps we had no conception. But, in one way or other, God will bless, and make useful to his church those persons, who simply devote themselves and all they have to his glory. If the Lord deny them one supposed blessing, he will counterbalance the refusal with other tokens of his love, and by raising their expectations of other promised mercies: and he teaches them to rejoice in the prosperity of his church, as in their own felicity.—Israel, according to the flesh, forfeited by their sins the rest to which they were brought: and the cause of God has hitherto been greatly opposed and run down. Yet the time is coming when this cause will gain the entire ascendency, and overspread the earth; and when the Israel of God shall "be planted, and dwell in a place of their own, and move no more, neither shall the children of wickedness afflict them any more for ever."—The most favored and honored of men will soon fulfil their days, and sleep with their fathers; but they die at peace with God, and depart hence to join the blessed company before the throne.— We should indeed earnestly desire the entail of our blessings upon our posterity, that they may be the children of God also; but our chief comfort in life and death must arise from looking unto Jesus, the Son of God, and the everlasting King of Israel, and in participating his covenanted mercies. (Note, 23:5.) In his human nature "all the fulness of the Godhead dwelleth bodily," and by uniting his people to himself through his Holy Spirit, he builds the living temple, in which the Lord will dwell for ever. If we belong to him, he will not finally reject us: but when we offend, he will, by rebukes and chastenings, bring us to repentance, and establish us, as kings and priests before him, to all eternity. (Notes, Heb. 12:4—8. Rev. 3:18,19. 5:8—10.)

V. 18—29.

When we have duly attended to the word, which the Lord has spoken; and when our affections are excited, or our consciences alarmed; let us without delay retire, to pour out our hearts before him in fervent prayer, grounded on his gracious promises in Christ Jesus.—The more God really honors any one, the lower he sinks in self-abasement; as conscious that he has nothing of his own, but meanness, sin, and misery, and that he owes all to the free mercy and goodness of God. But if the blessings which we have already received are so numerous, large, and unmerited; if it appears wonderful, as it does to every humble believer, that the Lord has brought him hitherto; what shall we say to the future, the eternal felicity, which he has covenanted to his people! or of the gift of his Son to be the ransom of our souls!—His thoughts and ways are not like ours, or he never would have bestowed such blessings on rebellious, polluted man. What can we then say more unto him? What can we ask or desire but the performance of those promises, which of his own sovereign mercy he has made to us? Comparing the former displays of the glorious excellencies of our God, with those which he has manifested in his dealings with us, we shall at once have our admiring gratitude enlarged, and our expectation of further blessings increased; and shall find in our hearts to plead his precious promises, neither deeming them too large, nor too hard, for him to perform to us wretched sinners. Though he have not given us "a great name, like unto the great men that are in the earth;" we shall be contented with "a name written in the book of life," and a clear character among our brethren: and we can desire no more for our posterity, than that they may be "blessed with the blessing of the LORD for ever."

NOTES.

CHAP. VIII. V. 1. (Note, 1 Chr. 18:1.) It is probable, that Metheg-ammah, or "the bridle of Ammah," (marg.) was an eminence or natural fortress, on which Gath was built, and which gave the inhabitants an opportunity of retaining the neighborhood in subjection. The Philistines had long oppressed Israel: Samson

2 And [b] he smote Moab, and [c] measured them with a line, casting them down to the ground; even with two lines measured he to put to death, and with one full line to keep alive: [d] and so the Moabites became David's servants, and [e] brought gifts.

3 David smote also [f] Hadadezer, the son of Rehob, king of [g] Zobah, as he went to recover his border, [h] at the river Euphrates.

4 And David took *from him a thousand †chariots, and seven hundred horsemen, and twenty thousand footmen: and [i] David houghed all the chariot-horses, but [k] reserved of them for an hundred chariots.

5 And [l] when the Syrians of Damascus [m] came to succor Hadadezer king of Zobah, David slew of the Syrians two and twenty thousand men.

6 Then David put [n] garrisons in Syria of Damascus: and the Syrians became servants to David, and brought gifts. And [o] the LORD preserved David whithersoever he went.

7 And David took the [p] shields of gold that were on the servants of Hadadezer, and brought them to Jerusalem.

8 And from [q] Betah, and from Berothai, cities of Hadadezer, king David took [r] exceeding much brass.

9 ¶ When [s] Toi king of [t] Hamath heard that David had smitten all the host of Hadadezer,

10 Then Toi sent [u] Joram his son unto king David, to ‡salute him, and [x] to bless him, because he had fought against Hadadezer, and smitten him: (for Hadadezer §had wars with Toi:) and Joram ‖brought with him vessels of silver, and vessels of gold, and vessels of brass;

11 Which [y] also king David did dedicate unto the LORD, with the silver and gold that he had dedicated of all nations which he subdued:

12 Of [z] Syria, and of Moab, and of the children of Ammon, and of the Philistines, and of Amalek, and of the spoil of Hadadezer, son of Rehob, king of Zobah.

13 And David [a] gat him a name when he returned from ¶smiting of the Syrians in [b] the valley of salt, being* eighteen thousand men.

14 And he put garrisons in Edom; throughout all Edom put he garrisons: and [c] all they of Edom became David's servants. And [d] the LORD preserved David whithersoever he went.

had begun to deliver his people from them; but David effectually subdued the Philistines, and left them no power any more to molest the Israelites. (Notes, Judg. 13:4,5.)

V. 2. The Jews say, that the Moabites had slain David's parents. It may be supposed, that he had just cause for this war, and for the severity with which he treated the vanquished; as he seems to have measured their country, and desolated two-thirds of it, and to have slaughtered two thirds of the captives. (Note, 12:26—31.) Thus the Moabites became tributaries to Israel, as Balaam had predicted. (Notes, Num. 24:17. 2 Kings 1:1.)

V. 3. Zobah seems to have been a part of Syria, to the north-east of Canaan, to the south of Damascus, and reaching to the river Euphrates.—It is probable, that Hadadezer was jealous of David's growing greatness, and came to assist the Moabites, in order to secure his own dominions: and that this gave David a fair opportunity of extending his conquests to the Euphrates.—Some think, however, that David went to establish his dominion over all the countries as far as that river, according to the grant made to Israel; and that he was opposed by Hadadezer. (Marg. Ref. g, h.)

V. 4. Seven hundred.] Seven thousand horsemen are mentioned in Chronicles; (1 Chr. 18: 4.) perhaps they were divided into seven hundred divisions of ten men each: however, David disabled the most of the horses, not desiring to trust in chariots or in horses, but in the living God. (Note, Josh. 11:6.)—Yet he reserved horses for a hundred chariots; and this is the first time, that chariots of any kind are mentioned, as possessed by a ruler in Israel. (Note, Deut. 17:16.)

V. 5—8. (Marg. Ref.) The Syrians of Damascus were in alliance with Hadadezer, but not subject to him.

V. 9—11. Hamath lay north of Canaan, and south of Damascus.—Thus, by arms or alliances, those heathen nations became tributary to David, and furnished those riches, which he dedicated to the Lord for the building of the temple. (Notes, 1 Chr. 22:14. 29:1—9.)

V. 12. Children of Ammon.] Either some of the Ammonites at this time assisted the Moabites; or this is spoken by way of anticipation. (Notes, 10: 12:26—31.)

V. 13, 14. Syrians.] It is said in Chronicles, that "Abishai smote eighteen thousand Edomites in the valley of salt." (1 Chr. 18:12.) Perhaps they were Edomites fighting for the Syrians. It is evident, however, that Edom was subjected in consequence of this victory, by which David acquired great renown.—Twelve thousand of Edom are elsewhere mentioned, as slain by Joab. (Note, Ps. 60: title.) Perhaps Joab and Abishai commanded distinct bodies of troops, and eighteen thousand were slain between them, six thousand by Abishai, and twelve thousand by Joab.—Thus the predictions concerning the Edomites began to be fulfilled. (Notes, Gen. 25:22,23. 27:27—29,39,40. Num. 24:18,19. Ps. 60:6—12.)

V. 15—18. The assiduity, as well as the equity and impartiality of David's administration, is here stated; in which, as well as in his victories, he was a type of Christ. Under David Joab was commander-in-chief of the forces. Jehoshaphat recorded and brought forward every business in an orderly manner, or acted as judge or chancellor. Under Abiathar the high priest, Ahimelech his son, and Zadok descended from Eleazar, were the presiding priests; probably the one on mount Zion, the other at Gibeon where the tabernacle was. (Notes, 1 Kings 3:4. 1 Chr. 16:37—43.) Seraiah was scribe or secretary, to inspect and manage all writing concerning foreign or domestic transactions. And Benaiah commanded the Cherethites and Pelethites, David's constant attendants or guards, who were chosen out from his other troops, and probably consisted chiefly of those, who had accompanied him in his distresses; or of such as had joined him from among the Philistines, who are called Cherethites. (Marg. Ref. m.) His sons, also, when grown up, were initiated into public business, as they became capable of it.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

In due season and succession, every promise and prediction of God's word will receive its full accomplishment.—Short is the triumphing and certain the ruin of all his enemies, however strong and confederated. But those who confide in his protection, and are doing his work, will be preserved and prospered, "whithersoever they go." They will not allow themselves to glory in their success, or to establish any other ground of confidence, than the mercy, power, and truth of him who has hitherto helped them, to whom they will dedicate the fruits of their prosperity; and in this they will be distinguished from all the other mighty ones, who have been renowned upon the earth.—It is true wisdom to court the friendship of those whom the Lord prospers.—A safe and honorable peace should be the object of all wars: and the diligent, impartial administration of justice, the business of those who are advanced above others; for their authority was given them to do good with.—Thus the Son of David subjects his enemies: his gospel is a savor of life to some, and of death to others; and he will be glorified upon his obstinate opposers, and by those who welcome him as their Lord and Savior. Many assist in building his spiritual temple, who have no place in it: his government is in judgment and in justice, as well as in mercy: and all who adhere to him faithfully in a state of humiliation and suffering, shall reign with him for ever in glory. Let us then submit to him and seek his friendship, counting his service our honor and our pleasure, and diligently attending to the work which he assigns us in our different stations and relations, in the church, the community, and in relative life.

NOTES.

CHAP. IX. V. 1. Mephibosheth was only five years old at his father's death; (4:4.) but at this time he had a son: (12) so that many years must have elapsed before David made this inquiry. For above seven years he had been opposed by Ish-bosheth, and his engagements afterwards had been numerous. He had not indeed injured any of Saul's family: yet he seems to have been too forgetful of his friendship with Jonathan, and his engagements to him. (Notes, 1 Sam. 18:3,4. 20:14—17. 23:16—18.) As however Mephibosheth was brought up in obscurity beyond Jordan, and perhaps purposely concealed by the suspicious care of his friends, David might not know that Jonathan had any child living. (4) But at length, recollecting himself, he desired to shew his entire forgiveness of Saul's injuries, and his gratitude for Jonathan's kindness, by restoring Saul's estate to some of his remaining posterity; and by conferring further favors on them; for the sake of his friend. 5 Then king David sent, and fetched him out of the house of Machir, the son of Ammiel, from Lo-debar.

6 Now when [g] Mephibosheth, the son of Jonathan, the son of Saul, was come unto David, [h] he fell on his face, and did reverence. And David said, Mephibosheth. And he answered, Behold thy servant.

7 And David said unto him, [i] Fear not: [j] for I will surely shew thee kindness for Jonathan thy father's sake, and will restore thee all the land of Saul thy father; and thou shalt [k] eat bread at my table continually.

8 And he bowed himself, and said, What is thy servant, that thou shouldest look upon such [l] a dead dog as I am?

9 Then the king called to Ziba, Saul's servant, and said unto him, [m] I have given unto thy master's son all that pertained to Saul, and to all his house.

10 Thou therefore, and thy sons, and thy servants, shall till the land for him, and thou shalt bring in the fruits, that thy master's son may have food to eat: but Mephibosheth thy master's son [n] shall eat bread alway at my table. [o] Now Ziba had fifteen sons and twenty servants.

11 Then said Ziba unto the king, [p] According to all that my lord the king hath commanded his servant, so shall thy servant do. As for Mephibosheth, said the king, he shall eat at my table, as one of the king's sons.

12 And Mephibosheth had a young [q] son, whose name was Micha: and all that dwelt in the house of Ziba were [r] servants unto Mephibosheth.

13 So Mephibosheth dwelt in Jerusalem: for [s] he did eat continually at the king's table; and was lame on both his feet.

CHAP. X.

David sends ambassadors to comfort Hanun, the king of Ammon, on the death of his father; who grossly insults them, 1—4. David counsels and comforts them, 5. The Ammonites, assisted by the Syrians, are overcome by Joab and Abishai, 6—14. Hadarezer sends another army, which David conquers, slaying Shobach its general, 15—18. The kings of Syria submit to David, 19.

AND it came to pass after this, that the [a] king of the children of Ammon died, and Hanun his son reigned in his stead.

cording to the example of the LORD's kindness unto himself.—Lame, &c.] Note, 4:3,4.

V. 4. Machir.] This person was afterwards a very useful friend to David; and perhaps the more willingly, on account of David's kindness to Mephibosheth, whom he had generously brought up. (Note, 17:27—29.)

V. 6. David might have heard of the name of Mephibosheth; or perhaps he had seen him in his infancy, and now recollected his features, though he knew not before that he was living.

V. 7. Saul's paternal estate came into David's hands after the death of Ish-bosheth, and it seems to have been large. This was now restored by him to Mephibosheth as the right heir; and he was besides admitted to a place at David's own table, as one of his near friends or relatives.

V. 8. A dead dog.] (Marg. Ref. l.) That is, a person who is very mean, and incapable of being any way serviceable. Mephibosheth adverted, not only to his unworthiness, but to his bodily infirmities, in this expression of grateful surprise. He seems to have been an unambitious, modest, friendly, and pious man.

V. 9—11. Ziba had been greatly enriched under Saul, and was now intrusted with the management of Mephibosheth's estate, because of his professed affection for his family: but David seems to have been more generous than prudent in this appointment. Mephibosheth's family must be provided for out of the estate, though he himself lived at David's table.—Some understand the last clause, as the words of Ziba, proposing in a boasting manner to entertain Mephibosheth royally at his own table: but they seem to be the words of David.

V. 12. Micha.] The posterity of Jonathan and Mephibosheth, by Micha, was very numerous. (Marg. Ref.—Notes, 1 Chr. 8:29—40. 9:35—44.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Amidst a multiplicity of affairs, we are prone to forget the gratitude we owe, and the engagements we are under, not only to our friends, but to the Lord himself: but persons of real and eminent piety, when they recollect their obligations, will have no rest till they have discharged them: they will be burdened with those possessions, which they suppose in equity belong to another; and impatient to express their forgiveness of those by whom they have been injured, and their gratitude to the persons or the relations of those who have been kind to them.—Those who have much in their power should sedulously inquire after opportunities of doing good; for frequently the most deserving objects of our compassion are concealed by modesty and patient resignation.—Kindness, shewn to the most helpless persons, is sometimes recompensed in a very seasonable manner, by those from whom we had no expectation of obtaining or wanting assistance.—To be trained up in privacy, poverty, and hardship, and afterwards more prospered, is far more comfortable, than to be brought up in pride and delicacy, with great expectations, and then to be reduced to poverty and distress. "When riches increase, they are increased that eat them:" and, though the liberality of friends should be thankfully acknowledged, it can contribute little to our real happiness, further than providing us with the necessaries or conveniencies of life. But

2 Then said David, I will [b] shew kindness unto Hanun the son of Nahash, [c] as his father shewed kindness unto me. And David sent to comfort him, by the hand of his servants, for his father. And David's servants came into the land of the children of Ammon.

3 And the princes of the children of Ammon said unto Hanun their lord, *Thinkest thou that David doth honor thy father, that he hath sent comforters unto thee? [d] hath not David rather sent his servants unto thee, to search the city, and to spy it out, and to overthrow it?

4 Wherefore Hanun took David's servants, [e] and shaved off the one half of their beards, and [f] cut off their garments in the middle, even to their buttocks, and sent them away.

5 When they told it unto David, he sent to meet them, because the men were greatly ashamed: and the king said, Tarry at [g] Jericho until your beards be grown, and then return.

6 And when the children of Ammon saw that they [h] stank before David, the children of Ammon sent and hired [i] the Syrians of Beth-rehob, and the Syrians of Zoba, twenty thousand footmen, and of king [k] Maacah a thousand men, and of † Ish-tob twelve thousand men.

10 And the rest of the people he delivered into the hand of Abishai his brother, that he might put them in array against the children of Ammon.

11 And he said, [o] If the Syrians be too strong for me, then thou shalt help me: but if the children of Ammon be too strong for thee, then I will come and help thee.

12 Be [p] of good courage, and let us [q] play the men for our people, and for the cities of our God: and [r] the LORD do that which seemeth him good.

the love of Jesus, who seeks out, provides for, enriches, and entertains us poor, ruined, worthless sinners, confers substantial and enduring felicity. May we humbly acknowledge our unworthiness of his mercies, thankfully accept them, and return him our cheerful praises and willing services, and shew our gratitude to him, by kindness to those whom he owns, as his "brethren, sisters, and mother."

NOTES.

CHAP. X. V. 2. It is probable, that Nahash was kind to David in the days of Saul, from resentment and dislike to that prince: but it may be questioned, whether David ought to have shewn respect to the memory of so cruel an enemy to his people; especially as the law forbad Israel to seek the peace and prosperity of the Ammonites. (Notes, Deut. 23:3—6. 1 Sam. 11: 1—3.) They were not, however, of the devoted nations; so that, perhaps, it was not wrong for David to express a sense of gratitude to a benefactor, without deciding upon the motives of his conduct; and to render the customary civilities to his son, on his decease.

V. 3, 4. The princes of Hanun, who had great authority with him, seem to have been suspicious of David, from consciousness of the injuries which they had done to Israel, and were still meditating against it. (Note, 1 Sam. 29:4 —6.) But if they had seen cause to be reserved, they ought not to have abused and insulted David's ambassadors. This was a violation of the most sacred laws of nations; the greatest affront imaginable to the prince whom they represented; and a direct declaration of war against him.—According to the sentiments and customs of those days, the Ammonites treated David's ambassadors in the most contemptuous manner, which they could possibly devise. (Marg. Ref. e, f.)

V. 5. Jericho.] This was a village near the spot where Jericho had stood: for that city was not yet rebuilt. (Notes, Josh. 6:26. 1 Kings 16:34.)—In this place, as soon as the ambassadors had crossed Jordan, they were advised to remain till their beards were grown; (which were considered as necessary to the appearance in public of grave and venerable persons) that thus the disgrace which they had received might be obliterated.

V. 6. (Note, Gen. 34:30.) The Ammonites had made themselves so odious to David, that they could not expect but that he would make war on them: and therefore they determined to form alliances, and act offensively.—Little more can be determined with certainty concerning the different tribes of the Syrians, than what may be collected from the texts referred to in the margin. Maacah seems to have been the name of a district, and not of a king: and the clause may be rendered, "of the king of Maacah." (Notes, 1 Chr. 19:6,7.)

14 And when the children of Ammon saw that the Syrians were fled, then fled they also before Abishai, and entered into the city. So Joab returned from the children of Ammon, and came to Jerusalem.

15 ¶ And when the Syrians saw that they were smitten before Israel, they [t] gathered themselves together.

16 And [u] Hadarezer sent, and brought out the Syrians that were beyond [*] the river; and they came to Helam: and [†] Shobach the captain of the host of Hadarezer went before them.

17 And when it was told David, [x] he gathered all Israel together, and passed over Jordan, and came to Helam: and the Syrians set themselves in array against David, and fought with him.

18 And the Syrians [y] fled before Israel; and David slew the men of seven hundred chariots of the Syrians, and forty thousand [z] horsemen, and smote [a] Shobach the captain of their host, who died there.

19 And when all the kings that were [b] servants to Hadarezer saw that they were smitten before Israel, they made peace with Israel, and served them. So the Syrians [c] feared to help the children of Ammon any more.

CHAP. XI.

Joab besieges Rabbah, 1. David commits adultery with Bath-sheba, the wife of Uriah, 2—4. She informs David, that she is pregnant, 5; who sends for Uriah, and in vain tries to induce him to visit his wife, 6—13. He sends by Uriah a letter to Joab; according to which Uriah, with others, is slain by the Ammonites, 14—17. Joab sends word to David, and he answers the messengers in very improper language, 18—25. David marries Bath-sheba, who bears him a son; but God is displeased, 26, 27.

AND it came to pass, [*] after the year [a] was expired, at the time when kings go forth to battle, that [b] David sent Joab and his servants with him, and all Israel; and they destroyed the children of Ammon, and besieged [c] Rabbah: but David tarried still at Jerusalem.

V. 8—14. This battle seems to have been fought at the gate of Medeba, a city upon the borders of the Ammonites, and in their possession. (1 Chr. 19:7.) Joab's forces were opposed by two armies, before and behind: but his arrangement was judicious, and his address spirited.—His valor and regard to his country were real and eminent: and the language of faith and piety which he employed, probably under some transient convictions, was honorable to God, and might be useful to the soldiers. Perhaps the slaughter was not very great, as both the Syrians and Ammonites took shelter in the city.

V. 18. The men of seven hundred, &c.] "Seven thousand men which fought in chariots." (1 Chr. 19:18.) Probably seven thousand men belonging to seven hundred chariots; and forty thousand men, who fought on foot, or on horseback, as there was occasion or opportunity. Or, some were foot-soldiers and some horsemen.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

We ought to sympathize with the afflicted, and shew gratitude to our friends: but nothing, except vexation and disappointment, can be expected by courting the friendship of ungodly men.—Treacherous minds are always suspicious: as they are conscious, that they themselves mean to deceive when they can gain by it, they naturally suppose that others intend the same; and weak and wicked princes generally employ counsellors of this description.—It is the height of folly to awaken the resentment of those, by insult and contempt, whose power of taking vengeance cannot be thus diminished: and the fatal effects of rash affronts, though little feared, are often severely felt.—We should shew respect and kindness, to those who have been unjustly disgraced; yet it is needless to lay mere affronts and insults to heart: unmerited reproaches or contempt will soon wear away, and a clear conscience should be deemed sufficient to counterbalance the present uneasiness. Yet, by measures of this kind, valuable persons are often driven for a season into obscurity, to the loss of the public rather than of themselves.—Those, who are the most ready to commit injustice, are commonly the most averse to reconciliation: and confidence in numbers, strength, or valor, frequently buoys up men to their destruction; for "though hand join in hand the wicked shall not be unpunished." But a good cause and a single dependence upon the Lord afford the surest indications of success: and when valiant men are cordial to the interests of their country, and are defending its civil and religious liberties, their animation and presence of mind will often increase in proportion to dangers and difficulties.—It is our duty, in every emergency, to do our utmost, and to encourage others to do the same, helping one another as occasion may require; and thus committing the event to the Lord; "Let him do what seemeth him good." But alas, many use good words, and seem, in perilous circumstances, to depend on God, and to be submissive to him, whose hearts are not upright in his sight: and many are very serviceable to his church, who have no part in its peculiar blessings.—But especially let the impenitent and unbelieving and disobedient recollect, that the son of David will assuredly resent their contempt of his ambassadors, whom he sends to them with a message of peace and love; and that he will consider the ill-usage of them as a declaration of war against himself. In this warfare numbers and confederacies are utterly unavailing, and destruction is inevitable. Those therefore, who have rashly engaged in the desperate contest, should without delay, separate from his enemies, fearing any longer to help them; and make it their great object to obtain his forgiveness, and to be numbered among his subjects. All his people should be valiant in his cause, and for his truth and righteousness: and ministers should neither fear, nor be ashamed, to exercise their embassy of reconciliation, however despised, insulted, or persecuted; for he will plead their cause, comfort them under their trials, and reward their faithfulness with "a crown of glory which fadeth not away."

2 And it came to pass in an evening-tide, that David [d] arose from off his bed, and walked upon [e] the roof of the king's house: and from the roof [f] he saw a woman washing herself; and the woman was [g] very beautiful to look upon.

3 And David [h] sent and inquired after he woman. And one said, Is not this *Bath-sheba the daughter of † Eliam, the wife of [i] Uriah the Hittite?

NOTES.

CHAP. XI. V. 1—5. David committed the management of the war against Ammon to Joab, and continued at ease in his palace, when he ought to have been "fighting the battles of the LORD:" and thus, being out of the line of present duty, he slothfully wasted his time. Without doubt his prosperity had gradually rendered him more negligent than formerly in his devotional exercises, and more self-indulgent; and perhaps had occasioned a measure of self-confidence and carnal security. Thus his passions gathered force, in proportion as his holy affections abated: and, having been accustomed, without censure, to marry any single woman, for whom he conceived an affection, his inclinations had not been habituated to a denial. When therefore, after an unseasonable sleep, he was walking on the flat roof of his house, and by some means had a view of a very beautiful woman, who was washing herself from a ceremonial uncleanness, he allowed himself to gaze upon her, until he lusted after her in his heart; and, perhaps supposing her not to be a married woman, he sent to inquire after her, in order to add her to the number of his wives. But his sinful passion had acquired such an ascendency, that he was the more inflamed by being informed, that she was the wife of one of his bravest and most faithful officers. He therefore sent messengers for her, who could not be ignorant of his intentions: and though she was previously a person of virtue and reputation, he obtained her compliance, (probably by means of those hopes which his rank in life was capable of inspiring,) and committed adultery with her.—This crime was attended with manifold aggravations: it was a gross violation of the seventh commandment: it was likewise punishable by the death of both parties according to the judicial law. (Lev. 20:10.) David was chief magistrate, to whom it belonged to carry that law into execution: he was at this time about fifty years of age; and he had already many wives; and many children also, approaching to man's estate, to whom the example would be prejudicial in the extreme. His acquaintance with the divine law, his open profession of true religion, his high reputation for piety and wisdom, and the immense obligations which the Lord had conferred on him; the rank and character of Bath-sheba too, and the service for him and his country in which Uriah was engaged, were all circumstances which exceedingly aggravated his offence.—When Bath-sheba found that she was with child by David, she justly dreaded the resentment of her husband, who had been absent from her for a considerable time; and she sent to inform David, that by the iniquitous interposition of his authority, which perhaps he had promised, she might be preserved from being made a public example. (Note, Matt. 1:18,19.)—Most of the Jewish writers, on the most frivolous pretences, exculpate both David and Bath-sheba, as to the adultery; and only condemn David, as to the murder! This is a specimen of their morality!

V. 6, 7. It is probable that Uriah was descended from the Hittites; but he was a proselyte, and had the heart of an Israelite.—Under the guilt of his very heinous sin, David was more anxious to conceal his shame, and prevent the temporal consequences, than to obtain forgiveness from God! indeed the former seems, for the time, to have almost wholly occupied his mind. (Note, Ps. 32:3—5.)—Perhaps he feared lest Uriah, in his deep resentment, should raise rebellion against him: and certainly he dreaded the reproaches which he might well expect from every quarter, when his shameful misconduct should be publicly known. In this state of mind, he did not consider the treachery and injustice, of drawing in Uriah to consider himself as the father of the child, with which Bath-sheba was pregnant: but, having formed his plan, he sent to Uriah, as if he could depend more on him to inform him of the state of the war, than on any other person.

V. 8, 9. Uriah's house was near David's palace, perhaps because he commanded some of the Cherethites and Pelethites, who were the king's guard. (Note, 8:15—18.) David never questioned but that he would gladly embrace the opportunity of visiting his wife, and accordingly provided them an entertainment. But whether any thing had excited Uriah's suspicions; or whether, through a hardy self-denied disposition, he scorned to fare better than his com-saying, Uriah went not down unto his house, David said unto Uriah, Camest not thou from thy journey? why then didst thou not go down unto thine house?

11 And Uriah said unto David, [u] The ark, and Israel, and Judah, abide in tents; and [x] my lord Joab, and the servants of my lord, are encamped in the open fields: shall I then go into mine house to eat, and to drink, and to lie with my wife? [y] as thou livest, and as thy soul liveth, I will not do this thing.

12 And David said to Uriah, [z] Tarry here to-day also, and to-morrow I will let thee depart. So Uriah abode in Jerusalem that day and the morrow.

13 And when David had called him, he did eat and drink before him; and he [a] made him drunk: and at even he went out to lie on his bed with the servants of his lord, but went not down to his house.

[Practical Observations.]

14 ¶ And it came to pass in the morning, that David [b] wrote a letter to Joab, and sent it by the hand of Uriah.

15 And he wrote in the letter, saying, [c] Set ye Uriah in the forefront of the * hottest battle, and retire ye † from him, that he may be smitten, [d] and die.

16 And it came to pass, when Joab observed the city, that [e] he assigned Uriah unto a place, where he knew that valiant men were.

17 And the men of the city went out and fought with Joab: and [f] there fell some of the people of the servants of David; and Uriah the Hittite died also.

mander and comrades, he would not go home, but slept with the other soldiers: and thus the Lord defeated David's design of "covering his transgression." (Note, Prov. 28:13.)

V. 10. 11. The circumstance of the ark being constantly placed in a tabernacle, and not a temple, could be no reason why Uriah should not go home to his house. It is therefore probable, that the ark was on this occasion carried with the army to the war. (Notes, 1 Sam. 4:4,5. 14:16—23.)—Uriah's answer was so decided, 'that David's heart, it might have been expect-'ed, should have been deeply touched, to think 'how he had abused so brave a man; and made 'him reflect, how vilely he indulged himself in 'sinful pleasure, while this man and the rest 'gloriously endured all manner of hardships, and 'refused the most innocent pleasure, for the 'sake of their country. But he was so corrupt-'ed for the present, that he was troubled to find 'Uriah so true a soldier!' Bp. Patrick.

V. 12, 13. David pretended further business with Uriah, and great kindness for him, in order to deceive him; that, if possible, he might break his resolution. Accordingly he entertained him at his own table: and, in addition to his other injuries, became his tempter to drunkenness; hoping that when his passions were inflamed, he might be induced to go home to his wife: but in this too he found himself disappointed. (Notes, 13:22—29. Gen. 19:31—38. Hab. 2:15—17.)

V. 14—17. Satan having gradually drawn David on into one sinful attempt after another, had prepared his mind for still more atrocious wickedness. (Notes, Matt. 26:14—16,25,30—35,40,41,69—75. John 12:1—8. 13:18—30.) He now perceived that, if Uriah lived, he must detect his wife's unfaithfulness; to prevent this was at present his leading object, and all other consequences were for the moment forgotten. David, however, would not kill Uriah with his own hands, nor order his servants to assassinate him, nor put him to death under color of law: for his reputation must have been ruined by such measures; nay, perhaps the direct injustice and murder would have disquieted his conscience, insensible as it was become. But he devised a more plausible and secret method of getting rid of him; which seemed at the time less atrocious, though in reality it was unspeakably more complicated and heinous. The known valor, fidelity, and zeal for his country, of this gallant officer, suggested the method of murdering him! David had such confidence in this much-injured man, that he did not hesitate to intrust him with the letter which decreed his death: and whatever else Uriah suspected, he did not betray his trust. Joab, and those "who retired from Uriah," were thus made accomplices in the murder; and the soldiers who were slain with Uriah, were no less murdered by David, than he was. Whatever casuistry David might use with his conscience, this was deliberate murder of many persons with malice prepense, aggravated exceedingly by the circumstance, that these men were slain in the very act of fighting for him and his kingdom. Perhaps Joab imagined that the king had some political reason for thus taking off Uriah: but probably he was rejoiced to see him involved in the guilt of murder as well as himself. (Notes, 3:26—39.)—And is this David, who repeatedly spared his enemy, and whose heart smote him, when he had cut off Saul's skirt! (Notes, 1 Sam. 24:4—15. 26:8—20.) Alas, how is he changed and fallen!—'Quantum mu-'tatus ab illo!'

22 So the messenger went, and came and shewed David all that Joab had sent him for.

23 And the messenger said unto David, Surely the men prevailed against us, and came out unto us into the field, and we were upon them even unto the entering of the gate.

24 And the shooters shot from off the wall upon thy servants, and some of the king's servants be dead, and thy servant Uriah the Hittite is dead also.

25 Then David said unto the messenger, Thus shalt thou say unto Joab, Let not this thing [*] displease thee; [k] for the sword devoureth [†] one as well as another: [l] make thy battle more strong against the city, and overthrow it; and encourage thou him.

26 And when the wife of Uriah heard that Uriah her husband was dead, [m] she mourned for her husband.

27 And when the mourning was past, David sent and [n] fetched her to his house, and she became his wife, and bare him a son. [o] But the thing that David had done [‡] displeased the LORD.

V. 21. Then say, &c.] This was a plain intimation to the messenger, that the death of Uriah would be so agreeable to David, as to reconcile him to the loss which had been sustained. Thus he began already to be despised even by his accomplices!—Amidst all the painful sensations excited by reading this chapter, it is pleasing to find David's soldiers so ready at quoting the Scripture: for probably the book of Judges was then extant as a part of Holy Writ. (Note, Judg. 9:50—57.)

V. 25. Provided the brave Uriah were dead, David seems not to have regarded who were slain with him. He spoke on this occasion with an insensibility about the lives of his subjects, which borders on infidelity, and strongly marks the state of his heart at this time. On other occasions he would have considered such an event as a rebuke, which required humiliation, prayer, and sacrifices, and a more entire dependence on God in future; (Notes, Josh. 7:6—9. 1 Chr. 15: 12—14.) and he would have censured the imprudence of the commanders, and charged them, on pain of his displeasure, to be more careful of the lives of their brethren.

V. 27. David married Bath-sheba as soon as it could be done with decency, and the customary mourning (which was in this case a vile mockery,) was ended. But though there remained no injured husband to avenge the adultery, the permature birth of the child would discover it.—All this time, as it appears from the narrative, David continued impenitent, and comparatively unconcerned. Probably, he still attended on the ordinances of religion. By some ingenious self-flattery he endeavored to palliate his conduct to himself; and no one reproved him for it. Perhaps the general practice of other princes induced him to conclude, that persons in his high station were not, in this respect, bound to the same strictness as their subjects. However, though he had no deep remorse of conscience, we may be sure that he lost all spirituality and comfort in religion: for small transgressions, like slight wounds, give much pain to the believer's conscience; but enormous crimes, like a violent blow upon the head, leave him for a season in an unaccountable state of insensibility.

But the thing, &c.] Such marriages, as this of David with Bath-sheba, with whom he had previously committed adultery, were not forbidden in the law, as some of the rabbies suppose; for this was needless, as both parties were condemned to die: and David was not afterwards ordered to put her away. Yet as he married her in order to cover his iniquity, and as the desire of possessing her may be supposed to have been an inducement to the murder of Uriah, it formed an additional aggravation of the crime: and the whole transaction, from first to last, was in all respects displeasing to the Lord.—But why was this permitted? or why was it recorded? It is certain that thousands, though succeeding generations, have, by this fall of "the man after God's own heart," been prejudiced against true religion, hardened in infidelity, or emboldened in blasphemy: while others have thence taken occasion to commit habitual wickedness under a religious profession, and with presumptuous confidence, to the still greater discredit of the gospel. It should, however, be considered, that all these have been, previously, either open enemies to true religion, or hypocritical pretenders to it: and it is the righteous purpose of God, that stumbling-blocks should be thrown in the way of such men, that they "may stumble, and fall, and be snared, and taken, and perish:" it is his holy will thus to detect the secret malignity of their hearts, and to make way for the display of his justice in their condemnation.—On the other hand thousands, from age to age, have by this awful example been rendered more suspicious of themselves, more watchful, more afraid of temptation, more dependent on the Lord, and more fervent in prayer; and by means of David's fall, have themselves been preserved from falling. Numbers, who have been overcome by temptation, have thus been preserved from despair. Every upright soul will eventually derive benefit from the impartial record of this event; and none will finally be injured by it, except those, who desire an excuse for sin, or an objection to the religion of the Bible. Bees will collect honey, and spiders poison, from the same plants, according to their different natures. No excuse can be made for David; he attempted none for himself: and much self-knowledge is requisite to account for his conduct, or to deem it possible that a man, who had so long enjoyed communion with God, in the highest exercises of devotion, could commit such enormous crimes, and continue so long impenitent. But the Lord's design in leaving him to himself was doubtless wise, righteous, and merciful; and he can and will over-rule it for great good to those who fear and love him. The glory of all the good is his due; the blame of all the evil, original or consequent, belongs to those who commit it. (Notes, Gen. 50:20. 2 Chr. 32:30—33, v. 31. Matt. 26:69—75.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—13.

A deep conviction, that the human heart, even the heart of every man, is "deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked," is of the greatest importance to the due exercise of repentance, faith, and every Christian grace: and in order to impress this humiliating conviction on the minds of those who attend to the word of God, a few of his most eminent servants have been left to fall in such a manner, as fully to prove, that every evil dwells in each of us; and that in circumstances of concurring temptations, we are capable of committing any crime; even that which we at present and habitually most dread and detest! Neither eminent piety, nor a long and close walk with God, habits of obedience and of the government of the passions, nor the sobriety of advancing age, nor peculiar obligations from God, great reputation and usefulness, nor clear knowledge of the divine law; nor even the Spirit of prophecy, have been found capable of extirpating the most hateful propensities of the human heart: though restrained, dethroned, and crucified, they have still lived; and have revived, obtained advantages, and for a season seemed to reign with the most destructive tyranny! Who then are we, that we should deem ourselves secure? We are never in this world out of the reach of temptation; never exempted, in respect of any sin, from the necessity of watchfulness, prayer, and dependence on divine grace. Let us not then be high-minded; but beg of God that he would enable us to pass the time of our sojourning in humble jealous fear.—The declensions of believers are commonly gradual: exemption from trials, and worldly prosperity, induce habits of negligence in duty, and inexpedient self-indulgence; and thus the soul falls into a careless and unwatchful frame. (Note, 1 Kings 11:1—8.) Then a man is drawn to the verge of prohibited gratification; and far beyond the bounds of expediency and moderation, in things not absolutely unlawful: and when his passions have been accustomed to indulgence, he is the more easily prevailed on to commit evident evil. The eye, the ear, the outward senses are not turned away from forbidden objects; by these inlets the sinful imagination is excited, and concupiscence is produced. Perhaps he hopes that the desire may be lawfully gratified, and on that vain pretence the mind is allowed to dwell on it. (Notes, Gen. 3:2—6.) But when lust is conceived, every restraint generally increases its vehemence: the thoughts of future consequences, and the consideration of the presence, purity, and justice of God, are excluded; his law and authority are disregarded: faith and fear and love are out of exercise; and the enhanced imagination of the satisfaction to be found in indulgence, possesses and engrosses the soul. Thus sin is brought forth: and, notwithstanding palliations, and previous hopes of concealment and impunity, the mind is soon tortured with that dread of future consequences, which far exceeds all guilty pleasures. (Notes, Gen. 3:7. Jam. 1:13—15.) But when the bait is swallowed, Satan hath caught the sinner; and no power except that of God can deliver him, or prevent his being more and more entangled. (Note, 2 Tim. 2:23—26.)—The fear of contempt, and even of disgracing the cause of religion, leads the believer, who is thus fallen, to devise methods of concealment; and such thoughts for a season exclude others of much greater importance, and afford Satan an opportunity of tempting him to still further iniquities: while the conscience, once corrupted, makes feeble opposition to fraudulent measures of preserving the reputation, or of preventing the consequences of transgression. Every concession hardens the heart, and provokes the departure of the Holy Spirit. The end being considered necessary; means of every kind, which promise success, seem needful also: and when a man's obligations to God are forgotten, no wonder if all the ties of justice, gratitude, and friendship are disregarded; and to impose upon the credulity and confidence of men, to injure them in their property, reputation, and connexions, and to tempt them to commit sin, are obvious, and, alas! common measures.

V. 14—27.

When a man has so far given place to the devil, as not only to commit scandalous sins, but to use disingenuous and base means of concealing them, and sees a prospect of having the whole exposed to public view; what shall prevent his being pushed forward, by the same influence and from the same motives, to treachery, malice, and murder, till crimes are multiplied and aggravated, beyond computation, and till every nobler consideration is extinguished? If conscience be thus stupified, it will be easy for the same artful enemy to amuse the deluded offender, with some form of godliness, some palliation or cloke of iniquity, which shall quiet the rising scruple: and success in such a course may even be considered as a divine sanction, and induce the language of indifference or of infidelity; while the heart is rendered callous, when the exercise even of atrocious cruelty is needful for the end proposed. But can a real and eminent believer ever tread this downward path, and, as it were, fall asleep in the arms of Satan? (Notes and P. O. Judg. 16:) Can a person, who has committed such atrocious crimes, and so long remains impenitent, be indeed a child of God, a member of Christ, a temple of the Holy Spirit, and an heir of eternal glory? Can one spark of divine life exist unextinguished in such an ocean? It is plain that these things are possible; but no man in such a case can have warranted evidence to conclude that he is a believer: the higher his confidence, who has sunk thus low in wickedness, the greater proof is there of his presumption and hypocrisy. Though grace be not lost in such an awful case, the assurance and consolation of it must be wholly suspended. Let not then any hypocrite, who resembles David in nothing but his transgressions, and who adds the habit of allowed sin to all other aggravations, buoy up his confidence with his example: let him first imitate David's humiliation, repentance, and other eminent graces, before he thinks himself, or requires others to consider him, as merely a backslider. (Notes, 12:13—15. 15:24—29. 1 Chr. 29: Ps. 51:) Neither let any opposer or despiser of the truth say, Are these the fruits of faith and devotion? We confidently answer, No. They are the effects of a corrupt nature, the tendency of which to evil must be inconceivably strong, when it overcomes the contrary tendency of truth and grace in the heart of an eminent servant of God.—And let us all watch against the beginnings of negligence and self-indulgence, and keep at the utmost distance from that precipice, whence David fell, earnestly beseeching God to close our senses, imaginations, and affections to all forbidden objects, thoughts, and desires. Let us study moderation, expediency and superiority to all animal inclinations, in things lawful: continually attend to our proper work, and pray always that we may not be led into temptation. Then will our lives best shew the tendency of our principles, and confute those who accuse us of encouraging men to sin by the freeness of salvation.—But again: Is it possible that such a backslider from God can be recovered, and admitted afterwards to comfort

CHAP. XII.

Nathan by a parable causes David to pass sentence on himself, 1—6. David, convicted by Nathan, confesses his guilt; and is pardoned, but told that the child shall die, 7—14. The child is smitten and dies, though David fasted and prayed for him while he lived, 15—18. Finding that the child is dead, David worships God, and takes comfort, 19—23. Solomon is born, and named Jedidiah, 24, 25. David takes Rabbah, and treats the Ammonites with severity, 26—31.

AND [a] the LORD sent Nathan [b] unto David: and [c] he came unto him, and said unto him, [d] There were two men in one city; the one rich, and the other poor.

2 The rich man had [e] exceeding many flocks and herds;

3 But the poor man had nothing, save [f] one little ewe-lamb, which he had bought, and nourished up; and it grew up together with him, and with his children: it did eat of his own * meat, and drank of his own cup, and [g] lay in his bosom, and was unto him as a daughter.

4 And there came [h] a traveller unto the rich man, and he spared to take of his own flock, and of his own herd, to dress for the wayfaring man that was come unto him; but [i] took the poor man's lamb, and dressed it for the man that was come to him.

5 And [k] David's anger was greatly kindled against the man; and he said to Nathan, [l] As the LORD liveth, the man that hath done this thing † shall surely die:

6 And he shall [m] restore the lamb fourfold, because he did this thing, and [n] because he had no pity.

able communion with him? Doubtless it is; "for with the LORD there is mercy, and with him there is plenteous redemption:" and he will neither cast out one humble penitent believer, whatever his former crimes have been; nor suffer Satan to pluck any of his sheep out of his hand. (Note, John 10:26—31.) Let then those who are fallen, return to the Lord without delay, and seek forgiveness through the Redeemer's atoning blood.—But how poor is every success and gratification, when the Lord is displeased with us! Either in this world or the next, he will surely expose us to shame for our crimes.—It is also grievous to observe how the sins of believers quiet the consciences and rejoice the hearts of wicked men, who are ready to insult and say, "Art thou also become as one of us!" But while many will thus abuse these humiliating instances, may we be unfeignedly thankful, if we have been restrained from such dreadful falls. May we commit our souls to him, who is able to keep us from falling: may we take warning by David's sins; and imitate the generosity, self-denial, and attachment to the cause of Israel, of the gallant and deeply injured Uriah.

NOTES.

CHAP. XII. V. 1—6. When God was displeased with his servant David, he did not immediately inflict heavy judgments upon him; but he sent a prophet, to call him to repentance. Nathan did not go, of his own accord and in his own name, to reprove David for his offences: but when sent by the Lord, he plainly delivered his message; without being induced by David's royal authority, his previous eminent character as a saint and psalmist, or his own peculiar affection for him, to conceal or mutilate it. It is probable, that this took place soon after the birth of David's son by Bath-sheba; when the scandalous transactions would begin to be generally noticed. But whatever others whispered and circulated, David seems not to have been in any due measure sensible of his exceedingly aggravated wickedness, till the Lord thus awakened his conscience.—In order to insinuate the necessary truths, without exciting the resistance of David's partial self-love; and to induce him to give sentence against himself before he was aware, Nathan introduced his message with a parable. (Notes, Judg. 9:7—15.) 'There is 'never more use of wisdom, than in the contri-'vance of reprehension; especially of princes, 'and great persons.' Bp. Patrick. There scarcely ever was any thing more calculated, on the one hand to awaken emotions of sympathy, and on the other, those of indignation, than the case here supposed, and the several circumstances, by which the heart must be interested in the poor man's case, and by which the unfeeling oppression of his rich neighbor was aggravated. Several expressions, however, might have excited a suspicion, that more was intended, than merely to plead the cause of an injured man against his oppressor: yet David evidently supposed it to be matter of fact, till Nathan made the application.—The rich man, who had many flocks and herds, represented David with his many wives and concubines: the poor man, with his single ewe lamb, which was so tenderly brought up by him, was Uriah with his one well-beloved wife; and the traveller may mean David's sensual lust, which nothing could satisfy but the wife of Uriah. 'In the beginning it' (the evil desire) 'is but a traveller, but in time 'it becomes a guest; and in conclusion, is the 'master of the house.' Jewish doctors in Bp. Patrick. Yet this parable, apposite and beautiful as it was, pointed out only a small part of the enormity of David's conduct. Uriah's loyal and gallant services, and David's ingratitude and treachery, with the murder of him and his fellow soldiers, were not so much as alluded to. His injury to Uriah and Bath-sheba, in the crime of adultery, was alone shadowed forth: for perhaps the prophet meant to bring him by degrees to a view of his exceeding sinfulness; and would not make the case too exact in all particulars, lest he should suspect his intentions, and be kept from giving sentence against himself.—David, forgetful of his own crimes, was fired with indignation against the imaginary offender; and with a solemn oath condemned him, not only to make legal restitution, but also to suffer death; or at least declared, that he was deserving of death. (Note, Gen. 38:24—26.)

9 Wherefore hast thou [u] despised the commandment of the LORD, [x] to do evil in his sight? [y] thou hast killed Uriah the Hittite with the sword, and hast taken his wife to be thy wife, and hast slain him with the sword of the children of Ammon.

V. 7. David failed of making the application of the parable to himself: yet Nathan had gained a great point, in bringing him to pronounce so severe a sentence against a supposed offender, for crimes of far inferior malignity to his own. He therefore, with great firmness and courage, directly applied his parable to the conscience of the offender; and assured David, that he was the very person whose conduct had been delineated, and whose sentence had been denounced out of his own mouth: and he then proceeded in a very plain, convincing, and even severe discourse, to shew the extent, aggravations, and effects of his guilt. (Notes, 1 Sam. 15:13—25. 1 Kings 21:17—23. Matt. 14:3—5.)

V. 8. Wives.] Or, Women. We read of no more than one wife of Saul, and Rizpah his concubine; (21:8. 1 Sam. 14:50.) and probably he had not any more. The women therefore of his court and family seem to be meant; which, according to the custom of the east, came into David's possession, when he succeeded to the kingdom. But if Saul had more wives or concubines, it is not probable that David married any of them, as Saul was his father-in-law. The LORD, by giving David these women in his providence, no more sanctioned his polygamy, than his giving Israel a king proved that they did well in desiring and asking one; or than his giving David's concubines to Absalom, sanctioned his detestable incest. (Notes, 11,12. 16:20—23. 1 Sam. 12:11—19.) But the multitude of unmarried women, of whom David had it in his power to make choice, aggravated his guilt in seizing upon the wife of another man. Nay, had he thought that any thing conducive to his comfort was yet wanting, he was allowed to ask for it, and the Lord declared that he would not have denied it, if he had seen it good for him. (Note, Ps. 84:11,12.)

V. 9. Wherefore, &c.] The clause may be rendered, "Wherefore hast thou despised the word of the LORD?" His promises, as well as his precepts. (Notes, Job 2:10. Matt. 16:21—23.) David, in this instance, had shewn that he thought the general and special promises of God, either too scanty or too precarious, to suffice for his felicity, or to ensure it; for otherwise he could have no need to seek satisfaction in another way: and this was a great contempt of them. He had also treated the commandments of God, as rigorous and needless restraints; and as worthy to be neglected, dispensed with, nay trampled on, when they interfered with his present gratification. (Notes, 11:14—17,27.)

V. 10. Despised me, &c.] (Note, 1 Sam. 2:30.) When David despised the word of God, he despised God himself; even his power and authority, his justice and purity, his omnipresence and omniscience, his favor and wrath, and all his glorious perfections: else, he would not thus have offended him, for the base gratification of his lusts. This was an aggravation of his crimes, less obvious to man's natural apprehensions, but full of deeper malignity, than all those enumerated in the former chapter. (Notes, 11:1—17. Ps. 51:4. Rom. 2:4—6.)—As the parable had particularly represented the evil of David's adultery, the address of Nathan is most pointed against his murder of Uriah.—The word rendered never, in this connexion, only implies perpetuity. (Note, Gen. 17:7,8.) So long as David lived, one after another of his family was slain, and Adonijah just after his death. (Notes, 13:22—29. 18:9—14. 1 Kings 2:15—25.)

V. 11, 12. David was not at Jerusalem when Absalom perpetrated his abominable crime; but it was committed in so shameless a manner, that it was as notorious as if he had seen it with his own eyes. (Note, 16:20—23.)—The Lord raised up this evil out of his own house: yet he did not put the wickedness into the hearts of his sons; but he left them to their own vile passions, and over-ruled the effects of them for David's chastisement. (Notes, Luke 22:21—23, v. 22. Acts 2:22—24. 4:23—28.)

V. 13. The dormant spark of divine grace in David's heart now began to rekindle; and by means of this plain and faithful statement of facts, in the name of God, his evasions vanished, and his guilt appeared in all its magnitude. (Notes, 2 Chr. 16:7—10. 24:19—22. 25:14—16.) He therefore was far from resenting the pointed rebuke of the prophet, or attempting any palliation of his conduct; but, in deep humilia

15 ¶ And Nathan departed unto his house: and the LORD [m] struck the child that Uriah's wife bare unto David, and it was very sick.

16 David therefore [n] besought God for the child; and David * fasted, and went in, and [o] lay all night upon the earth.

17 And [p] the elders of his house arose, and went to him, to raise him up from the earth: but he would not, neither did he eat bread with them.

18 And it came to pass on the seventh day, that the child died. And the servants of David feared to tell him that the child was dead: for they said, Behold, while the child was yet alive we spake unto him, and he would not hearken unto our voice: how will he then † vex himself, if we tell him that the child is dead?

19 But when David saw that his servants whispered, David perceived that the child was dead: therefore David said unto his servants, Is the child dead? And they said, He is dead.

20 Then David [q] arose from the earth, and washed, and [r] anointed himself, and changed his apparel, and came into [s] the house of the LORD, and worshipped: then he came to his own house; and when he required, they set bread before him, and he did eat.

tion of heart, he confessed, "I have sinned against the LORD." The words are few; but the event proved them to have been the language of genuine repentance, which regards sin as committed against the authority and glory of the Lord, whether or not it have occasioned evil to any fellow-creature. (Note, Ps. 51:4.) And Nathan assured him, (perhaps not at that time, but when the sincerity of his repentance had been further proved,) that the "LORD had put away his sin, and he should not die."—Murder and adultery were crimes punishable by death: no Israelite indeed had authority to execute this sentence upon the Lord's anointed; yet David might justly fear that God himself would cut him off by some sudden judgment. But the prophet informed him, that he should not die in this manner, or be cast out of his kingdom; and this intimated, that the eternal punishment also would be remitted.

V. 14. Perhaps the Ammonites, and other idolatrous enemies of God and Israel, had received information of these sins of the highly favored servant and zealous worshipper of JEHOVAH, and blasphemed his name on that account: and the wicked Israelites, especially those of Saul's party, would reflect upon the divine justice, in that Saul had been rejected for apparently less heinous crimes, and David was spared notwithstanding these enormities. (Notes, Matt. 18:7—9. 1 Tim. 6:1—5. Tit. 2:3—6.) But the Lord did not punish Saul above his deservings, and therefore did him no injustice in forgiving David: and he judges not merely by the outward action, but by the inward disposition of the heart; and there he perceived a very important difference, and even contrariety, in the two characters. In the temporal punishment, however, of David in his family, the Lord determined to silence these blasphemies; and he began by the death of the child which Bath-sheba had born to him. This event, though in fact a mercy to all parties, yet being predicted and publicly declared to be a rebuke for his sin, would be for the time a sharp and painful chastisement.

V. 15. The prophet, having delivered his message, returned home, probably to pray for the king: and David retired, and poured out his soul in godly sorrow and ingenuous confessions; and perhaps immediately wrote, and soon after published, the fifty-first Psalm; which forms the most complete specimen and standard of genuine and deep repentance, that is any where extant. (Notes, Ps. 51:)

V. 16. David might hope, that there was a secret condition in the threatening; and that upon his humiliation, attended by fasting and prayer, the child might yet be spared. (Marg. Ref.) He considered the infant as an innocent sufferer for his crimes; (Note, 24:17.) he had doubtless a very great affection for him; his spirit was at that time peculiarly tender; and perhaps Bath-sheba likewise was overwhelmed with a load of guilt and sorrow. (24) On all these accounts, he thus deeply humbled himself before God, and sought the life of the child, though he would have lived a monument of his sin and shame.—We may conceive of him, as laying aside his royal robes, and appearing as a penitent in a mean and mournful garment, fasting, lying on the ground, confessing his guilt, mourning over it, and praying with all fervency, and without intermission, during the whole night. (Notes, Joel 2:12—14. Jon. 3:5—9.)

V. 17. Eat bread with them.] 'As he was 'wont to do at other times, when the principal 'persons of the court sat at table with him.' Bp. Patrick. Probably, some days past before the child died; but, whatever sustenance David might take during that time, no doubt it was mean, scanty, and taken privately. (Note, Dan. 10:2,3.)

V. 18. Some think that the child died on the seventh day from his birth; and that this was an additional rebuke, as he died uncircumcised. But others suppose that the continuance of the child's sickness, and of David's sorrow and mortification is meant.

V. 20. By changing his raiment, and going up to the house of God to worship, David publicly expressed his acceptance of the chastisement, his submission to the will of God, and his gratitude to him for sparing his life. (Marg. Ref.—Note, Job 1:20—22.)

it was alive; but when the child was dead thou didst rise and eat bread.

22 And he said, While the child was yet alive, [u] I fasted and wept: for I said, Who can tell whether God will be gracious to me, that the child may live?

23 But now he is dead, wherefore should I fast? Can I bring him back again? [x] I shall go to him, but [y] he shall not return to me.

24 And David comforted Bath-sheba, his wife, and went in unto her, and lay with her: and [z] she bare a son, and he called his name Solomon; and the LORD loved him.

25 And he sent by the hand of [a] Nathan the prophet, and he called his name *Jedidiah, because of the LORD.

28 Now therefore gather the rest of the people together, and encamp against the city, and take it; lest I take the city, and †it be [d] called after my name.

29 And David gathered all the people together, and went to Rabbah, and fought against it, and took it.

30 And he [e] took their king's crown from off his head, (the weight whereof was a talent of gold, with the precious stones,) and it was set on David's head: and he brought forth the spoil of the city ‡in great abundance.

31 And he brought forth the people that were therein, and [f] put them under saws, and under harrows of iron, and under axes of iron, and made them pass through the brick-kiln: and thus did he unto all the cities of the children of Ammon. So David and all the people returned unto Jerusalem.

V. 21—23. (Marg. Ref.—Note, 1 Cor. 2:14—16.) While David entertained any hope of the child's life, humble fasting and prayer formed the present duty: but after the event, meek submission was required. He could not profit the child; and he might injure himself, and neglect his duty, by mourning for him. The child, released from sufferings, and gone before to a better world, was no loser; the public sustained no detriment, as in the death of useful persons; and there remained no farther reason for sorrow, except he should repine against the will of God: and this he would not do, but rather prepare to follow his son, and hope to meet him in the world above.

V. 24, 25. David's marriage with Bath-sheba was in many respects very sinful; (Note, 11:27.) yet it must not be disannulled. In the mystery of the divine counsels, it made way for the performance of the promises before given: (Note, 7:12—16.) and Bath-sheba has her name inserted in the genealogy of the Redeemer!—As a token of the Lord's reconciliation to David and Bath-sheba, this son by her was named Solomon, or the peaceable; and Jedidiah, or Beloved of the LORD, because of the LORD's peculiar favor to him. (Marg.—Notes, Gen. 49:10. Matt. 1:20—23.) In this he especially typified Him of whom the Father hath said, "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased."—'It is ob-'servable, that there is not one word said to 'Bath-sheba, in all this relation. ... She was pun-'ished .... in the calamity that befel David; who 'enticed her, not she him, to commit the foul sin 'of adultery; and she was innocent in the mur-'der of Uriah.' Bp. Patrick. It seems, that she was released from the legal punishment of death, by the same act of grace, which pardoned David: but she was, probably, for some time both in great sorrow and distress, and overwhelmed with fears, and remorse, and shame.

V. 26—31. The sacred historian, having finished the account of David's fall and repentance, resumes the subject of the war with Ammon.—As the siege of Rabbah seems to have been considerably advanced when Uriah was slain, the event here recorded must be supposed to have occurred not long after. The Lord was very gracious to David, in thus prospering his arms, notwithstanding his aggravated offences: and Joab approved himself very faithful to his prince, and attentive to his reputation. The crown of the king of the Ammonites is said to have weighed a talent; but that, being above a hundred weight, seems enormous: probably it means the value of it with the precious stones. —David appears to have been too much pleased with this crown: whereas his anointing, as the king of God's people, was a far more honorable distinction.—It is not certain what the punishments were, which he inflicted upon the prisoners; whether he put them to death, under saws, axes, and harrows; or whether he condemned them to wear out their lives in severe bondage, by various labors. He meant to punish their cruelty to the men of Jabesh-gilead, and their contempt of his ambassadors: (Notes, 10:3,4. 1 Sam. 11:1—3.) but if there were, as it seems probable, an undistinguishing severity exercised towards them, we must ascribe it to the state of his mind at that time.

City of waters. (27) The other part of the city, being supplied with water, from that part of which Joab had got possession, could not hold out long, but must be soon forced to surrender.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—14.

Our falls into sin originate from the evil of our depraved hearts, but our recoveries are from the Lord. He commonly employs the ministry of the word in bringing sinners to repentance: and the plain, authoritative declaration of the divine law, and of the evil nature and effects of sin, is the appointed method of awakening the careless conscience, and of bringing men to condemn themselves. In some cases great prudence and address are necessary in deliver

CHAP. XIII.

Amnon, David's son, loves his sister Tamar, 1, 2: and by Jonadab's advice he feigns sickness, that Tamar might wait on him; and taking that opportunity he ravishes her, 3—14. He hates her and drives her away, and she in grief and shame retires to Absalom, 15—20. David is angry; but Absalom conceals his hatred, 21, 22. Absalom invites his brethren to a feast; where Amnon at his command is murdered, 23—29. David grieves vehemently, supposing that all his sons are slain; but is comforted by Jonadab, and learns the truth, 30—36. Absalom flees to Geshur; but David longs after him, 37—39.

ing the message of God, especially to those in exalted stations. Apt illustration often forms the most compendious and effectual method of roducing conviction: and it is well when such an indirect address will spare the painful necessity of more explicit reproofs. But self-flattery renders us quicksighted to the faults of others, though of inferior malignity, and blind to our own most atrocious offences; and in proportion as men are tender to their own sins, they are often unreasonably severe in animadverting upon those of their neighbors. Hence arises the necessity of "great plainness of speech" in the public ministry of the gospel; that the conduct and cases of sinners of every description may be explicitly declared, and that the conscience of every one that is guilty may say to him, "Thou art the man." Nor is this personal; provided the general cases of multitudes are described, and the peculiarities of an individual's character are not so marked, as to draw the attention of the auditors from themselves to him. But it is often necessary, in private, to be still more explicit and particular, with such professed Christians as cannot, or will not, understand the plainest public address; and this without any reserve or respect of persons, and with all seriousness, energy, and expostulation. It will never be well with the church of God, till secret lamentations over unreproved scandals and abuses, and private conversations concerning the faults of the absent, be generally changed, by the ministers of Christ especially, for faithful plain dealing with men in private: and those who are of reputation ought to take the lead, and to set the example, in this arduous but salutary business.—The true minister's message will comfort or distress the consciences of those who regard it, according as they are walking with God, or the contrary: nay, the believer himself can expect no consolation from a scriptural statement of the truth, while he lies under the guilt and power of unrepented sin; and if he obtain any, it is either through the minister's error or unfaithfulness, or his own self-flattery, and ill-grounded confidence.—Every instance of the divine goodness to us increases the heinousness of our transgressions: but the extent of the promises, and the Lord's readiness to hear prayer, and to give every good thing to his people, peculiarly aggravate our guilt, when we desire forbidden gratifications. We need not wonder that men in general despise the promises and commandments of God; yea, and the Lord himself, in his whole character, and in all his relations to them: when even eminent believers, in some instances, are capable of the same folly and ingratitude. From this source all our sins proceed: man's contempt of the infinite excellency and invaluable favor of God; disregard to his authority, aversion to his service, and enmity to his justice and holiness, give being and malignity to every species of disobedience; and they are in themselves utterly inexcusable.—But, however iniquity may have prevailed, where true grace exists there is also sensibility, and a ground in which the word of God may take root. (Note, Matt. 13:23.) The humbled sinner will not be offended by his faithful reprover, but rather thank him; and God will never refuse forgiveness to true penitents.—It is however grievous to think, what great occasion of blasphemy to the enemies of the Lord the falls of his professing people afford: yet none except his enemies will make this use of them; and the open confessions of the penitent offenders, their future holy conduct, the severe corrections which they experience, and their patience under them, will manifest the equity and purity, as well as the mercy of God, in pardoning their offences; and will mark an essential difference, of habitual character and disposition, between them and unhumbled sinners of every description. (Notes, Rom. 7:13—17.)

V. 15—31.

The Lord often causes his offending people to read their sins in their punishment; he puts them to open shame for their secret offences; and, by the sufferings of those whom they most tenderly love, he fills their hearts with the keenest anguish. Under such rebukes they will be led to deeper and deeper humiliation, to chasten themselves with fasting, and to pour out more fervent and incessant prayers; and especially for those who are suffering on their account, and are unable to pray for themselves. Yet, the same principles will teach them to moderate their sorrows for those beloved objects, whom God has taken from them, and to prepare diligently to follow them: and nothing should induce them to neglect their present duty. After the same manner, as long as life lasts, let the discouraged sinner seek the Lord, humble himself, and pour out his prayers before him; if only able to say, "Who knoweth if God will be gracious to me!"—Those, who are ignorant of the divine life, cannot comprehend the reasons of a believer's conduct in his varied experiences: they mistake deep humility and fervent prayer, for impatience and an inordinate love to created objects; acquiescence in the Lord's will, and cheerful gratitude under sharp trials, will be deemed indifference and apathy; and in a thousand different ways they will shew their incapacity to judge of the consistency and reasons of his behavior. (Notes, Acts 16:1—5. P. O. 1 Cor. 2:10—16.) But God accepts those services which man censures: a humble, submissive spirit prepares the way for divine consolations, notwithstanding former crimes; and we should encourage the desponding hearts of our fellow-sinners, with the comforts which the Lord has graciously afforded us: and when the heart is thus prepared, the message of the minister will again be peace and joy.—Our prayers for our children are graciously answered, if some of them die in their tender infancy, (for they are well taken care of,) and the others live "beloved of the LORD."—Vengeance will in due season overtake the persecutors and abusers of God's people and ministers; and in their severest sufferings He will be righteous, though the instruments should be unreasonably and iniquitously severe.—In proportion as we lose sight of the honor that cometh from God, we become ambitious and vain of worldly distinctions: (Note, 2 Kings 20:12—19.) and we are most compassionate, kind, and forgiving to our fellow-sinners, when we most feel our need of the Lord's forgiving love to our own souls, and experience the comfort of it.—Finally, in whatever service the Lord may please to employ us, may we, (as Joab with David,) execute his will faithfully, and then give him the whole glory without any reserve.

AND it came to pass after this, that [a] Absalom, the son of David, had [b] a fair sister, whose name was [c] Tamar; and Amnon the son of David [d] loved her.

2 And Amnon was so [e] vexed, that he fell sick for his sister Tamar; for she was a virgin: and * Amnon thought it hard for him to do any thing to her.

3 But Amnon had [f] a friend, whose name was Jonadab the son of [g] Shimeah, David's brother: and Jonadab was a very [h] subtle man.

4 And he said unto him, [i] Why art thou, being the king's son, † lean ‡ from day to day? wilt thou not tell me? And Amnon said unto him, [k] I love Tamar, [l] my brother Absalom's sister.

5 And Jonadab said unto him, [m] Lay thee down on thy bed, and make thyself sick: and when thy father cometh to see thee, say unto him, I pray thee, let my sister Tamar come, and give me meat, and dress the meat in my sight, that I may see it, and eat it at her hand.

6 So Amnon lay down, and made himself sick: and when the king was come to see him, Amnon said unto the king, I pray thee, let Tamar my sister come and [n] make me a couple of cakes in my sight, that I may eat at her hand.

7 Then David sent home to Tamar, saying, Go now to thy brother Amnon's house, and dress him meat.

8 So Tamar went to her brother Amnon's house; and he was laid down. And she took § flour, and kneaded it, and made cakes in his sight, and did bake the cakes.

9 And she took a pan, and poured them out before him, but he refused to eat. [o] And Amnon said, Have out all men from me: and they went out every man from him.

10 And Amnon said unto Tamar, Bring the meat into the chamber, that I may eat of thine hand. And Tamar took the cakes which she had made, and brought them into the chamber to Amnon her brother.

11 And when she had brought them unto him to eat, he took hold of her, and said unto her, [p] Come, lie with me, my sister.

NOTES.

CHAP. XIII. V. 1, 2. Nathan's word began to take effect not very long after it was delivered. (Notes, 12:10—12.)—David seems to have been far too indulgent of his children: probably, their mothers had a great share in their education, and some of these instilled into them bad principles; indeed these are the natural effects of polygamy. Yet his sons had been restrained from open wickedness, by his example, influence, and occasional instructions, until he had committed those crimes which have been considered. But notwithstanding David's repentance, they, now grown up, would naturally consider that his conduct gave some license to their youthful inclinations, and conclude that he could not greatly censure them, after he had set them such an example. Thus he might clearly trace the sins of his children from his own misconduct, and this would increase the anguish of the chastisement.—Tamar was Amnon's sister as the daughter of David, but of another mother. (Note, 3:2—5.) If Amnon had not been secretly habituated to vice, he surely never could, in the first instance, have yielded to so unnatural a passion! (Note, Lev. 18:6—17.) By gazing upon Tamar's beauty his concupiscence was excited, and, being indulged, it gained an entire ascendency. (Notes, 11:1—5. Matt. 5:27,28.) He was not restrained from attempting to accomplish his base purpose by the fear of God; by conscience, shame, regard to the peace or favor of his father, or to the reputation, virtue, or comfort of Tamar; or by any foresight of evil consequences: but, because of her modesty, and the care which was taken of her, he could not find an opportunity of getting her into his power. His passion therefore preyed upon his spirits, and impaired his health. (Notes, Cant. 5:8. 2 Cor. 7:9—11.)

V. 3, 4. Amnon deemed Jonadab his friend, because he was his flatterer, and the caterer for his lusts. He was "a very subtle man;" (Notes, 32,33. 16:20—23. Gen. 3:1.) one very sagacious, as to this present world; or rather, a very crafty courtier, who readily discerned the inclinations of his superiors, and was very ingenious in devising means for the gratification of them. Observing Amnon to look more and more languid one day after another, he suspected the cause, and intimated to him, that a person of his rank might obtain his desires if he went about it: and thus he drew from him the shameful secret. Had he not interposed, probably Amnon's passion might have been suppressed, and at length supplanted by an affection fo some other object. (Notes, 1 Kings 21:4—7.) But when Jonadab understood the state of his mind, he speedily put him in a way of obtaining his wishes. Amnon was the heir-apparent of the crown: David was growing old, and probably shewed Jonadab but little favor though he was his nephew; being the son of David's brother Shimeah, called also Shammah, and Shimma. (32. 1 Sam. 16:9. 1 Chr. 2:13.) He therefore paid court to Amnon; and supposed that his

be as one of the fools in Israel. [r] Now therefore, I pray thee, speak unto the king; for he will not withhold me from thee.

14 Howbeit he would not hearken unto her voice; but, being stronger than she, [s] forced her, and lay with her.

[Practical Observations.]

15 Then Amnon [t] hated her [*] exceedingly; so that the hatred wherewith he hated her was greater than the love wherewith he had loved her: and Amnon said unto her, Arise, be gone.

16 And she said unto him, There is no cause; this evil in sending me away is greater than the other that thou didst unto me: but he would not hearken unto her.

17 Then he called his servant that ministered unto him, and said, Put now this woman out from me, and bolt the door after her.

18 And she had [u] a garment of divers colors upon her: for with such robes were the king's daughters that were virgins apparelled. Then his servant brought her out, and bolted the door after her.

19 And Tamar [x] put ashes on her head, and rent her garment of divers colors that was on her, and [y] laid her hand on her head, and went on crying.

20 And Absalom her brother said unto her, Hath [†] Amnon thy brother been with thee? [z] but hold now thy peace, my sister: he is thy brother; [‡] regard not this thing. So Tamar remained [§] desolate in her brother Absalom's house.

21 But when king David heard of all these things, [a] he was very wroth.

22 ¶ And Absalom [b] spake unto his brother Amnon [c] neither good nor bad: for Absalom [d] hated Amnon, because he had forced his sister Tamar.

23 And it came to pass after two full rank and authority would bear him out in any crime, which he was disposed to commit.

V. 5—14. This plot was laid very artfully. Amnon's sickly looks gave plausibility to his pretended illness: David's tender affection to his children was well known: persons, who have been accustomed to indulgence, are naturally whimsical in their diet when sick: David would be sure to visit Amnon, and be disposed to humor him in every thing, and would not at all suspect so base a design concealed under his request: and thus he would readily obtain David's consent to Tamar's coming to him. Nor could she have any suspicion of such horrid villany from one, who seemed very ill and in danger of death: but when he commanded all to leave the room, whilst he ate of her cakes, she might very justly have apprehended some bad design.—Tamar's skill and readiness in such ordinary employments, though a king's daughter; her compassionate attention to her half-brother; and all her answers and behavior, are suited to give us a very favorable opinion of her character. She pleaded that he, as her brother, ought to protect her, instead of injuring her; that such behavior was peculiarly foolish and wicked in an Israelite; that it would for ever disgrace and ruin her; and would expose him to scorn and hatred, as one of the most abandoned of men. (Marg. Ref. p—r.) Her proposal to him, to ask her of the king, who would rather allow him to marry her, than leave him to die of his sickness, was doubtless solely meant to prevent present violence; for she knew that David would afterwards protect her. (Note, Gen. 19:6—9.) And it is probable, that she accompanied her complaints and expostulations with unavailing outcries, which Amnon's domestics doubtless disregarded: for she seems to have been entirely free from blame in the scandalous transaction.

V. 15—18. The determined language and conduct of Tamar, probably joined with sharp reproaches, so irritated Amnon, that his licentious love was at once changed into the most vehement hatred: and without regarding her remonstrances, he ordered her to be turned out of doors, with every circumstance of aversion and abhorrence, 'as if she had been an infamous intruder.' Bp. Patrick. (Note, Gen. 39:13—16.) This was doubtless additional and most malignant ill usage, and tended to publish her disgrace, which might otherwise have been concealed: but we must attribute it to the confusion and distress of her mind, that she stated this to be the greater injury; unless she supposed that, in so singular a case, he might and ought to have married her.

V. 19, 20. Tamar went home in the manner, and with all the gestures of an inconsolable mourner. (Marg. Ref.) Doubtless her mind was filled with extreme anguish; but perhaps she meant also thus to protest, that though unfortunate she was not criminal. Absalom dissembled his deep and implacable resentment, and persuaded her to compose her mind, and not further to expose the shame of her family.—It seems that Tamar not only shunned society at the time; but also lived all her days a single and retired life. (Note, Gen. 34:31.)

V. 21. Amnon's incest was an express violation of the divine law; and to one prohibition it is added, "they shall be cut off; ... he shall bear his iniquity." (Lev. 18:9. 20:17.) Yet the magistrate was not explicitly commanded to put the offender to death. Neither was it enjoined, that he who forced a woman should be put to death, unless she was betrothed; because otherwise he would have been obliged to marry her. (Notes, Ex. 22:16,17. Deut. 22:22—27.) Perhaps these circumstances united with David's excessive paternal tenderness, especially to his eldest son, and with the consciousness of his own guilt, to satisfy his mind in leaving Amnon to the judgment of God, without inflicting any punishment upon him. But certainly he ought to have manifested his displeasure in some very decided manner; and this complication of crimes would have justified the severest punishment: but as he neglected his duty, the Lord afterwards took ven-

24 And Absalom came to the king, and said, Behold now, thy servant hath sheep-shearers; [g] let the king, I beseech thee, and his servants, go with thy servant.

25 And the king said to Absalom, Nay, my son, let us not all now go, lest we be chargeable unto thee. And he [h] pressed him: howbeit he would not go, but [i] blessed him.

26 Then said Absalom, If not, I pray thee, [k] let my brother Amnon go with us. And the king said unto him, Why should he go with thee?

27 But Absalom pressed him, that he let Amnon and all the king's sons go with him.

28 Now Absalom had [l] commanded his servants, saying, Mark ye now when Amnon's [m] heart is merry with wine, and when I say unto you, Smite Amnon; then kill him, [n] fear not: * have not I commanded you? be courageous, and be † valiant.

29 And the [o] servants of Absalom did unto Amnon as Absalom had commanded: then all the king's sons arose, and every man ‡ gat him upon his [p] mule and fled.

30 And it came to pass, while they were in the way, that tidings came to David, saying, Absalom hath slain all the king's sons, and there is not one of them left.

31 Then the king [q] arose, and tare his garments, and lay on the earth; and [r] all his servants stood by with their clothes rent.

32 And [s] Jonadab the son of [t] Shimeah, David's brother, answered and said, Let not my lord suppose that they have slain all the young men the king's sons; for Amnon only is dead: for by the § appointment of Absalom this hath been ‖ determined, from the day that he forced his sister Tamar.

33 Now therefore [u] let not my lord the king take the thing to his heart, to think that all the king's sons are dead: for Amnon only is dead.

34 But [x] Absalom fled. And the young man that kept the watch lifted up his eyes, and looked, and, behold, there came much people by the way of the hill-side behind him.

35 And Jonadab said unto the king, Behold, the king's sons come: ¶ as thy servant said, so it is.

geance on Amnon, in a way which added still more to David's domestic trials. (Notes, 22—33. 1 Sam. 2:29—34.)

V. 22—29. Absalom harbored the deepest resentment of the gross affront put upon himself, and the irreparable injury done to his sister: yet for two years he concealed his hatred under the appearance of total indifference! (Notes, Gen. 27:41,42. Prov. 26:24—27. Eph. 4:26,27.) This imposed on Amnon, who on that very account ought to have been more afraid of him: at length, however, Absalom deemed matters ripe for the execution of his determined revenge. According to the custom of those times, having flocks of sheep, and making a feast when they were shorn, he formed his plot upon that circumstance. To cover his design he invited his father with all his attendants to come to his feast, sensible that from prudential reasons he would decline the invitation: but he thus obtained his approbation to Amnon's going with the rest of his brethren; and David perhaps hoped that a reconciliation between them would be thus effected or cemented. Probably, Absalom was urged on the more resolutely to the murder of his brother, because he was the next heir to the crown; if Chileab were dead, as it is generally supposed. (3:3.) His atrocious crime was greatly aggravated, by being a breach of hospitality, and committed under the mask of affection, in the presence of his brethren; and by his father being drawn in unintentionally to be accessary to it. He involved his servants also in the guilt of murder, as if his command could warrant their transgression of God's law! (Notes, 1 Sam. 28:9,10. 1 Kings 21:8—14.) He took the opportunity of killing Amnon, when he was drunk, or nearly so, as if he had meant to murder body and soul at once: and his servants, without hesitation, punctually executed his most iniquitous command. (Notes, 1 Sam. 22:17—19.) —His mule. (29) Mules seem about this time to have come greatly into use among the superior persons, being substituted in the place of asses: for horses were still little employed in Israel. (Marg. Ref. p.) Yet the breeding of mules was a violation of the divine law. (Lev. 19:19.)—Probably, they were imported.

V. 32, 33. It cannot be supposed, that Absalom would make Jonadab his confident; but being a sagacious man he had, from some circumstances, or casual expressions, suspected his malicious intentions. (Marg. Ref.—Note, 3,4.) It would, however, have been far more profita ble sagacity, to have foreseen these consequences, and to have forwarned Amnon, before he had perpetrated the crime which provoked this fatal revenge. (Jer. 4:22.—Note, Jer. 8:8,9.)

V. 37—39. (Notes, Gen. 4:9—12.) Absalom fled for refuge to the court of his mother's father; Marg. Ref. y;) and there he continued for three years: and David so far from requiring him to be delivered up, that he might be punished according to the law of God; after a time impatiently desired to recal him, and to be reconciled to him. In this he too closely copied Eli's example, and honored his sons more than God; (Note, 1 Sam. 2:29.) who therefore made them his scourges, and then punished them himself. David's sons however were not priests, and so did not disgrace the sanctuary: he could not have proceeded against Absalom, without condemning him to die; as Eli might have done against his sons: and David's own blood-guiltiness, too much resembling Absalom's, (in that he murdered Uriah under the guise of friendship by the hand of others, after having previously tempted him to drunkenness,) might tend to enervate his resolution and dispose him to lenity. (Notes, 11:12—17.) These considerations may account for his conduct, but they by no means excuse it.—Absalom's servants fled with him, and thus escaped the doom which they merited, and so were reserved for further mischief. (14:30. 15:10.)

Mourned for his son. (37) Absalom seems here exclusively intended; for David was comforted for "Amnon;" who was buried privately, as it appears; and not, as Abner had been, with any public honor. (Notes, 3:33—39.) Amnon's base conduct had, it may well be supposed, rendered him unpopular: and an honorable interment would have been a strong protest against Absalom's crimes, which David was not disposed to enter

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—14.

The judgments of God upon those, who are finally saved, may be so terrible, varied, and continued, as effectually to proclaim his abhorrence of their crimes; and no reflecting person, with these records before his eyes, would venture to commit iniquity, even if he could be sure to escape eternal misery; any more than a man would, for a trifling advantage, throw himself from a precipice and break his bones, if he could be assured that his life would be preserved: for he would be sensible, that he must suffer immense pain, and probably be a cripple all his days.—The Lord over-rules the wickedness of men, (while they are hurried on by their own lusts and Satan's temptations,) to accomplish his holy and righteous purposes.—External accomplishments are generally a detriment to the possessors, and a temptation to others: none therefore ought to be vain of them, or to regret the want of them.—So depraved is the human heart, that even natural affection may degenerate into licentiousness; and the intercourse even between near relations should be conducted with caution and prudence, that no opportunity may be given to those who are disposed to commit iniquity.—What men dignify with the name of love is commonly a base sensual inclination, entire selfishness, which triumphs over conscience and the fear of God, and without pity consigns its object to irreparable disgrace and misery, for the sake of a momentary gratification! How different from that love, which the law of God commands! yea, how contrary to it!—Men's domineering lusts, when restrained by external hindrances, become their tormentors, drink up their spirits, and disorder their bodies; and probably the fury of sinful passions, without any possibility of gratification, will form one dreadful part of the misery of the damned: let the tremendous thought lead every reader to seek the mortification of them, that by the grace of God they may be extirpated from his heart.—Who can conceive, what the state of this world would be, if every sinner's power was equal to his inclination, for the commission of wickedness?—If indulged melancholy be improper for those, who possess eminent stations and great affluence in this world; how inconsistent is it with the profession, privileges, and prospects of the children of God! and if they are "lean from day to day" in their souls, it is commonly the effect of yielding to sloth and worldly affections.—When iniquity is conceived in the heart, all the powers of the understanding will be employed in devising how to effect it; and even sickness will not always be sufficient to take men off even for the time from licentious pursuits.—When debauched persons occupy exalted stations, they will be attended by "very subtle men," nearly resembling Satan; sagacious prompters, and crafty advisers in iniquity! These will assist them in overcoming the opposition of shame and conscience; and encourage them to gratify themselves, without regarding truth or justice, or the interests or happiness of others. Such are deemed and treated as friends; but the event will prove them to have been, merely for their own advantage, the most destructive enemies.—Many violent, but concealed, evil desires would be extinguished, did not such prompters discern and draw forth the confession of them, and contrive the method of gratification. Such plausible villains know how to take advantage of the affection, candor, modesty, and unsuspecting confidence of pious persons, for the accomplishment of their own infamous designs: and when iniquity is resolved on, a perfect infatuation takes place, and all probable or certain consequences are forgotten.—But silent abhorrence is the proper censure of these abominable deeds of darkness, which are especially horrible under the light of revelation: even ungodly persons will execrate those, who perpetrate such outrages against common decency: and they will appear as fools and reprobates to their neighbors in general; notwithstanding high rank, or even princely or royal dignity.

V. 15—39.

Sensual love is readily changed into hatred and concupiscence into loathing: nor can it reasonably be expected, that those, who make no scruple of debauching the persons for whom they pretend affection, will feel any remorse at deserting them with cruelty and disdain, at exposing them to shame and contempt, or at leaving them to all the horrors of penury or prostitution. Let no one ever expect better treatment from those, who are capable of attempting to seduce them.—But whatever anguish and distress may result from injuries received, nothing will eventually harm us except our own iniquity: and it is better to suffer the greatest wrong, than to commit the least sin, though apparently with impunity and without rebuke.—It is every one's duty to comfort those who are in distress: and generally it is most advisable for injured persons to be quiet, and leave their cause with God.—When less atrocious crimes escape punishment from man, more and greater will be committed: and the magistrate's indignant anger against heinous offences should stimulate him to enforce the laws without respect of persons: but all others must learn to bear every injury without seeking to revenge themselves; and if mild expostulations and prayers will not prevail, they must quietly leave the event to God.—Hatred and revenge, however, possess the hearts of ungodly men: and some are so artful and malicious, that they defer their vengeance, and cover it with the appearance of affection, till they have an opportunity of executing it with more determined malignity.—Often have festive interviews, and seasons of sensual indulgence, been the chosen scenes for assassinations and massacres; and men have been sent into the eternal world from the midst of riot and excess! Such is human nature, left to itself, armed with power, and emboldened by prosperity: what need then have we to pray for converting grace, and to be satisfied, in our inferior stations!—No crime is so great or evident, that men in general will not be found daring enough to commit, in order to please their superiors: but alas! their command will not bear out the guilty at the day of judgment, for violating the law of God!—Evil tidings are generally enhanced: yet the imaginary calamity proves a real affliction for the time, and may serve the purpose of an humiliating chastisement.—Children are always uncertain comforts: but indulged children will surely prove trials to pious parents, whose foolish fondness induces them to neglect their duty to God: yet parental affection can scarcely be extinguished by any degree of misconduct. But the case of parents is very deplorable, when the children copy their conduct in the crimes which they perpetrate; and when it is nevertheless their duty to punish them with great severity for those very imitations! Let this be a warning to us, to watch and pray against temptation, lest by the misconduct of one unguarded hour, we should occasion such fatal consequences to our offspring, and such misery to ourselves throughout our future lives. And let us not covet that worldly wisdom, which, with all its boasted sagacity, cannot prevent the destruction of those who are counselled by it: but let us seek that heavenly wisdom, which safely leads the possessor through all the dangerous paths of this life, to the perfect felicity of the eternal world.

NOTES.

CHAP. XIV. V. 1—3. Joab perceived that David greatly desired to recal Absalom; but did not know how to do it, without disgracing his character and government: he therefore framed a plausible story, and employed an ingenious woman, in the character of a disconsolate widow, to relate it to him. He doubtless intended to obtain a concession from David, that in some possible cases the punishment of a murderer might be dispensed with; and then to apply it to the case of Absalom. Thus he hoped to ingratiate himself with both parties, with the king, and the next heir to the crown; as Absalom would be now considered. Doubtless he would also be glad to increase the number of precedents for the impunity of murderers, as he lay under the guilt of that crime himself.

V. 6, 7. (Notes, 13:22—29. Gen. 4:8.) This feigned case was widely different from that which it was intended to represent. It was indeed stated that one brother had been slain by the other, and that the survivor, "the only son of his mother who was a widow," was exposed to the sentence of the law; but David had many other sons; and the death of Absalom would not have "quenched his coal that was left," or de 10 And the king said, Whosoever saith ought unto thee, bring him to me, and he shall not touch thee any more.

11 Then said she, I pray thee, [p] let the king remember the LORD thy God, that * thou wouldest not suffer [q] the revengers of blood to destroy any more, lest they destroy my son. And he said, [r] As the LORD liveth, there shall [s] not one hair of thy son fall to the earth.

prived him of the comfort of children to succeed him in his inheritance. Absalom had not slain Amnon in sudden anger and hasty striving, when they were alone; but in deliberate malice and revenge, in the presence of his brethren. There was no malicious prosecution carrying on against Absalom by those who coveted his inheritance: but the law of God demanded his death, as a satisfaction to justice, and for a salutary example to all others. Had the case been drawn more similar, it would have betrayed the design, and defeated Joab's purpose: and the state of David's heart rendered it unnecessary to be very exact: for he wanted, not a good reason, but a plausible excuse for following his inclinations, as Joab well knew.

V. 8—11. It would not have answered the intent of the woman, or of Joab her prompter, had David merely engaged to examine into the case: a present absolute decision in favor of the supposed criminal was the object. The woman therefore having excited David's compassion, urged her plea with great earnestness; and assured him that she was so satisfied of the goodness of the cause, that she was willing all the guilt, if there were any, should rest on her and her father's house, and not upon David or his kingdom. Thus she engaged for what was out of her power; (Note, 1 Sam. 28:9,10.) for the neglect of punishing murder would, notwithstanding, bring guilt upon both king and people. (Note, Num. 35:31—34.) She, however, requested him to "remember the LORD his God:" that is, to give her the security of an oath, that he would spare and protect her son; and he was prevailed upon to grant her unreasonable demand. In this, David acted more according to his feelings than his judgment, and was very precipitate. If the party concerned in the supposed case did not deserve to die, the city of refuge would have afforded him a safe retreat, and a fair trial: (Note, Josh. 20:2—6.) and if he merited death, David had no right to dispense with the divine law by protecting him; and moreover he had examined no other witness, than one interested party!

V. 13—17. The woman, having thus far carried her point, proceeded, gradually and ambiguously, to apply David's concession to the case of Absalom; and her speech was most artfully devised, so that she might retract, or be more explicit, according as he took it. She intimated that the king's severity to his son was injurious to the people of God; and that he was wanting in his duty to the kingdom, in delaying to recal him: as if Absalom had been so excellent a young man, that all the hopes of Israel centered in him! She represented his flight to Geshur as a banishment, which had already been too severe a punishment of his offence. She pleaded the certainty of death, and the impossibility of recalling the dead to life again; by which she would either insinuate that Amnon would have died in some other way, if Absalom had not slain him; or that the punishment of Absalom would not bring him to life again; or that, as David himself must at length die, it was proper that Absalom should be recalled to succeed him But whatever she meant, it was nothing to the purpose: for God hath commanded the death of the murderer, which exceedingly tends to the preservation of the life of man, though it can

19 And the king said, Is not the hand [i] of Joab with thee in all this? And the woman answered and said, [k] As thy soul liveth, my lord the king, none can [l] turn to the right hand or to the left from ought that my lord the king hath spoken: for thy servant Joab, he bade me, and [m] he put all these words in the mouth of thine handmaid:

21 ¶ And the king said unto Joab, Behold now, [q] I have done this thing: go therefore, bring the young man Absalom again.

22 And Joab fell to the ground on his face, and bowed himself, and * thanked the king: and Joab said, To-day thy servant knoweth that [r] I have found grace in thy sight, my lord, O king, in that the king hath fulfilled the request of † his servant.

23 So Joab arose and went to [s] Geshur, and brought Absalom to Jerusalem.

24 And the king said, Let him turn to his own house, and [t] let him not see my face. So Absalom returned to his own house, and saw not the king's face.

25 ‡ But in all Israel there was none to be so much praised as Absalom for his beauty: [u] from the sole of his foot even to the crown of his head, there was no blemish in him.

26 And [x] when he polled his head, (for it was at every year's end that he polled it: because the hair was heavy on him, therefore he polled it;) he weighed the hair of his head, at [y] two hundred shekels after the king's weight.

27 And unto Absalom there were [z] born three sons, and one daughter, whose name was [a] Tamar: she was a woman of a fair countenance.

not raise the dead; and if such an argument were of any force, no malefactor must be put to death! 'When we have a mind to a thing, all 'reasons seem strong to persuade us to it.' Bp. Patrick.—She also pleaded the mercy of God, in sparing, and re-admitting sinful men into his presence and favor, though justly banished from it; in which she seems to have referred to the return of the manslayer to his inheritance, at the death of the high priest.—The marginal reading, (14) "because God hath not taken away his life, he hath also, &c." appears to be the proper translation; and it is intimated, that as God had spared Absalom, David ought to pardon him.—But God pardons none who are impenitent; nor any, to the dishonor of his law and justice, or to the encouragement of crimes, and the injury of others. Perhaps she meant to hint, that the people expressed their dissatisfaction with Absalom's banishment so openly, that they made her afraid of an insurrection: but she purposely so confounded the feigned cause of her son, with the real cause of Absalom, that part of her address is obscure. While however, she ventured to censure David for not gratifying himself; she took care repeatedly to give him flattering commendations for his wisdom and goodness, which in such a cause abundantly compensated for the ambiguity of her discourse, and the weakness of her arguments: (Notes, Prov. 26:28. 29:5.) and to do her justice, her ingenuity in pleading so bad a cause was admirable. 'We love those that admire 'us.'

V. 18—20. (Notes, 3:26—39. 11:14—17.) Even when David perceived, and the woman had acknowledged, the drift of her discourse; she seems to have aimed to keep up the idea, that the case stated was real, though she had turned the discourse to Absalom; and that she could not hope the king would spare her son, if he would not recal his own.—Her flattery in the conclusion was very great; even though she meant only the land of Israel, and not the whole earth: but in fact, David was not at this time giving much proof of his wisdom, as the event shewed!

V. 21, 22. David was willing to suppose that his oath, to spare the woman's son, obliged him to recal Absalom, who was the person really intended; though he could not but perceive the insufficiency of her arguments, and the disparity of the cases. As a favor therefore he gave Joab permission to fetch home Absalom; and Joab appeared as thankful to the king for allotting him this service, as if the most expensive kindness had been done him. There was much of the courtier in this; but it was far distant from godly sincerity!—If however Joab thought, that this conduct of David as a pledge of reconciliation, or act of indemnity, secured him, as a murderer, from punishment, he was deceived: for he was at length put to death for his crimes, and that by David's counsel. (Notes, 1 Kings 2:5,6,28—34.)

V. 24. David probably meant to quiet his own conscience, and to silence the censures of others, or to shew his abhorrence of murder, by laying Absalom under some tokens of disgrace, and by denying himself the pleasure of seeing him. This might also be intended to humble Absalom: but it entirely failed of producing that effect.

V. 25—27. Absalom was not praised for wi-

B. C. 1025. 28 ¶ So Absalom dwelt two full years in Jerusalem, and saw not the king's face.

29 Therefore Absalom sent for Joab, to have sent him to the king; [b] but he would not come to him: and when he sent again the second time, he would not come.

30 Therefore he said unto his servants, See, Joab's field is near *mine, and he hath barley there; [c] go and set it on fire. [d] And Absalom's servants set the field on fire.

31 Then Joab arose, and came to Absalom unto his house, and said unto him, Wherefore have thy servants set my field on fire?

32 And Absalom answered Joab, Behold, I sent unto thee, saying, Come hither, that I may send thee to the king, to say, Wherefore am I come from Geshur? [e] it had been good for me to have been there still: now therefore let me see the king's face; and [f] if there be any iniquity in me, let him kill me.

33 So Joab came to the king, and told him: and when he had called for Absalom, he came to the king, and bowed himself on his face to the ground before the king: and the king [g] kissed Absalom.

dom, justice, or piety; but merely for his beauty, and effeminacy; for such doubtless was his attention to his hair: and yet he was the admiration and favorite of Israel! (Marg. Ref.—Notes, 15:1—6. 1 Kings 1:5,6.) 'It is not cer-'tain that he cut his hair once a year: for the 'words in the Hebrew are, "from the end of 'days to days," ... at stated times, ... when it grew 'too heavy.' Bp. Patrick.—As 200 shekels, according to the usual meaning of the word, was no less than eight pounds four ounces Troy weight; it has been thought, that the shekel of half an ounce is not meant, but a much less weight; or that the decorations used about his hair were included. Absalom's atrocious guilt however was forgotten, and his accomplishments universally celebrated; which increased his arrogance, and ended in his ruin.—His sons died before him. (18:18.)

V. 28, 29. Perhaps Absalom was not only forbidden to visit his father; but was confined to his own house and its environs, and not allowed to go abroad. (Note, 1 Kings 2:36—46.) Thus he would be greatly embarrassed in his ambitious projects: and this might be one reason of his impatient desire of being reconciled to David, and enjoying his full liberty; and also of being freed from the disgrace of his present situation, which would hinder many from attaching themselves to him. He seems, however, to have been secretly active in forming a party, even at this time: and either he had not favored Joab for his former services, according to his expectations; or Absalom's popularity and ambition made that sagacious politician regard him as a dangerous person, with whom he did not wish to form any further connexions; so that he declined coming to him.

V. 30—33. Absalom's injurious and hectoring treatment of so considerable a person as Joab; and his arrogant message to David, almost vindicating his conduct and demanding justice; plainly shewed his character and intentions, and his confidence in the favor of the people, and the ill-judged lenity of his father. This aggravated David's sin and folly in receiving him into full favor, in the manner he did; and which would give him access, without restraint, to all those, who before were reserved, or afraid of shewing their attachment to him.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—20.

It behoves princes and magistrates to be accessible, and to protect the destitute and oppressed: yet the most amiable dispositions must be regulated by discretion; or they will lead us to improper concessions.—While the urgent wants of the poor are unheeded by most men; the secret wishes of those, who possess authority and affluence, are discovered and anticipated by crafty courtiers and dependents, who seek their own interest by forwarding their indulgence: so that conscientious self-denial in such a situation is doubly difficult and doubly needful.—If scruples and fears deter great men from complying with their inclinations; some feigned precedent, some plausible arguments, or some partial illustration, will be devised and speciously suggested, to remove the hindrance. In such a case, the discerning favorite, or candidate for royal favor, will personally, or by some well chosen instrument, venture to find fault with his prince or his patron; and to represent to him, that the safety of the state, or some other important interest, demands those measures which he scruples to adopt: and by such addresses to the passions as are suited to his character and disposition, mixed with flattering commendations and expostulations, he will cover the fallacy of his reasonings, and the unlawfulness and impolicy of that conduct which he recommends. Thus many a one has been led to impose on his own judgment and conscience, and conclude that he could not resist such urgent importunities, and such cogent arguments; that his consent was almost extorted; and that to oblige such kind friends he had passed his word, and could not in honor retract it: while in reality he was overcome by his own inclinations, and only wanted a specious excuse for indulging them. If the required concessions are evidently contrary to the duty of a man's station, and the interests of society; it will plausibly be argued, that some exceptions must be admitted; that this was a singular case; and that here exactness would be harsh, injurious, and of bad consequence: by sophistry, so manifest and slight, many even wise and good men deceive themselves, where their affections are previously engaged.—Let us hence learn, what need we have to adhere closely to our rule of duty; to pray earnestly for the teaching of the Holy Spirit; and to watch against the deceitfulness of our own hearts, the bribery of our passions, and the agreeable poison of adulation.—Sin has so filled the world with misery, that real cases of distress may be found, more pitiable than any which the imagination can feign; and we should readily endeavor to re-

CHAP. XV.

Absalom, by fair speeches and affected courtesy, steals the hearts of the people, 1—6. Under pretence of a vow, he obtains leave to go to Hebron, where he raises rebellion, 7—12. David hearing it retires from Jerusalem, 13—18. Ittai the Gittite faithfully adheres to him, and the people weep over him, 19—23. Zadok and Abiathar are sent back with the ark, 24—29. David and his company ascend mount Olivet weeping, 30. Hearing that Ahithophel had joined Absalom, he prays that his counsel may be turned into foolishness, 31. Hushai is sent back with instructions, 32—37.

lieve those, who are in trouble: but even compassion, amiable as it is, will not justify our violations of the divine law, or neglect of the important duties of our station. (Note, Ex. 23:1—3.) With this single exception, alleviating misery is the noblest privilege and employment of the great; who should in this especially "remember the LORD their God:" not only his authority and their accountableness to him; but his compassion and mercy to others and to themselves; and his justice and holiness, who in his love to sinners manifests most conspicuously his abhorrence of their crimes.—As all must die, and there is no recal from the tomb by human power, we should not spend our time in immoderate, unavailing lamentations for the dead; but should be employed in preparing for our own dissolution, and in seizing the fleeting opportunity of "serving our generation."—When we are most commended for our discernment, we generally act the most foolishly; for those very praises cloud the understanding and pervert the judgment. We deem it unnecessary for persons, of such acknowledged wisdom as we are, to waste time in nice distinctions; we can scarcely refuse to speak comfortably to them, who speak so agreeably to us: and hence extravagant commendations lead to self-deception, and entangle all parties in the net of the great deceiver of our fallen race.

V. 21—33.

In our treatment of children or others who have greatly offended, every method should be used, which has a tendency to mortify pride, and to bring them to repentance; and in aiming at this important object, the feelings of our hearts must be repressed. But when high rank, early indulgence, impunity in crimes, flattering commendations, personal accomplishments, and popular favor, concur to increase the natural haughtiness of the human heart; and when the Lord leaves a man to himself, it is inconceivable to what a pitch of arrogance and insolence he will arrive. A person of this description will vindicate the basest villanies, treat all superiors with contempt, and all benefactors with ingratitude; and overbear and terrify all around him into compliance with his unreasonable demands.—But all this is the forerunner of destruction: and when parents or rulers countenance such imperious characters, they will soon experience the most fatal effects.—The Lord grant unto us the inward beauty of holiness, and the adorning of a meek and quiet spirit: for "favor is deceitful, and beauty is vain:" and those only, who fear the Lord, are truly excellent and happy.

NOTES.

CHAP. XV. V. 1—6. The last clause in these verses aptly marks the way, in which Absalom ingratiated himself with the people. He "stole the hearts of the men of Israel." (Note, Rom. 16:17—20.) He did not gain their hearts by eminent services, or by a wise and virtuous conduct. But he affected to look great, as heir to the crown; and yet to be very condescending, and affable to his inferiors: he pretended a great regard to their interests, and threw out artful insinuations against David's administration: he flattered every one who had a cause to be tried, with the assurance that he had right on his side; that, if it went against him, he might be led to accuse David and the magistrates of injustice. Though Absalom knew not how to obey, and deserved to die for his atrocious crime; yet he expressed a vehement desire to be judge over all the land; and suggested, that suits should not then be so tedious, expensive, and partially decided as they were. This he confirmed by rising early and by apparent application; though it was to other people's business, and not to his own duty: and by such sinister arts, united with his personal attractions, magnificence, and address, he imposed upon multitudes all over the land, to prefer so worthless a character to the wise, righteous, and pious David!—Others of the king's sons were employed in public business, but Absalom seems not to have had any place. (Note, 8:15—18.) This might offend him; and his artifices tended to alienate the people from his brethren, as well as from his father.—The chariots and horsemen of Absalom, being a devia-

V. 7—9. The era, from which the "forty years" here mentioned should be computed, cannot easily be assigned; nor are any of the conjectures of learned men on the subject fully satisfactory. The most approved seems to be, that they must be reckoned from the time of David's anointing by Samuel to the kingdom: yet that, being a private transaction, would scarcely have been referred to in a public computation; no other events are dated from that era; the subsequent history has no apparent connexion with it; and indeed it would fix Absalom's rebellion more early in David's reign, than it seems to have occurred.—It is evident that Josephus read four years, which he dates from Absalom's reconciliation; (a very proper time for his artful schemes to produce their effects;) and this seems to be the true reading; from which a trivial error easily made, was fallen into by some very ancient transcriber.—Absalom was born at Hebron; (3:2,3.) and that gave him the pretext for asking to go thither to pay the vow, which he feigned to have made at Geshur: yet as David was made king at Hebron, (Notes, 5:1—5.) it was obvious to conclude from Absalom's whole character, that he was influenced by ambition rather than devotion. But he knew his father would be pleased to suppose that he paid any regard to religion; and therefore he cloked his intended treason and parricide, with hypocrisy. (Note, Gen. 27: 21—23.)

V. 10. Spies having been previously sent into all parts of the land, to sound the inclinations of the people, and to prepare the way; when the design was ripe for execution, trumpeters were sent after them: that, when the signal was given, the spies might, through all the tribes of Israel, proclaim Absalom king, without expressly avowing the treason, or saying whether David was dead, or had resigned, or had admitted Absalom to share the authority. Thus while David's loyal subjects would hesitate in uncertainty, Absalom's party became formidable.

V. 11. Absalom went to Hebron with David's approbation, and under the pretence of religion; and these persons, (who doubtless were of chief rank at Jerusalem,) being invited to a sacred feast, accompanied him, and thus undesignedly countenanced his rebellion. By involving them in the suspicion of treason, he doubtless intended either to fix them in his interests, or to prevent David from placing confidence in them.

V. 12. (Marg. Ref.) Ahithophel possessed great abilities; and he had professed much religion, and been David's counsellor and bosom friend: but he was now retired from court, perhaps in some disgust. Bath-sheba was daughter to Eliam, and Eliam was son to Ahithophel; (11: 3. 23:34.) it has therefore been thought that he was her grandfather, and resented the dishonor done to his family. He, however, readily joined Absalom's conspiracy, and would have been the chief stay of it, had not God "turned his counsel into foolishness." (Note, 31.) In many things he resembled Judas the traitor, and may even be said to have typified him. (Notes, Ps. 41:9. 55: 12—15,20,21. 109:2—20. John 13:18—30. Acts 1:16—18.)

The people increased, &c.] Various motives would induce numbers to assemble; and many of them might have no previous purpose of joining in a conspiracy against David: but the feasting, the conversation, the exultations, and menaces of the leading conspirators; with the promises, and fascinating objects held forth to their vain but sanguine hopes; drew them in to commit themselves, beyond their first intention, as it is usual on such occasions.—They heedlessly approached the vortex, and were irrecoverably drawn into it.

V. 13—15. It is most probable, that some of 17 And the king [g] went forth, and all the people after him, and tarried in a place that was far off.

18 And all his servants passed on beside him; and all the [h] Cherethites, and all the Pelethites, and all the [i] Gittites, six hundred men, which came after him from Gath, passed on before the king.

19 Then said the king to [j] Ittai, the Gittite, Wherefore goest thou also with us? return to thy place, and abide with the king: for thou art a stranger, and also an exile.

20 Whereas thou camest but yesterday, should I this day make thee † go up and down with us? [k] seeing I go whither I may, return thou, and take back thy brethren: [l] mercy and truth be with thee.

21 And Ittai answered the king, and said, [m] As the LORD liveth, and as my lord the king liveth, [n] surely in what place my lord the king shall be, whether in death or life, even there also will thy servant be.

22 And David said to Ittai, Go, and pass over. And Ittai the Gittite passed over, and all his men, and all the little ones that were with him.

23 And all the country wept with a loud voice, and all the people passed over: the king also himself passed over the brook [o] Kidron, and all the people passed over toward the way of the [p] wilderness.

24 ¶ And lo, [q] Zadok also, and all the Levites were with him, [r] bearing the ark of the covenant of God: and they set down the ark of God; and Abiathar went up until all the people had done passing out of the city.

25 And the king said unto Zadok, [s] Carry back the ark of God into the city: if I shall find favor in the eyes of the two hundred men, who "went in their simplicity," sent David word concerning the conspiracy; and also represented it as extremely formidable. It must indeed have been expected, that the conspirators would act in the most decided manner: and though Jerusalem was a well fortified city, yet it might not be stored with a garrison or provisions for a siege. The small force, which David had with him, might be insufficient to defend it against Absalom; and perhaps he had no confidence in the inhabitants, or he was unwilling to expose that populous and sacred city to the effects of a siege. He might also deem it prudent to give the furious blaze of popular frenzy time to spend itself, hoping that numbers would soon be sensible of their folly and ingratitude.—It is probable, however, that conscious guilt; the hand of God evidently lifted up against him as it had been predicted; the treason of his much beloved Absalom; and the fickleness of the people after all his past services, and successes for their benefit; damped his wonted courage, and rendered him less prompt for battle, especially in so horrid and unnatural a war. It does not however appear that his measures were impolitic, or that his friends thought them so.

V. 16. David, it is probable, took his wives and children with him: but supposing that these concubines would be an additional encumbrance, and not apprehending that Absalom would injure them, he left them to take care of his house; by which inadvertency the Lord fulfilled his denunciation. (Notes, 12:11,12. 16: 20—23.)

V. 17. It is highly probable, from the original, that both David and all his company went on foot, upon this distressing occasion.—After him.] ברגליו . At his feet. 16. marg.

V. 18—22. The six hundred Gittites seem to have been a distinct body from the Cherethites and Pelethites: they had accompanied, or followed, David from Gath, and probably were proselyted Philistines, commanded by Ittai of the same nation. The Cherethites and Pelethites seem likewise to have been collected from among the several districts of the Philistines, or adjacent and allied tribes. (Marg. Ref. h. Note, 8:15—18.) They were, however, numbered among David's most faithful attendants, being attached to him by esteem for his character, and love to his religion; and we may infer, that his sojourning in the land of the Philistines was over-ruled for very important good to numbers of that nation.—David was unwilling to expose Ittai and his men, who were strangers and exiles in Israel,(having been driven with their families from Gath, for their affection to David, and to his religion and people,) to so much hardship and peril, as were now before him; and he would have dismissed them with thanks and prayers for them: but their attachment to his person and cause was more strong, than that of most of the native Israelites; and they were determined to cleave to him, and serve him at all events. (Note, 1 Chr. 12:16—18.)—David called Absalom king, (19) as he had usurped the throne, and was at present in possession of regal authority.

V. 23. Though the multitude favored Absalom, yet many sympathized with David.—Thu while the general cry against Jesus was, "Cru cify him, crucify him;" there were those who wept, and bewailed him. (Note, Luke 23:26—31.)

All the country wept, &c.] All the land (הארץ) wept; that is, the weeping was general among the inhabitants; the adherents to Absalom being at a distance.—Kidron.] Our blessed Savior passed this same brook, in his way to the garden, at or near to the mount of Olives, in the eventhe LORD, [t] he will bring me again, and shew me both it and his [u] habitation.

26 But if he thus say, I [v] have no delight in thee; behold here am I, [x] let him do to me as seemeth good unto him.

27 The king said also unto Zadok the priest, Art not thou [y] a seer? [z] return into the city in peace, and your two sons with you, Ahimaaz thy son, and Jonathan the son of Abiathar.

28 See, [a] I will tarry in the plain of the wilderness, until there come word from you to certify me.

29 Zadok therefore and Abiathar carried the ark of God again to Jerusalem: and they tarried there.

30 And David went up by [b] the ascent of mount Olivet, * and wept as he went up, and had [c] his head covered; and he went [d] barefoot: and all the people that was with him covered every man his head, and they went up, [e] weeping as they went up.

31 ¶ And one told David, saying, [f] Ahithophel is among the conspirators with Absalom. And David said, [g] O LORD, I pray thee, [h] turn the counsel of Ahithophel into foolishness.

32 And it came to pass, that when David was come to [i] the top of the mount, where [j] he worshipped God, behold, [k] Hushai the [l] Archite came to meet him with his [m] coat rent, and earth upon his head:

33 Unto whom David said, If thou passest on with me, [n] then thou shalt be a burden unto me:

34 But if thou [o] return to the city, and say unto Absalom, I will be thy servant, O king; [p] as I have been thy father's servant hitherto, so will I now also be thy servant; [q] then mayest thou for me defeat the counsel of Ahithophel.

35 And hast thou not there with thee Zadok and Abiathar the priests? therefore it shall be, that what thing soever thou shalt hear out of the king's house, [r] thou shalt tell it to Zadok and Abiathar the priests.

36 Behold they have there with them [s] their two sons, Ahimaaz Zadok's son, and Jonathan Abiathar's son; and by them ye shall send unto me every thing that ye can hear.

37 So Hushai David's [t] friend came into the city, and [u] Absalom came into Jerusalem.

ing before his crucifixion. (Note, John 18:1—3, v. 1.)

V. 24—29. Abiathar was the high priest: yet Zadok, of the family of Eleazar, was more noticed than he, as more favored by David; for Eli's family was gradually declining. (Notes, 1 Sam. 2:30,35,36. 1 Kings 2:26,27,35.)—The priests and Levites were generally attached to David, which was honorable to them, and shewed that religion was upon the whole in a flourishing state. The presence of the ark and the high priest would have been a comfort, and an apparent advantage to David: but the ark had been placed, and the ordinances of God established, in Zion. David was under the divine rebuke, and would express his humiliation and submission to it; and not assume, by the presence of the ark, that God was on his side, while he was suffering for his sins: (Notes, 1 Sam. 4:3—11.) but he would refer his cause to the Lord, either to bring him back to Zion in peace, or to let his unnatural and ungrateful foes prevail against him; being conscious that he deserved the worst at the hands of God, though not from them. (Marg. Ref. s—v.)—David's frame of spirit was excellent on this trying occasion: and his language beautifully humble, resigned, and pious.—It is not certain whether Zadok was endued with the Spirit of prophecy, or whether he sometimes inquired of the Lord in the place of the high priest; or whether David only meant to say, that he was a person of remarkable discernment and penetration, who could furnish him with important and authentic information by his observance of Absalom's conduct; and one in whose faithfulness he could entirely depend. He would not therefore go to any great distance, till he heard from Zadok.

V. 30. These were expressions of David's self-abasement, and sorrow for his sins, and for the miseries which he had brought on himself, on his family, and people. He thus "humbled himself under the mighty hand of God," which he saw lifted up against him: and the people joined him with the same tokens of godly sorrow and repentance. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 31. David apprehended more danger from Ahithophel's superior talents, and decisive energy of mind, than from all the courage and numbers of Absalom's followers: immediately therefore, upon hearing that he had joined the conspirators, he addressed the Lord in one short ejaculation; and it proved effectual. He did not pray against Ahithophel himself; but, "that his counsel might be turned into foolishness," either that he might be left to give foolish counsel, or that his prudent advice might be despised and neglected as folly: and all, who heard this petition, could not but be much impressed with the answer which it shortly received. (Notes, 17:1—14,23.)—He afterwards worshipped God in a more solemn manner with his whole company. (32)

32—37. It seems, that David entirely confided in the fidelity and prudence of Hushai, and that his reputation as a wise counsellor was great: but either he was not able to endure the fatigues of war, or he was no soldier. David therefore stated, that in his present destitute condition, Hushai would only burden him and his friends, by attending him; and he pointed out how he might better serve his cause by remaining in Jerusalem.—Stratagems of war are lawful; for an enemy may as well be out-witted as over-powered: but the instructions given to Hushai imply a falsehood, which cannot be wholly vindicated. (Note, Josh. 8:1,2.)—The conduct of Ahithophel, in joining Absalom, would render Hushai's less suspected by the conspirators.—Ahimaaz &c. (36) Notes, 17:15—21.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—12.

The ostentation of emulating or exceeding superiors in external pomp, is an evidence of a narrow mind, a weak judgment, and a depraved heart. It is, however, the common folly and ruin of indulged children, and frequently prepares the way for the most atrocious crimes. The very first appearance, therefore, of this affectation should be repressed by parents, with decision, and even with severity, if they would prevent the ruin of their families.—Those who least understand the duties, and could least endure the burdens of authority, are commonly most desirous of it. But when ambition prompts, the most self-indulgent assume the appearance of diligence; and the most haughty, that of affability and condescension: and while men aspire to the pinnacle of earthly grandeur, they, for the time, pay the most abject court to the meanest of the mob! Such fawning sons of ambition are peculiar to no age or nation: but let every wise and honest man shun them as a pestilence. They make their way by openly or obliquely traducing the characters, or censuring the measures, of their rulers; and the wisdom and perfection of an angel would be no security against their malignant insinuations. As self-love cannot but murmur at impartiality, and men are generally discontented and desirous of change, these demagogues always have proper persons on whom to practise. By joining in the groundless complaints of the disaffected, they feed their discontent; by flattering their persons and approving their cause, they humor their pride; by lavish promises (which cost and mean nothing,) of what they would do if they were in power, they excite their sanguine hopes of greater felicity; and by a voluble tongue, an insinuating address, personal accomplishments, and consummate impudence, they steal the hearts of the people, and prepare the way for popular tumults, insurrections, and rebellion. For such is human nature, that these arts and attainments go much further in gaining the favor of the multitude, than wisdom and justice, truth and piety, or the most important and long continued services! This is the old hackneyed way for men, destitute of conscience or honor, to wind themselves into important stations; and yet it is as much practised, and as little suspected, as if it were quite a new discovery!—No wise and good man, therefore, should on any account promise himself the continuance of popular favor, or be cast down if he meet with treachery and ingratitude: yet, in general, we may perceive the righteousness of God, in the basest treatment which we can receive from man; and may thence be reminded to humble ourselves before him, and to expect all our happiness from him alone.—No villany can be termed complete, which is not disguised under the mask of religion; especially at those times, when the profession of godliness is treated with general respect. Pious persons are glad to see others, and particularly those whom they most love, appear to be religious, and are not apt to suspect them of hypocrisy: and this gives occasion to the most scandalous and pernicious deceptions.—The policy of wicked men and the subtlety of Satan are exerted to the utmost, in drawing in respectable persons to give an unintended and unsuspected countenance to the basest designs; by which, opinions, principles, and practices acquire a degree of regard, to which they are not at all entitled, and which they would not otherwise have obtained: but none so much strengthen the hands of profligates or infidels, as apostates from a religious profession.

V. 13—37.

Little dependence can be placed on earthly prosperity; and as little can be judged of causes or characters by success, until the final event of things shall arrive.—Our severest trials often come from those, in whom we most confided; and our firmest friends are sometimes raised up among persons, from whom we had the least expectations. But a truly pious man will never be entirely excluded from usefulness· some individuals, wherever he abides, will have to bless God for his example, converse, and prayers.—In our most critical and important concerns, we ought not to require any thing unreasonable from our friends; or "bind heavy burdens" on new converts, lest they should be discouraged: we should be thankful for fidelity and kindness from those, who are not likely to be further serviceable to us, and recompense them with our earnest prayers: and if the mercy and truth of God be with them, and with us and ours, we shall be safe and eventually happy, however at present afflicted or separated. But that love of the brethren, which is the fruit of the Spirit of Christ, when it is vigorous, will not be restrained by the fear of hardship, danger, or even death, from rendering assistance to those in affliction.—We often in despondency think our enemies to be more numerous, and our friends fewer, than they are found upon trial: for our severest crosses are mingled with comforts, which afford us causes for thankfulness.—The ministers of God should always set an example of submission to "the powers that be," in all things lawful; and of cordial attachment and faithful adherence to those rulers, who protect and countenance them in their pious labors; and especially in those seasons, when others oppose and revile them.—It behoves us to humble ourselves before God under the tokens of his displeasure; and godly sorrow, confession of sin, repentance, self-denial, and self-abasement are the proper methods of seeking deliverance out of those troubles, which are evidently chastisements for sins. (Note, Is. 22:8—14.) At such a time, therefore, it is improper to buoy up our confidence by the externals of religion, which do not always imply the gracious presence of the Lord. If he pardon our sins, and then again employ us, his house and ordinances will be our comfort: and he will do us no wrong, though he lay us aside, or cut us off by death, as though he had "no delight in us." Nothing, however, must prevent our worshipping the Lord, though we have not access to his more solemn ordinances: and as afflictions abound; the fervency of our prayers should also increase.—Vain is all worldly wisdom and power against "the effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man;" as in answer to a single emphatical ejaculation, "the counsel of the prudent is carried headlong," and the force of the potent is turned into perfect weakness.—Some are useful in one way, and some in another, to one com

10 And the king said, [y] What have I to do with you, ye sons of Zeruiah? so let him curse, because [z] the LORD hath said unto him, Curse David. [a] Who shall then say, Wherefore hast thou done so?

11 And David said to Abishai, and to all his servants, [b] Behold, my son, which [c] came forth of my bowels, [d] seeketh my life: how much more now may this Benjamite do it? Let him alone, and let him curse; [e] for the LORD hath bidden him.

mon cause, when they are cordially united: yet alas! where shall we find wisdom and simplicity so united in any mere man, that we can perceive nothing which merits censure, and needs forgiveness? But when the Son of David was treated with all possible treachery, indignity, cruelty, and ingratitude; his wisdom, meekness, candor, and patience were unalloyed perfection. His inexpressible sufferings are now over: his humiliation is exchanged for the throne of glory, where unseen, except by realizing faith, he serves our cause in the world above. Let us follow, and serve, and cleave to him, in tribulation, life, and death. And let us not forget, that we are left behind among his enemies, to promote his cause; and his instruction is, that we be "wise as serpents, and harmless as doves." (Note, Matt. 10:16—18.)

NOTES.

CHAP. XVI. V. 1—4. (Notes, 9:) Ziba took advantage of existing circumstances, to form an artful plan for obtaining a grant from David of Mephibosheth's estate. By his seasonable, and apparently generous present and his insinuating behavior, he prepossessed David's mind in his favor: (Notes, Prov. 17:8. 18:16.) and then by false accusation he prejudiced him against Mephibosheth. It was indeed improbable, that Mephibosheth should prove so ungrateful, or form expectations of obtaining the kingdom: but what villany could excite wonder, when Absalom was in arms against his own too indulgent father? And Ziba might hope that some event would secure him from detection, or that David would be ashamed to retract his grant, when he had once made it. (Note, 19:24—30.)—It is evident, however, that David acted very precipitately, did great injustice to Mephibosheth, and even forgot his covenant with Jonathan, in passing sentence without hearing Mephibosheth's defence. (Note, 1 Sam. 20:14—17.)

15 ¶ And [j] Absalom, and all the people the men of Israel, came to Jerusalem, and Ahithophel with him.

16 And it came to pass, when Hushai the Archite, David's friend, was come unto Absalom, that Hushai said unto Absalom, † God save the king, God save the king.

17 And Absalom said to Hushai, [k] Is this thy kindness to thy friend? [l] why wentest thou not with thy friend?

V. 5—14. Bahurim was a city of Benjamin; and Shimei was a relation of Saul: so that the translation of the kingdom to David marred all his prospects of preferment. He disregarded the express appointment of God, and his heart was full of implacable enmity to David, as a usurper of the throne. Contrary to the fullest evidence, he accused him of murdering Saul's family, and interpreted his affliction into a proof of his guilt; and he took this opportunity to pour out all kinds of imprecations and reproaches, and to express all the rage of impotent contempt and malice. But if David had been a bloody man, and disposed to slay the family of Saul, Shimei would soon have suffered the just punishment of his audacity; for David was so well guarded that Shimei could only shew his malice at a distance: and David's prohibition alone prevented his nephew Abishai from putting him to death. This Shimei merited: but David was now under the divine rebuke for his sins. Though free from the guilt charged upon him, he was consciously guilty of having murdered Uriah: he therefore submitted to the justice of God, in this injurious treatment from Shimei; and he could not wonder that his enemies were stirred up against him, when his own son sought his life. The sin both of Shimei and of Absalom was from themselves and Satan: but David's affliction was from the Lord; and they were merely instruments, which he employed, without their intention, of correcting David for good. (Notes, Gen. 50:20. Is. 10:7,15. Ez. 14:9—11. Acts 2:22—24.) The curse causeless could only injure him who used it: and David hoped that his humble submission to such base usage from man, would prepare the way for the return of peace and comfort from a merciful God; and therefore he would not permit Shimei to be molested. (Marg. Ref.—Notes, 19:19—23. 1 Kings 2:8,9,36—46.)

Come out, &c. (7) Or rather, "Go out, go out." 'Get thee out of the kingdom, from whence thou 'deservest to be expelled.' Bp. Patrick.—The Lord hath bidden him. (11) 'Grotius thinks Da-'vid excuses Shimei in these words: for speaking 'concerning the respect that is to be used to 'kings, in not giving them public reproaches, he 'excepts those which are given by a prophet, who 'had a special command of God for it. Upon 'which account he saith, when David was openly 'upbraided by Shimei as a murderer, he had no 'excuse to make for him but this, that perhaps 'God had commanded him to do it.' Bp. Patrick. How could such a thought ever come into the mind of this learned and eminent man, or find a reception there? What prophet, in his most pointed reproofs, ever used such virulent and slanderous language as that of Shimei? not to speak of his casting stones and dust.

V. 15—19. Though Absalom interpreted Hushai's words as implying an express promise of fidelity, and an unreserved tender of his services, they did not necessarily imply these things. He said, "Let the king live," not Let king Absalom live. And when Absalom expressed his surprise, that he thus forsook his friend; he declared his resolution to accompany, and devote himself to him, whom the LORD and whom all Israel chose; but the event soon proved that this was not Absalom, however it appeared for a time. "He would also serve in the presence of the son, as in the presence of the father." But whom would he serve? He would serve David in Absalom's presence, as faithfully as he had hitherto done. (Note, Gen. 3:4,5.)—If Absalom had not been blinded with pride and popularity, he would have suspected such ambiguous words, when used by the known and hitherto zealous friend of his father; and not have admitted him at once among his confidential counsellors.—It is indeed very difficult to conduct stratagems without such equivocations, if not direct falsehoods: and therefore it is best to keep at a distance from them if it be possible.—When Absalom said, "Is this thy kindness to thy friend?" Hushai might have answered, 'Is this thy duty to thy father and king?'

[z] as if a man had inquired at the * oracle of God: so was [a] all the counsel of Ahithophel [b] both with David and with Absalom.

V. 20—23. (Note, 15:12.) Ahithophel's counsel was generally considered as "the oracle of God," because of his great sagacity: and at one time his professions of piety seem to have been equally depended on. He did not, however, shew his wisdom in joining himself to a party, so devoid of all principle, and headed by a rash young man of consummate villany, which foreboded nothing but ruin. But his confidence in his own wisdom made him presume that he could render Absalom successful; and his mind seems to have been much imbittered against David. His first counsel to Absalom, after his peaceable entrance into Jerusalem, was like an oracle of Satan, both for subtlety and atrocity. For his own security and that of the whole party, he intended to preclude all hope of reconciliation with David, that Absalom might determine to conquer or to perish: and he put him on an act of shameless wickedness, which indeed was well suited effectually to ensure the purpose. (Note, Gen. 49:3,4.) By Ahithophel's advice, Absalom, without expressing the least reluctance, and in defiance of the law of God, and even of common decency, in the most public manner, lay with his father's concubines; thus inflicting on him the correction that had been denounced. (Note, 12:11,12.) It may be supposed that he meant to act as king, having dethroned and succeeded David: but had he been the rightful king, it would not in the least have excused his incest.—It is surprising, that this atrocious crime did not set the people against him.—So many concubines, besides his wives, were by no means honorable to David: and probably none of them expressed a proper degree of abhorrence of so gross an enormity. (Notes, 15:16. 20:3.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—14.

Selfish men often affect to appear generous in giving away the property of others for their own advantage, and are great adepts in address and insinuation. Flatterers are generally backbiters; for it is as easy to them to forge slanders of the absent, as to pretend affection and respect for the present: and those servants, who purloin their master's substance, commonly likewise asperse their reputations.—Both adulation and calumny are injurious to a great degree, but the former is the most hurtful; for to be tempted to sin is more injurious than to be robbed of riches, or even of our characters: and smooth speeches and well-timed presents, often seduce even the wise and righteous into improper measures.—When much treachery and ingratitude have been experienced, men are apt to become too suspicious, and to listen to every plausible tale of calumny: the mind being greatly agitated, views every thing through a false medium, and we are all naturally most precipitate when least capable of judging aright: but this is especially the danger of those persons whose affections are very strong, and easily excited. But while the dissimulation of false friends occasions sin; the rage, malice, and contumely of cruel enemies call forth the exercises of the believer's graces, and often prove advantageous to him.—Wicked men judge of right

CHAP. XVII.

Hushai's counsel is preferred to the pointe, but desperately wicked counsel of Ahithophel, by the secret appointment of God, 1—14. Hushai sends intelligence to David, who hastily passes over Jordan, 15—22. Ahithophel returns home and hangs himself, 23. David comes to Mahanaim, 24. Amasa is made captain of Absalom's army, which is encamped at Gilead, 25, 26. David's friends bring him provisions, 27—29.

MOREOVER, Ahithophel said unto Absalom, Let me now choose out and wrong by self-interest; and count themselves robbed of every expected advantage which goes beside them. It gratifies malevolence to insult the afflicted, and to use imprecations and reproaches: and those, who think nothing of the authority, providence, or word of God in other respects, are often most ready to interpret the afflictions of their neighbors as divine judgments, in opposition to the clearest evidence. But it is good to see the hand of God directing, though not dictating, the injuries of men. Their calumnies may recal to memory some evil, or appearance of evil, which requires humiliation, watchfulness, and prayer: we deserve worse from the Lord than their most cruel and contemptuous treatment, and should consider it as his correction: and if we bear it humbly, patiently, and meekly, for his sake, he will graciously requite us with inward peace and consolation.—Seasons of peculiar humiliation before God, require peculiar long-suffering towards men: private revenge must never be indulged; and on such occasions it behoves us to be very reluctant in seeking the execution of public justice, on those offenders who have injured us alone: for even the Judge of the world, in his humiliation for our sins, bore with those who reviled and crucified him, and prayed for them: yet he will at length execute vengeance on all the impenitent and unbelieving.—A deep sense of personal guilt will soften the spirit towards others, and dispose a man to be indignant and severe against himself: and the most zealous friends must be disregarded, and even reproved, when they counsel what is evidently wrong.

V. 15—23.

Men, who admire themselves, will be easily deceived by those who profess an attachment to them: yet they readily discern those faults in others, of which themselves are far more notoriously guilty; and are apt to express astonishment at them.—If a zealous disciple of Christ be betrayed into evident wickedness, even profligates will exclaim, "Is this thy kindness to thy Friend!" But alas, how often might the Savior himself address each of us in these words, to our shame and confusion! And how often should we thus check ourselves, and remember our ingratitude, to our deeper humiliation!—Destruction is before those, who hearken to deceitful and wicked counsellors: yet young people in general, especially in high life, will not regard any other.—How desperately wicked is the human heart, that can conceive, execute, and glory in those deeds of darkness, which it is shocking to think of, and shameful to mention! (Note, Eph. 5:8—14.) yet all this might be drawn forth out of our hearts by successive temptations, if Satan and his agents were permitted to practise upon us!—When eminent abilities and daring wickedness unite in one character, they form the express image of the devil: and, like that arch-apostate and rebel, men of this description will spare no pains to push others forward into those kinds and degrees of guilt, which may drive them desperate, and extinguish all thoughts of reconciliation unto God. But this wisdom will shortly appear the most wretched and contemptible folly, which perverts twelve thousand men, and [a] I will arise and pursue after David [b] this night:

2 And I will come upon him while he is [c] weary and weak-handed, and will make him afraid: and all the people that are with him shall flee, and [d] I will smite the king only.

3 And [e] I will bring back all the people unto thee; the man whom thou seekest is as if all returned: so all the people [f] shall be in peace.

4 And [g] the saying * pleased Absalom well, and all the elders of Israel.

5 Then said Absalom, Call now [h] Hushai the Archite also, and let us hear likewise what † he saith.

6 And when Hushai was come to Absalom, Absalom spake unto him, saying, Ahithophel hath spoken after this manner: shall we do after his ‡ saying? if not, speak thou.

7 And Hushai said unto Absalom, The counsel that Ahithophel hath § given is [i] not good at this time.

8 For, said Hushai, thou knowest thy father and his men, that they be [j] mighty men, and they be || chafed in their minds, [k] as a bear robbed of her whelps in the field: and [l] thy father is a man of war, and will not lodge with the people.

9 Behold, [m] he is hid now in some pit, or in some other place: and it will come to pass, when [n] some of them be ¶ overthrown at the first, that whosoever heareth it, will say, There is a slaughter among the people that follow Absalom;

10 And he also that is valiant, whose [o] heart is as the heart of a lion, shall [p] utterly melt: for all Israel knoweth that thy father is a mighty man, and they which be with him are valiant men.

11 Therefore I counsel, that [q] all Israel be generally gathered unto thee, from Dan even to Beer-sheba, [r] as the sand that is by the sea for multitude, and that  thou go to battle [s] in thine own person.

12 So shall we come upon him [t] in some place where he shall be found, and [u] we will light upon him as the dew falleth on the ground: and of him, and of all the men that are with him, there shall not be left so much as one.

13 Moreover, if he be gotten into a city, then shall all Israel bring ropes to that city, and we will draw it into the river, until there be not [x] one small stone found there.

14 And Absalom and all the men of Israel said, The counsel of Hushai the Archite is better than the counsel of Ahithophel: for [y] the LORD had †† appointed [z] to defeat the [a] good counsel of Ahithophel, to the intent that the LORD might bring evil upon Absalom.

the noble powers of an angel, to increase and propagate guilt, condemnation, and eternal misery.

NOTES.

CHAP. XVII. V. 1—4. Ahithophel was fully aware, that delay must eventually ruin Absalom's cause; and he therefore proposed to assault David, while he and his men were weary and dispirited, and unprepared for battle, and he undertook to conduct the assault himself, perhaps fearing lest Absalom's rashness should defeat the design. Thus he thought that David might easily be smitten alone; and that this would effectually answer Absalom's purpose, and bring over the people to a quiet submission to his authority. The desperate wickedness of the proposal excited no opposition, either from Absalom or from the elders; and doubtless it was the most politic measure, which could possibly have been adopted in such circumstances.

V. 7—14. It is evident that Hushai aimed to gain time for David to remove to a greater distance, and to increase and encourage his army: and if he had put Absalom off from adopting Ahithophel's counsel and measure, only for one night, it might have proved of essential service, especially as he hoped to be able to give David intelligence of his danger. In pursuing this object, he opposed Ahithophel's proposal with consummate address: and with some specious arguments, taken from David's character for valor and military skill; from the courage and indignation of his followers; and from the probability that David would, by some stratagem of war, in which he was well versed, surprise and overcome his assailants, if they were not very numerous, and so discourage the whole party; he therefore stated that Ahithophel's counsel was not good at that time, though he generally was known to be a wise counsellor. But the measures, which he proposed instead of it, were addressed to the vain glory, the ambition, and perhaps the revenge, of Absalom and of his followers. (Note, 15:1—6.) To raise a very large army, which Absalom, being the universal favorite, might easily accomplish; to command it himself, that the honor might be all his own; to carry matters with a high hand, to make sure work, and to destroy David and all his party: this was a more pompous scheme, and more suited to a man of Absalom's capacity and dis-

15 ¶ Then said Hushai unto [b] Zadok and to Abiathar the priests, Thus and thus did Ahithophel counsel Absalom and the elders of Israel; and thus and thus have I counselled.

16 Now therefore send quickly, and tell David, saying, [c] Lodge not this night in the plains of the wilderness, [d] but speedily pass over; lest the king [e] be swallowed up and all the people that are with him.

17 Now [f] Jonathan and Ahimaaz stayed by [g] En-rogel, (for they might not be seen to come into the city,) and a wench went and told them: and they went and told king David.

18 Nevertheless a lad saw them, and told Absalom: but they went both of them away quickly, and came to a man's house in [h] Bahurim, which had a well in his court, whither they went down.

19 And the woman took and [i] spread a covering over the well's mouth, and spread ground corn thereon; and the thing was not known.

20 And when Absalom's servants came to the woman to the house, they said, Where is Ahimaaz and Jonathan? And the woman said unto them, [j] They be gone over the brook of water. And [k] when they had sought, and could not find them, they returned to Jerusalem.

21 And it came to pass after they were departed, that they came up out of the well, and went and told king David, and said unto David, [l] Arise, and pass quickly over the water; for [m] thus hath Ahithophel counselled against you.

22 Then David arose, and all the people that were with him, [n] and they passed over Jordan: by the morning-light [o] there lacked not one of them that was not gone over Jordan.

23 ¶ And when Ahithophel [p] saw that his counsel was not * followed, he saddled his ass, and arose, and gat him home to his house, to [q] his city, and † put his household in order, [r] and hanged himself, and died, and was buried in the sepulchre of his father.

24 Then David came to [s] Mahanaim:

position, and to an unreflecting multitude, than the deep and sagacious counsel of Ahithophel. Hushai doubtless framed his speech, not to meet the approbation of the wise, but to please the humor of the many: and it pleased God so to infatuate Absalom and all his party, that it met with general approbation.—Ahithophel's former counsel was followed, for God intended to correct David: (Note, 16:20—23.) but his latter was not, for he did not mean to destroy him, but Absalom. Thus God answered David's prayer, and turned the good, that is, the politic counsel of Ahithophel into foolishness. (Notes, 15:31. 16: 15—19.)—A bear, &c. (8) Note, Hos. 13:5—8.

Appointed. (14) Commanded. (Marg.) It was God's determined purpose thus to defeat Ahithophel's counsel, and to preserve David; and the whole transaction was so conducted, by his secret influence on the minds of all concerned, that the event was as certainly secured, as if he had given an express command to that purpose. This accorded to the language of David concerning Shimei. (Notes, 16:5—14. Ps. 76:10. Acts 4:23—28.)

V. 15, 16. Hushai feared, lest Absalom should be persuaded by Ahithophel to change his mind; and he was fully convinced that Absalom was determined to murder David, if possible, and without delay: he therefore sent him intelligence, and counselled him to provide immediately for his safety, by crossing Jordan without delay.

V. 17—21. Absalom and his party were restrained from injuring Zadok and Abiathar; but they seem to have suspected them. It was not, therefore, thought safe, or advisable, for Jonathan and Ahimaaz to enter the city. But they abode at En-rogel, near the city, (Marg. Ref. g,) whither intelligence was sent to them by a young woman, as an unsuspected messenger, which, with very great danger to themselves, and by means of a stratagem, united with a degree of falsehood in others, they were at length enabled to deliver. (Notes, Josh. 2:2—6. 1 Sam. 19:12—17.)

V. 22. Lacked not one, &c.] This was a remarkable instance of God's providential care over his servant David and his friends, that not one was lost, or had deserted, out of the whole company; and he was in this a type of Christ, who loses none of his true followers.—About this time David wrote the third psalm.

V. 23. Ahithophel had by this time seen enough of Absalom, to consider his cause as already lost. His vexation, when he saw so wild a measure, as that proposed by Hushai, preferred to his sound policy, was intolerable. He expected nothing but extreme disgrace and a public execution for his treason; but it is doubtful whether he despaired of mercy from God, or was hardened in presumption and infidelity: he, however, most deliberately murdered himself. (Notes, Job 5:11—16. Prov. 24:21,22.)—It is observable that three at least of those, who are recorded in Scripture as suicides, were apostate professors of godliness, viz. Saul, Ahithophel, and Judas. (Note, 1 Sam. 31:3—6.) It is also remarkable that he should have hanged himself, rather than kill himself in any other way. (Notes, Deut. 21:22,23. Matt. 27:3—5.) David's prayer was answered more terribly than he expected or desired. (Marg. Ref.)

Hanged himself.] Απηγξατο. Sept. Matt. 27:5 Gr. The whole narrative confutes the absurd gloss of those Jews, who would represent him as choked with grief, and not as having strangled himself.—He deliberately returned home, "gave charge concerning his house," (marg.) made his will, settled his affairs, and then hanged himself.

V. 24. (Marg. Ref.) While Absalom was collecting his army, David had time for taking effectual measures for resisting him.

V. 25. Nahash was evidently another name of Jesse. Ithra is supposed to have been an Ishmaelite by birth, but proselyted to the religion of Israel.—Amasa was nephew to David, by Abigail his sister, as were also Joab and Abishai, by Zeruiah. (1 Chr. 2:13—17.—Note, 17.)

V. 27—29. Perhaps Shobi, the son of Nahash, had been advanced to reign over Ammon by David, instead of Hanun his brother; and thus expressed his gratitude: (Notes, 10:) or perhaps he was proselyted and lived among the Israelites.—The various kinds of provisions, which were brought to David, not only expressed the liberality of his friends, but shewed the extreme distress to which his followers were reduced. (Marg. Ref.—Notes, 9:4. 19:31—39. 1 Sam. 25:18,19. 1 Chr. 12:23—40.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

When Satan has seduced men into a wicked course of life, every crime makes more and greater enormities almost necessary; and they must go forward, or lose the fruit, and suffer the punishment, of their former villanies.—His decided servants are more sagacious and vigorous in their mischievous devices, than the Lord's servants are in doing good: and they have a very great apparent advantage; being freed from the restraints of conscience, gratitude, natural affection, and the fear of God.—That some few individuals should be monsters of iniquity would not excite much surprise: but from age to age immense multitudes are found, who with one consent break through every tie of duty; especially when engaged in opposing the cause of religion and its cordial friends: and this demonstrates, that man by nature is an enemy to the service and holiness of God.—When the heart is hardened in iniquity, it is righteous for God to infatuate the understanding: and when the rage of his enemies has accomplished his secret purposes, and they are about to proceed further, their machinations prove unsuccessful, and accelerate their own destruction. (Notes, Is. 10:7—19.)—The Lord can perform the greatest deliverances by the feeblest instruments: he can protect his servants in their extremest dangers, or provide for them in their most pressing necessities: he can restrain the malice of their most cruel enemies, and enlarge the heart of unexpected friends: and whatever wisdom, address, despatch, or assistance, any man employs or affords; the success is from God alone, who will not suffer one of his people to perish.—When Satan has tempted men to successive crimes, till they are ripe for destruction; and when Providence has disappointed their ambitious and vain-glorious projects, and their lives are rendered miserable; the last device of that subtle enemy is to urge them to murder themselves: and in this way he sometimes deludes those, who have been most renowned for wisdom, but who are at length so foolish as to plunge themselves into everlasting misery, for fear of temporal disgrace and suffering! Let us then beware of hypocrisy and apostacy, which frequently have this event: let us fear sinning against knowledge and conscience, which is often the forerunner of judicial hardness: let us seek the wisdom which comes from God, and leads to heaven: let us watch against pride, malice, envy, and ambition; and learn to pity and relieve those who are in distress, with liberality proportioned to our ability.—Our King indeed needs not our help: but he has assured us, that what we do for the least of his brethren, who are sick, poor, or destitute, shall be accepted and recompensed, as if it were done to himself in person. (Note, Matt. 25:34—40.)

NOTES.

CHAP. XVIII. V. 1—3. As Ahithophel had foreseen, Absalom's delay afforded David's friends an opportunity of strengthening his army, which was now become capable of meeting their opponents in the field of battle. It is probable, that it was greatly inferior in numbers to Absalom's, but far superior in discipline; and consisted chiefly of old and approved friends, and such as acted from principle and conscience in adhering to their prince. This appears in the answer which they returned to his proposal of leading them to battle in his own person.

Ten thousand. (3) This seems to have been spoken, not only out of affection to David, but from a proper estimate of the importance of his life to the civil and religious interests of the nation; which was in great danger of falling into the most abject misery and the greatest ungodliness, if Absalom were successful in his wicked usurpation: and, no doubt, the truly pious Israelites adhered to David, with one accord.

V. 5. Absalom aimed directly at the life of his indulgent father; David desired nothing so much as the preservation of his rebellious son! (Note, 17:1—4.) But Absalom's crimes were too enormous to be pardoned, consistently with David's duty; and the peace of Israel could not be established while he lived. Perhaps David hoped, that if Absalom were not slain in battle, he might live to repent, and so escape future vengeance. But if he had been spared, he would probably have occasioned David further trouble and sin; and it pleased God to preserve his servant from the guilt of pardoning him, and from the anguish of punishing him.—David does not seem to have doubted of the victory, after his prayer against Ahithophel had been so remarkably answered.

V. 6. The wood of Ephraim here mentioned was beyond Jordan; and it is supposed to be the place where the Ephraimites had been slain in the days of Jephthah. (Judg. 12:4—6.)

V. 8. The wood, &c.] More were slain in the pursuit, through the wood, than in the battle. It is also probable, that numbers perished by pressing on one another in the thickets, or were devoured by wild beasts. (Marg. Ref. o, p.)

V. 9. Either Absalom's hair, which he had effeminately tended, was so entangled in the boughs of the oak that he could not extricate himself; (Note, 14:25—27.) or his head itself was confined betwixt two arms of the tree, through the rapidity and inattention with which he rode, to escape the servants of David. In this dreadful situation he remained for a considerable time, doubtless with unspeakable horror, expecting his doom without being able in the least to help himself. His fate was as extraordinary as his crimes; and being providentially hanged on a tree, he was as it were pronounced accursed by God himself. (Marg. Ref.—Note, 17:23.)

V. 13. Wrought falsehood, &c.] This man meant to say, that he should have cheated himself; and by seeking a reward have forfeited his life. His words were replete with truth, good the heart of Absalom, while he was yet alive in the * midst of the oak.

15 And ten young men that bare Joab's armor compassed about, and smote Absalom, and slew him.

16 And Joab [x] blew the trumpet, and the people returned from pursuing after Israel: for Joab held back the people.

17 And they took Absalom, and cast him into a great pit in the wood, and [y] laid a very great heap of stones upon him: and all Israel fled every one to his tent.

18 Now Absalom in his life-time had taken and [z] reared up for himself a pillar, which is in [a] the king's dale: for he said, [b] I have no son to keep my name in remembrance: and [c] he called the pillar after his own name: and it is called unto this day, [d] Absalom's place.

[Practical Observations.]

19 ¶ Then said [e] Ahimaaz the son of Zadok, Let me now run and bear the king tidings, how that the LORD hath † avenged him of his enemies.

20 And Joab said unto him, Thou shalt not ‡ bear tidings this day, but thou shalt bear tidings another day; but this day thou shalt bear no tidings, [f] because the king's son is dead.

21 Then said Joab to Cushi, Go tell the king what thou hast seen. And Cushi bowed himself unto Joab, and ran.

22 Then said Ahimaaz the son of Zadok yet again to Joab, But § howsoever, let me, I pray thee, also run after Cushi. And Joab said, Wherefore wilt thou run, my son, seeing that thou hast no tidings ‖ ready?

23 But howsoever, said he, let me run. And he said unto him, Run. Then Ahimaaz ran by the way of the plain, and over-ran Cushi.

24 And David sat [g] between the two gates: and [h] the watchman went up to the roof over the gate unto the wall, and lifted up his eyes, and looked, and behold a man running alone.

25 And the watchman cried, and told the king. And the king said, If he be alone, there is tidings in his mouth. And he came apace, and drew near.

26 And the watchman saw another man running, and the watchman called unto the porter, and said, Behold, another man running alone. And the king said, He also bringeth tidings.

27 And the watchman said, ¶ Methinketh the running of the foremost is like the running of Ahimaaz the son of Zadok. And the king said, [i] He is a good man, and cometh with good tidings.

28 And Ahimaaz called, and said unto the king,  All is well. And [k] he fell down to the earth upon his face before the king, and said, [l] Blessed be the LORD thy God, which hath †† delivered up the men, that lifted up their hand against my lord the king.

29 And the king said, ‡‡ Is the young man Absalom safe? And Ahimaaz answered, When Joab sent the king's servant, and me thy servant, [m] I saw a great tumult, but I knew not what it was.

30 And the king said unto him, Turn aside, and stand here. And he turned aside, and stood still.

31 And, behold, Cushi came: and Cushi said, §§ Tidings my lord the king: for [n] the LORD hath avenged thee this day of all them that rose up against thee.

32 And the king said unto Cushi, Is sense, and sound argument; and Joab was conscious that they did not admit of an answer.

V. 14. Joab doubtless intended the interest of both David and his kingdom, in killing Absalom; and his death was of salutary tendency, and even necessary: yet Joab cannot be excused in acting against the express command of his sovereign. He had no warrant from God or man to execute vengeance on Absalom: and, having deserved death himself, he was the last person who should have complained of the obstruction of public justice.

V. 17, 18. It seems that Absalom's sons died young, as a just judgment upon him for seeking the life of his father: (14:27.) and that, after their death, he erected a magnificent column, in or near which he meant to be interred; and by which he hoped to perpetuate his memory, with honor, to future generations. (Notes, Gen. 11:3,4. Ps. 49:11. Dan. 4:28—33.) But, on the contrary, he was buried with ignominy as a malefactor: (Josh. 10:26,27. Prov. 10:7.—Notes, Josh. 7:25,26. 8:29.) and his pillar proved a monument of his folly and wicked ambition.

V. 19—22. Ahimaaz had continued with David, after he had brought tidings from Hushai: (17:17—21.) and was present in the battle, probably sounding one of the sacred trumpets. (Note. Num. 10:1—10. 2 Chr. 13:4—12.) He was desirous of being the first to announce to David the tidings of the Lord's having "judged him from the hand of his enemies;" (marg.) both from disinterested love to him, and probably in hopes of gradually preparing David for the 33 And the king was much moved, and went up to the chamber over the gate, and wept: and as he went, thus he said, [p] O my son Absalom! my son, my son Absalom! [q] Would God I had died for thee, O Absalom, my son, my son!

account of Absalom's death. (Note, 28—32.) But Joab was sensible that David would bitterly lament the death of Absalom, and was not willing to send so respectable a person as Ahimaaz with tidings which would be unsuitable to his friendly purpose, and unwelcome to David. (27) He therefore appointed for that service a man, whose name intimates that he was an Ethiopian, and perhaps a slave: he was, however, cordially attached to the interests of David. Joab afterwards permitted Ahimaaz to go also.

V. 28—32. Probably, one motive which induced Ahimaaz so earnestly to desire to carry David the first news of the victory, was, that he might gradually prepare his mind for the intelligence of Absalom's death: for, though he rejoiced in David's deliverance, he sympathized with him in his grief; and for this purpose he evaded the king's question, which Cushi soon after indirectly, but more plainly, replied to.—The piety of the language both of Ahimaaz and Cushi on this occasion are worthy of notice and imitation.

V. 33. David's grief was doubtless excessive, and very imprudent and criminal. He ought to have been thankful for his own deliverance and for that of Israel; and to have submitted with silent patience to the righteous judgment of God upon his son. (Notes, Lev. 10:3. 1 Sam. 3:16—18. Ps. 39:9,10.) But he was a man of warm passions: he had inordinately loved a very unworthy object, who was cut off in the midst of his crimes: he could not but think of the state of his immortal soul; and vainly hoped, that if he had been preserved, he might have repented: he was conscious that, when his own forfeited life was spared, after his adultery and murder, his burden had been laid upon his family: he considered himself, by his transgression, example, and the chastisement of God, as accessary to the dire catastrophe; and in the vehemency of his grief he wished, that he had died himself rather than his son, probably, as being better prepared for the eternal world; while the agitation of his mind prevented him from adverting to the fatal effects of such an event to his kingdom, and to that cause which in his calmer hours was nearest to his heart.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—18.

The peculiar exercises of religion ought to recede, but not to exclude, the use of every prudent means of securing success in lawful undertakings: and those who would engage others in arduous and perilous attempts, must be willing to take a full share of the hardship and danger. But in some cases the life of an individual is of such importance to the public welfare, that thousands are authorized to require it of him, as a duty, to take the utmost care of himself. It is well when affection and fidelity of this kind subsist between princes and their subjects; and when they are mutually willing to venture, or to suffer, for each other's benefit. Thus Jesus loved his people, and laid down his life for them: and thus they consider his cause as dearer to them than every personal interest, and are prepared to lay down their lives for his sake.—True courage and firmness of mind are very different from rashness and obstinacy; and wise men are always most ready to listen to prudent counsel, even from their inferiors.—The extremes of our most amiable propensities are often of fatal consequence: and it is merciful for God to deny us those things which we greatly desire, when he sees they would prove our temptation or affliction.—Multitudes suffer through the wickedness of one, but for their own crimes: and rebellion against good and lawful governors is generally and justly punished with the ruin of those concerned in it. Yet the seducers into the ways of sin must be answerable to God for the consequences; and who can number the murders, for which many ambitious usurpers will stand indicted before his righteous tribunal!—At all times "evil pursueth sinners:" and when in the appointed hour it overtakes them, they cannot possibly escape; but those things on which they have most depended, and of which they have been most proud, often prove the occasion or instruments of their destruction.—Let young people look on Absalom, suspended upon the tree, accursed and forsaken of Heaven and earth; and there read the Lord's abhorrence of rebellion against parents: let them consider the agony of his death and the ignominy of his burial, and learn how empty are all external embellishments; and how vain the flattery of man, (Note, 14:25—27.) and all that care, which is employed in rendering themselves admired and renowned. After all, "the memory of the wicked shall rot;" and nothing can preserve us from misery and contempt, but heavenly grace and wisdom.—They who are greedy of gain, often work falsehood against their own lives or souls; and many will rejoice in the effects of wickedness, who will be the first to inform against those who have committed it, in order to exculpate themselves: but our safety lies in obeying the Lord and the lawful commands of our rulers.—The removal of one ringleader in daring crimes proves a public benefit, and makes way for the exercise of clemency to numbers: but that will not authorize every individual to take away the life of the most notorious offender; for it is not enough that the thing ought to be done, but we are to consider whether it be a service allotted to us by our great Master.

V. 19—33.

Every deliverance should be received with praise and thanksgiving: and good men delight in bearing glad tidings to those whom they love. May all, who proclaim the glad tidings of salvation to sinners, be men of holy lives, and unblemished reputation; and may numbers more be sent forth with this joyful message!—All other good tidings have so much alloy, that our joy on account of them must be mingled with weeping, or with trembling: and alas! we are more disposed to complain of the trouble which alloys our mercies, than to be thankful for the mercies themselves. But while we learn from the example before us, to watch and pray against partial and inordinate attachments, the indulgence or neglect of our children, and the unadvised language and passionate wishes of excessive grief; while we learn to bow down to the righteous appointments of God in our sharpest trials, to adore his unmerited mercy

CHAP. XIX.

The people being greatly disappointed and discouraged by David's conduct, Joab, by rude expostulations, induces him to restrain his grief and come forth to them, 1—8. The men of Israel dispute about bringing back David; who sends to the priests to incite the men of Judah to take the lead in this; and they readily comply, 9—15. Shimei submitting is not punished, 16—23. Mephibosheth meets David; complains that Ziba had deceived and slandered him; and has half his land restored, 24—30. Barzillai attends David over Jordan, and his son is taken into the king's family, 31—40. The Israelites expostulate with the men of Judah, for bringing back the king without them, 41—43.

AND [a] it was told Joab, Behold, the king weepeth and mourneth for Absalom.

2 And the * victory that day was [b] turned into mourning unto all the people: for the people heard say that day, how the king was grieved for his son.

3 And the people gat them by stealth that day [c] into the city, as people being ashamed [d] steal away when they flee in battle.

4 But the king [e] covered his face, and the king cried with a loud voice, [f] O my son, Absalom! O Absalom, my son, my son!

5 And Joab came into the house to the king, and said, Thou hast shamed this day the faces of all thy servants, which this day have [g] saved thy life, and the lives of thy sons, and of thy daughters, and the lives of thy wives, and the lives of thy concubines;

6 † In that thou lovest thine enemies, and hatest thy friends: for thou hast declared this day, that ‡ thou regardest neither princes nor servants: for this day I perceive, that if Absalom had lived, and all we had died this day, [h] then it had pleased thee well.

7 Now therefore arise, go forth, and speak § comfortably unto thy servants: for I swear by the LORD, if thou go not forth, [i] there will not tarry one with thee this night; and that will be worse unto thee, than [j] all the evil that befel thee from thy youth until now.

8 Then the king arose, and [k] sat in the gate. And they told unto all the people, saying, Behold, the king doth sit in the gate. And all the people came before the king; [l] for Israel had fled every man to his tent.

9 ¶ And all the people were at [m] strife throughout all the tribes of Israel, saying, [n] The king saved us out of the hand of our enemies, and he delivered us out of the hand of the Philistines, and now [o] he is fled out of the land for Absalom.

10 And Absalom, [p] whom we anointed over us, [q] is dead in battle: now therefore why ‖ speak ye not a word of bringing the king back?

11 And king David [r] sent to Zadok and to Abiathar the priests, saying, [s] Speak unto the elders of Judah, saying, [t] Why are ye the last to bring the king back to his house? seeing the speech of all Israel is come to the king, even to his house.

12 Ye are my brethren, ye are [u] my bones and my flesh; wherefore then are ye the last to bring back the king?

13 And say ye to [x] Amasa, Art thou not of my bone, and of my flesh? [y] God do so to me, and more also, if thou be not captain of the host before me continually in the [z] room of Joab.

14 And he bowed the heart of all the men of Judah, [a] even as the heart of one man; so that they sent this word unto the king, Return thou, and all thy servants.

in our comforts and deliverances, and to prefer the public welfare to any personal or private affections; we may in David perceive a shadow of the Savior's love, who wept, prayed, and suffered death in all its bitterness, for us rebels and enemies, without even excepting those, who persecuted and crucified him; and hence learn "not to be overcome of evil, but to overcome evil with good."

NOTES.

CHAP. XIX. V. 1—8. (Note, 18:33.) David's conduct on this occasion was exceedingly impolitic, and tended to weaken the attachment and damp the zeal of his adherents; who would interpret his excessive grief, so passionately expressed, into an indifference about their interests, and dissatisfaction with their services. For instead of being led to celebrate their important success with joyful exultations, and meeting the animating hearty commendations of their prince, whom they had bravely and faithfully served; they were sent away grieved and ashamed. Joab had therefore good reason to interpose, and would have been justifiable in a very plain remonstrance with David on the impropriety of his conduct: but the asperity, the reproaches, and the threat, confirmed with an oath, of a general defection, which his language plainly implied, must be ascribed to his pride and insolence; for he seems to have gloried in disobeying and being rude to his prince. (Note, 3:24,25. 18:14. 20:8—13.) David, however, being conscious that Joab had truth and reason on his side, smothered his resentment, and very prudently obviated the disgust of the people.

15 So the king returned, and came to Jordan. And Judah came to [b] Gilgal to go to meet the king, to conduct the king over Jordan. [Practical Observations.]

16 ¶ And [c] Shimei the son of Gera, a Benjamite, which was of Bahurim, hasted and came down with the men of udah to meet king David.

17 And there were a thousand men of Benjamin with him, and [e] Ziba the servant of the house of Saul, and his fifteen sons and his twenty servants with him; and they went over Jordan before the king.

18 And there went over a ferry-boat to carry over the king's household, and to do * what he thought good. And Shimei the son of Gera [f] fell down before the king, as he was come over Jordan;

19 And [g] said unto the king, [h] Let not my lord impute iniquity unto me, neither do thou [i] remember that which thy servant [k] did perversely, the day that my lord the king went out of Jerusalem, that the king should [l] take it to his heart.

21 But Abishai the son of Zeruiah answered and said, [o] Shall not Shimei be put to death for this, because he [p] cursed the LORD's anointed?

22 And David said, [q] What have I to do with you, ye sons of Zeruiah, that ye should this day be adversaries unto me? [r] Shall there any man be put to death this day in Israel? for do not I know that I am this day king over Israel?

23 Therefore the king said unto Shimei, [s] Thou shalt not die: and the king [t] sware unto him.

24 ¶ And [u] Mephibosheth the son of Saul came down to meet the king; and had neither [x] dressed his feet, nor trimmed his beard, nor washed his clothes, from the day the king departed until the day he came again in peace.

V. 9—15. David would not appear to reign by force of arms: and therefore he waited till he was publicly invited to resume the reins of government. From the time that he began to reign in Hebron over the tribe of Judah only, the distinction between Judah and Israel began to be observed. (Notes, 2:4. 5:1—3.) The men of Israel were first disposed to return to their allegiance, and they spoke honorably of David's former services; but either fear, or shame, or want of unanimity, deterred them from publicly inviting him to return: and they seem also to have disputed to whom the blame of the late rebellion belonged; each endeavoring to excuse himself.—When therefore the report of these things reached the king, he probably thought it would be dishonorable to his own tribe, if they were the last in this service; or perhaps they were so deeply involved in Absalom's rebellion, that they feared David's resentment, when reinstated in his authority. He therefore employed Zadok and Abiathar to assure the principal persons of his affection, and to excite them to appear in this business; by which means they took the lead in such a manner, as induced the men of Israel to conclude, that they meant to engross the credit of recalling David, and exclusively to secure his favor. (Note, 40—43.) But it would have been more prudent, if they had consulted with their brethren, that all of them might act in concert; as this would have prevented many bad consequences.—David also was very uneasy under Joab's haughtiness, and was exceedingly displeased with him for slaying Absalom, and for his subsequent rudeness; and he wished to lay him aside. (Note, 1—8.) He supposed likewise, that if Amasa were assured of pardon and preferment, he would draw over all that party into his interests: (Note, 17:25.) and doubtless his influence was very great, especially in Judah. But Amasa, having headed so daring a rebellion, was not a proper person to supplant Joab, whose influence with the army and with David's best friends, was too firmly established to be thus shaken; and he was sure not to submit quietly to such a disgrace. David therefore does not seem to have acted with prudence on this emergency.

Anointed. (10) It is not recorded, that Absalom was anointed: but perhaps he was; and if not, he was obeyed, as if he had been the anointed king.

V. 16, 17. (Marg. Ref.) Perhaps Shimei had been captain of a thousand men of Benjamin, who now attended him, to request that he might be pardoned.

V. 18. Ferry-boat.] This is the only place, in which a boat for passing over a river is mentioned. Bridges are not once mentioned in scripture. Rivers were generally forded at this time.

V. 19—23. Next to the tribe of Judah, the descendants of Joseph had the pre-eminence; and Israel, as distinguished from Judah, was named from them. Shimei, therefore, though a Benjamite, ranked himself among the sons of Joseph, or the Israelites; and intimated, that none except the men of Judah had come to David so soon as he had. Perhaps he meant, that he had come before any of the house of Joseph. —Shimei confessed his crime, and seemed penitent: and David granted him a pardon, and swore to him that he should not die, at that time, or for that offence. (Notes, 16:5—14. 1 Kings 2:8,9,36—46.) Abishai, however, would have had him made an example of, as indeed he well deserved: but David intimated, that he and Joab were always instigating him to acts of secome to Jerusalem to meet the king, that the king said unto him, [y] Wherefore wentest thou not with me, Mephibosheth?

26 And he answered, My lord, O king, my servant deceived me: for thy servant said, [z] I will saddle me an ass, that I may ride thereon, and go to the king; because [a] thy servant is lame.

27 And he hath [b] slandered thy servant unto my lord the king; but my lord the king is [c] as an angel of God: do therefore what is good in thine eyes.

28 For all of my father's house [d] were but [*] dead men before my lord the king; yet [e] didst thou set thy servant among them that did eat at thine own table: what right therefore have I yet [f] to cry any more unto the king?

29 And the king said unto him; [g] Why speakest thou any more of thy matters? I have said, [h] Thou and Ziba divide the land.

30 And Mephibosheth said unto the king, [i] Yea, let him take all, forasmuch as my lord the king is come again in peace unto his own house.

[Practical Observations.]

31 ¶ And [j] Barzillai the Gileadite came down from Rogelim, and went over Jordan with the king, to conduct him over Jordan.

32 Now Barzillai was a very aged man, even [k] fourscore years old: and he had [l] provided the king of sustenance while he lay at Mahanaim; [m] for he was a very great man.

33 And the king said unto Barzillai, [n] Come thou over with me, and I will feed thee with me in Jerusalem.

34 And Barzillai said unto the king, [†] How long have I to live, that I should go up with the king unto Jerusalem?

35 I am this day fourscore years old: and [o] can I discern between good and evil? can thy servant [p] taste what I eat or what I drink? [q] can I hear any more the voice of singing men and singing women? wherefore then should thy servant be yet a [r] burden unto my lord the king?

36 Thy servant will go a little way over Jordan with the king: and why should the king recompense it me with such a reward?

37 Let thy servant, I pray thee, turn back again, that [s] I may die in mine own city, and be buried [t] by the grave of my father and of my mother. But, behold, thy servant [u] Chimham; let him go over with my lord the king; and do to him what shall seem good unto thee.

38 And the king answered, Chimham shall go over with me, and I will do to him that which shall seem good unto thee: and whatsoever thou shalt [‡] require of me, that will I do for thee.

39 And all the people went over Jordan. And when the king was come over, the king [v] kissed Barzillai, and [x] blessed him; and [y] he returned unto his own place.

40 Then the king went on to Gilgal, and [§] Chimham went on with him: and verity; but it would be injurious to his interests, as well as contrary to his inclinations, to sully his restoration with the execution of a single criminal; and that there was no occasion, for all were disposed peaceably to submit to him.

V. 24—30. Mephibosheth did not come to David till his return to Jerusalem, probably, because he could not procure an ass prepared for him to ride on; having been deserted by Ziba, and all his attendants. From the time of the king's departure, he had utterly neglected the care of his person, and shewn every token of excessive sorrow. To David's inquiry, why he had not accompanied him, he answered by a simple narration of facts, united with the most respectful, affectionate, thankful, and submissive language. He owed all he possessed to David's clemency and bounty; he did not complain of the grant made to Ziba; and he was confident that the king would do nothing but what was consistent with wisdom and justice.—But whether David did not fully credit him; or whether he was ashamed of his credulity, and wished not to have it further noticed; he suffered Ziba to escape merited punishment, and to enjoy part of the fruits of his slander: or at least he contented himself with restoring matters to their former settlement, as some understand it. (Note, 9:9—11.) Mephibosheth, however, so greatly rejoiced in David's safety and success, that he generously treated the affair concerning his own estate, as a matter of indifference. (Notes, Phil. 1:15—20.)

V. 31—39. The narrative of the conversation which passed between David and Barzillai, and their affectionate parting, is exceedingly pleasing and instructive: but it requires little comment. Barzillai had merely done his duty; he required no recompense; and he was too old, either to enjoy the pleasures of the court, or to be of any further use to his king. (Note, Ec. 12:2—7.) He only desired to go home to prepare for death: but the case might be different in respect of his son.—It is probable that David all [z] the people of Judah conducted the king, and also half the people of Israel.

41 And, behold, all the men of Israel came to the king, and said unto the king, [a] Why have our brethren the men of Judah [b] stolen thee away, and have brought the king, and his household, and all David's men with him, over Jordan?

42 And all the men of Judah answered the men of Israel, [c] Because the king is near of kin to us: wherefore then be ye angry for this matter? have we eaten at all of the king's cost? or hath he given us any gift?

43 And the men of Israel answered the men of Judah, and said, [d] We have [e] ten parts in the king, and we have also more right in David than ye: why then did ye [*] despise us, that [f] our advice should not be first had in bringing back our king? And [g] the words of the men of Judah were fiercer than the words of the men of Israel.

settled part of his patrimony at Bethlehem on Chimham. (Note, Jer. 41:16—18.)

V. 40—43. By the time that David had passed over Jordan, part of the elders of Israel came to bring him back, and were disgusted at finding that they came too late; and that David's reinstatement in the kingdom had been decided on, though their advice had not been asked. They thought themselves despised, and that the men of Judah took too much upon them: while the plea of relationship to David, urged by the men of Judah, tended only to increase suspicions and envy; and the fiercer words, which they returned to the angry remonstrance of their brethren, produced very bad effects. (Notes, Judg. 8:1—3. 12:1—7. Prov. 13:10. 17:14. 18:19. 1 Cor. 13:4—7. Gal. 5:13—15. Phil. 2:1—4. Jam. 3:13—18.) Whatever value or respect the men of Israel at this time professed for their king, they would not have quarrelled so fiercely about their own credit and interest in recalling him, if they had been truly sorry for their former rebellion. David freely forgave them all their gross injuries against him; but they could not endure the least affront from each other. (Note, 20:1,2.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—15.

The excessive indulgence of any passion, (grief by no means excepted,) not only offends God, but betrays men into great imprudence even in their temporal concerns.—Those who have faithfully served us expect that we should appear pleased with them, and thankful for their services: and many will do more for a smile and a kind word from their superiors, than for a more substantial recompense; and be much grieved and disheartened, if they think themselves frowned on.—Upon important emergencies, plain truths may properly be spoken to the greatest and best of men, and they may be closely reasoned and expostulated with; but indecent roughness, and an assuming demeanor in an inferior, will render the most prudent, seasonable, and honest counsel unacceptable, and perhaps ineffectual. (Notes, 1 Sam. 25:23—33. Prov. 25:11, 12. 27:9.) A wise man, however, will endeavor to overlook the impropriety, and benefit by the sound reason, of well-intended remonstrances: and timely concessions will commonly prevent the ill effects of mistaken measures.—Men are often betrayed, by their discontents and fickleness, into such actions as their sober judgment disapproves, and of which experience will constrain them to be weary: but they do not so readily condemn themselves for the most evident treachery or ingratitude.—Many allow that such and such things should be done, and wonder that others do not set about them: and yet they themselves are equally dilatory, through indolence, pride, or covetousness.—Ministers should at all times be examples of fidelity to magistrates and rulers; and may very properly exhort others to do their plain and evident duty, in that as well as in other respects: but, this case excepted, it is generally best for them not to intermeddle in public affairs.—Convincing arguments, urged in mildness and love, are very forcible, and produce great effects upon the minds of men in all temporal concerns: but the grace of God alone can bow our hearts into submission to his humbling truth and holy will.—In acts of clemency to those who have been open offenders, care should be taken not to disgust such as have deserved better of us, though in some respects they have failed of their duty: and that which exposes a man to envy or rivalship, however splendid and valuable, will probably be injurious to him. (Notes, 1 Sam. 18:6—11. Prov. 27:4.)—Self-preference and contempt of others should always be guarded against; and every thing avoided which may be thought to spring from these evils: while equity, mutual respect, and harmony should be studied, and many interests and supposed points of honor receded from, that strife and contention may be excluded.

V. 16—30.

Many seem to be sorry for those crimes, which expose them to present punishment; and the language and semblance of repentance are easily imitated: but it is safest for us to judge favorably of others; if we do err, to err on the side of candor and clemency; and to leave it to the heart-searching God, to determine between the upright and the hypocritical.—Peculiar mercies from God should dispose us to be the more merciful to others: and our best friends must be considered as adversaries, when they would persuade us to act contrary to our conscience and our duty. (Note, Matt. 16:21—23.)—Perseverance in well doing will at length refute slanderous accusations: true affection for our friends, and sympathy with them in their afflictions, will create an indifference to the pleasures of sense and external decorations: and when they are beloved for the Lord's sake, as well as for personal obligations, the effect will be much greater, and more permanent. But this sorrow shall be turned into joy, on account of their present success, or in the prospect of their future happiness, and our own in fellowship with them: and these hopes and comforts tend to wean the soul more and more from the trifling interests of this world.—Credulity in believing slanders often leads pious persons into difficulties, and covers them with shame: and no offenders are so seldom treated with proper severity as backbiters.

V. 31—43.

When God gives largeness of heart, as well as great wealth, he qualifies a man to be a public blessing: and doing good liberally is the proper pleasure and advantage of wealth. For the little pleasure of outward enjoyments quickly grows insipid; old age destroys the relish for them; and death must soon separate a man from his riches, and then he must give an account to God of his stewardship.—It becomes us therefore, as we advance in life, to relinquish worldly pursuits before we be torn from them; and leaving to our juniors those scenes of business, or of pleasure, where reflection is too often dissipated, and the voice of conscience stunned, to prefer retirement and privacy, where we may best prepare for the closing hour. Even the cities where the truths of God are most professed, and his ordinances are best administered; and those courts, where the prince encourages and sets an example of true piety; are ensnaring places, through the multitudes of another character which frequent them. And, though allowances should be made to youth, in matters inexpedient to old age; yet the sooner and the more entirely young people devote themselves to God, the safer and happier they will be.—It is our duty to recompense to the children, the kindness shewn us by their parents, and to pray for them that they may have grace properly to use their temporal good things.—Envy and anger often interrupt the most promising appearances, and in quarrels generally both parties are culpable. A supposed neglect excites displeasure; an angry expression provokes a retort; words grow warmer, and fiercer. Thus the best designs are disconcerted, and much evil is committed; when it might be otherwise, if men would watch against their own pride, and be careful not to affront that of others; remembering, that a "soft answer turneth away wrath." (Notes, Prov. 15:1. 26:4,5.)—But here again, some glimpses may be discerned of the glorious character and kingdom of David's Son and David's Lord. Being anointed by the Father to be his King upon his holy hill of Zion, he reigns over a willing people, who deem it their privilege to be his subjects. Once indeed they were rebels, and numbers of their associates perished in rebellion: but when they became sensible of their danger, they were fearful or reluctant to submit unto him; till his ministers, by representing his tender love, and his promises of pardon and preferment, through the concurring influences of his Spirit, bowed their hearts to a humble willingness that he should reign over them: then he readily pardoned and accepted them, and upon no accusation will he cast out, or cut off, the greatest offender who cries for his mercy. His friends sincerely mourn when his cause is run down, and rejoice when it prospers, whether they prosper in the world or not. He will recompense those, who from love to him feed his servants; he will assign them a place in his holy city, the new Jerusalem; he will feast them upon the provisions of his house, and will bless their children after them. Alas! that it must be added, that while the King himself is so plenteous in mercy; many of his professed subjects are envious, and contentious with each other, and quarrel about the most trivial concerns; which prevents much good, does immense mischief, and occasions lamentable scandals. May he at length teach all who are called by his name, to follow the example of his humility and meekness; and to rejoice in seeing the common cause promoted, let who will have the credit of being the instrument: and may all "endeavor to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace!" (Note, Eph. 4:1—6.)

NOTES.

CHAP. XX. V. 1, 2. The disputants at first professed to vie with each other in loyal affection for their prince; (Note, 19:40—43.) yet most of them were really actuated by ambition of preeminence: one party confiding in nearness of relation to David, the other in numbers. At length therefore the men of Israel, who had boasted that they had ten parts in David, were so irritated, that they would have no part in him, but preferred a man of Belial before him: intimating, that they had no share in his regard, which was engrossed by the men of Judah; and therefore they would have nothing more to do with him. (Note, 1 Kings 12:16.)—Sheba, it is probable, had been a commander under Amasa in Absalom's revolt, and possessed great influence among the men of Israel; so that, when he blew a trumpet, and gave the signal, instead of returning home, they generally followed him as the leader of another rebellion. "But the men of Judah clave unto their king:" and probably a few of the men of Israel; some from fear, and others from attachment.—Shimei did not join this rebellion, or he would have been punished.

V. 3. The confinement and retired maintenance of these women was the only measure, which could be adopted, in justice or prudence; unless they had been found deserving of severer punishment. The less they were seen or heard of, the better; and perhaps their seclusion might be a benefit to their souls.

V. 4, 5. Amasa's appointment to be command-

6 And David said to [l] Abishai, Now shall Sheba the son of Bichri [m] do us more harm than did Absalom: take thou [n] thy lord's servants and pursue after him, lest he get him fenced cities and * escape us.

7 And there went out after him [o] Joab's men, and the Cherethites, and the Pelethites, and all the mighty men: and they went out of Jerusalem, to pursue after Sheba the son of Bichri.

8 When they were at the great stone which is [p] in Gibeon, [q] Amasa went before them. And Joab's garment that he had put on was girded unto him, and upon it a girdle with a sword fastened upon his loins in the sheath thereof; and as he went forth it fell out.

er of the army, in the place of Joab, must have been very unpopular with all those, who had fought and conquered under that commander: and as Amasa had not been successful for Absalom, perhaps his own party did not entirely confide in him. This might occasion some unexpected delay in raising an army: but the men of Judah seem to have been more eager to dispute about their king, than to engage in battle for him.

V. 6, 7. Thy Lord's servants.] That is, Joab's soldiers, or a body of men which had been more immediately commanded by him. (Marg. Ref. n, o.) David would not employ Joab upon this occasion, because he intended to remove him from his service: but, by assigning the service to his brother Abishai, he effectually made way for Joab's resuming the command, in defiance of him.

V. 8—10. Amasa, at length arriving with the troops which he had collected, took upon him the command of the army: and Joab seemed very cheerfully to submit; following the army as a private person, and professing zeal for the cause of David, whilst he was meditating revenge and murder! He had contrived, that his sword should fall from its scabbard, as if by chance, when he approached Amasa, that without suspicion he might have it drawn in his hand, when he saluted him: and thus, pretending brotherly love, (for he was a near relation,) and in the very expression of endeared friendship, he basely murdered him at one blow. Amasa could not but know Joab's daring and revengeful character, and his vexation at being superseded by the commander of that very rebellion which he had crushed; yet he did not suspect his intention, or attempt to avoid the fatal blow! perhaps not apprehending danger from the sword, because Joab held it in his left hand. But it was the Lord's righteous will, that Amasa should thus suffer the punishment due to his former treason. (Notes, 3:26,27. 18:14. Judg. 9:50—57.)—Joab, confiding in the favor of the army, by this conduct set both the king and public justice at defiance, and declared his resolution to keep his place in contempt of all opposition. (Notes, 3:38,39. 1 Kings 2:5,6,28—34.) Having therefore given Amasa a mortal wound, he left him in the agonies of death, resumed the command of the troops, and marched against the common enemy, without concern or delay!

V. 11—13. By the artifice of representing the cause of Joab as united with that of David, the people in general were left in suspense, whether Joab acted by the king's orders, or against them: but when the body of Amasa was removed and covered, they followed their old commander without further hesitation.

He that favoreth Joab. (11) "Delighteth (חפץ) in Joab, and in David." Joab is placed first. Probably many who had highly favored Joab, felt indignant on this occasion.

V. 14, 15. Sheba endeavored to raise forces, through the several tribes of Israel: but it is probable, that the elders who at first had followed him, upon recollection, and from dread of another civil war, had generally withdrawn from him; and therefore he had little success. So that with only a few followers, chiefly from Beeroth the city, Hear, hear; say, I pray you, unto Joab, Come near hither, that I may speak with thee.

17 And when he was come near unto her, the woman said, Art thou Joab? and he answered, I am he. Then she said unto him, [f] Hear the words of thine handmaid. And he answered, I do hear.

18 Then she spake, saying, * They were wont to speak in old time, saying, They shall surely ask counsel at Abel: and so they ended the matter.

19 I am one of them that are [g] peaceable and faithful in Israel: thou seekest to destroy a city and [h] a mother in Israel: why wilt thou [i] swallow up [k] the inheritance of the LORD?

20 And Joab answered and said, [l] Far be it, far be it from me, [m] that I should swallow up or destroy.

21 The matter is not so: but [n] a man of mount Ephraim, Sheba the son of Bichri † by name, hath [o] lifted up his hand against the king, even against David: deliver him only, and I will depart from the city. And the woman said unto Joab, Behold, [p] his head shall be thrown to thee over the wall.

22 Then the woman went unto all the people [q] in her wisdom. And they cut off the head of Sheba the son of Bichri, and cast it out to Joab: and [r] he blew a trumpet, and they ‡ retired from the city, every man to his tent. [s] And Joab returned to Jerusalem unto the king.

a city of Benjamin, he at length shut himself up in Abel-beth-maachah, in the tribe of Naphtali, as some of the citizens seem at first to have been favorable to his cause: but when Joab had so far pushed the siege, as to fill up the trench, and to fix his engines close to the wall to batter it; it may be supposed, that they began to dread the consequences.

V. 16—19. Joab seems to have taken it for granted, that the citizens in general were firmly attached to Sheba; and so did not propose terms of peace, or require them to deliver him up: and they appear to have concluded, that there was no safety except in resistance. But the fatal effects of this misunderstanding were prevented by the timely interposition of a woman of noted wisdom and prudence. In her argument with Joab, she seems to have referred to the law which required, that before siege was laid even to a foreign city, peace should be offered if the citizens would submit; and much more to a city, which had hitherto been "peaceful and faithful, and a mother in Israel," as protecting the adjacent villages. (Note, Deut. 20:10—18.) And she tacitly intimated that Joab, by neglecting this previous measure, was about to destroy the city, to the public injury of the nation, and so to "swallow up the inheritance of the LORD." This seems the proper interpretation of her expostulation: and it accords with the marginal reading: though she expressed herself rather obscurely, perhaps for 'fear of giving offence. 'As if she had said, When 'the people saw thee lay siege to the city, they 'said, Surely they will ask us, if we will have 'peace, and then we shall soon come to an agree-'ment, and have an end.' Bp. Patrick. Some adhering to the translation in the text suppose, that this city had long been noted, as the residence of wise men, who had settled differences by prudent and equitable accommodation; so that it was become proverbial, 'that the way to ter-'minate matters in litigation, was to ask counsel 'at Abel:' and therefore that city ought not rashly to be destroyed.

V. 20—22. Joab, though guilty of private revenge and murder, and setting his king at defiance, was, in other respects, attentive to the public interest, and very willing to settle the dispute: if the citizens therefore would deliver up the traitor, he would not injure them. Thus Sheba's head purchased the safety of the city, and terminated the rebellion: (Notes, Prov. 17: 11. Ec. 9:13—18.) and Joab without fear or shame, (apparently glorying as much in revenging himself, as in serving the public,) returned to David as though nothing had happened: and he was now become too powerful to be removed, or called to account, or punished, without endangering another rebellion.

V. 23—26. Note, 8:15—18.—Tribute. (24) This office is not before mentioned. Perhaps, at first, the contributions of the nation had been but small; in a measure voluntary, and placed under the management of the other officers: but now regular taxes were paid; and the tribute from the conquered nations especially tended to render this new office requisite. (Notes, 1 Kings 4:4—6. 12:18.)—Abiathar was the high priest: Ahimelech his son is not mentioned. (Marg. Ref.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—13.

We must expect one trial after another, for our salutary chastisement, till we reach the place where sin and sorrow are for ever excluded.—Angry disputants commonly misunderstand, or misinterpret, one another's words: proud men will either manage every thing their own way, r entirely refuse their concurrence; and when greatly enraged, they are apt to avenge themelves on the innocent, and on persons whom hey profess to love, instead of those who have ffronted them.—The favor of the many is no nore to be depended on, than that of the great: nd what indeed have men a right to expect, hen "Hosannah to the Son of David," was so oon by the multitude changed into "Crucify im, crucify him?" All appearance, however, of artiality, in our conduct towards those who re equally related to us, or have an equal laim upon us, ought to be avoided: for it ften excites discord in families, churches, and ingdoms.—Many a vehement quarrel would pend its fury in angry words, and then die way, if some "man of Belial" were not present, o sound the trumpet of public contention. Saan, if permitted,—will be sure to excite such ingleaders of dissension: and God, in wise and oly sovereignty, is pleased often to permit it, hat he may execute vengeance, or inflict corection, according to his righteous purposes. Hence nations are visited with war and bloodhed, especially the dire scourge of civil wars; nd the church with pestilent divisions, and virlent controversies.—When immoderate and inxpedient provision is made for sensual gratiication, it will surely terminate in grief and hame: and obscure retirement best suits those who are become infamous by sin.—The most owerful cannot effect all that they wish, or all hat they see to be right; nay, they cannot atempt it without danger: for at last they can nly do, what the many can be prevailed with to oncur in.—Consequences should be well weighd before important measures are adopted; for esentment and disgust are dangerous counselors.—Our inbred lusts, like able wicked men, annot be brought under, without great difficulies, when they have acquired a habit of domieering: the beginning of evil should therefore e every thing be decisively resisted.—By derees men grow more and more bold and unfeeling in the commission of crimes of every ind; until they vindicate and glory in their villanies: and when such daring offenders are acuated by ambition or revenge, they will not be estrained by the ties of relationship, or friendhip; nay, they will employ the guise and lanuage of love, to obtain the opportunity of perpetrating the most atrocious murders: but the more of contrivance, or of dissimulation, is conjected with malice, the deeper is its malignity. —The murderer may conceal his crimes, or prosper in his ways for a season, and elude or outbrave the justice of man: but let him not exject to escape the vengeance of God.—Vain are earthly distinctions and preferments, which excite so much envy and enmity, without affording any additional security to man's uncertain life: may we then be ambitious "of that honor which cometh from God only!"—Great abilities, strong attachment to the interests of the public, and eminent services, performed with firmness, prudence, and clemency, constitute a great, but not always a good man: and a person thus peculiarly distinguished, being the slave of one imperious lust, may violate every moral obligation in order to its indulgence; though such treachery, cruelty, and injustice seem to "be far from him," in other parts of his conduct.

V. 14—26.

Wisdom is not restricted to rank or sex: and it does not consist in extensive knowledge or ingenious speculations; but in understanding how to act as circumstances arise, in order that calamities may be averted, and benefits secured, personal, relative, and public.—Contending parties would often be reconciled if they properly understood each other; hence the benefit of a prudent and impartial mediation: and the just punishment of one atrocious criminal is frequently mercy to great numbers.—Thus the sinner persists in his rebellion, till, through the Savior's mediation, he perceives that his offended Lord does not seek his destruction, but that of his sins: then he becomes willing that they should be crucified, especially, the strongest and most domineering of them; and receiving pardon and grace from God, he becomes peaceable, faithful, and useful in Israel.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXI. V. 1—3. It is not certain, whether this famine occurred in the order of time in which it is related, or earlier in the reign of David.—It does not seem to have been very grievous, and the scarcity of the first and second year occasioned no great alarm: but when it continued the third year also, David understood that it was a national judgment, and inquired of God, for what particular sin he thus contended with his people; perhaps thinking of his own crimes in the matter of Uriah.—The history of Saul gives no account of the transaction, which was declared to be the cause of this calamity: but it seems that Saul, in order to promote the supposed interests of Israel and Judah, attempted to extirpate the Gibeonites, who were of the ancient inhabitants of Canaan: though they had submitted to Israel, and had quietly served them for ages; and were protected by the public faith, and a solemn oath ratifying a covenant of peace with them. (Notes, Josh. 9:) Yet he did not attempt to extirpate the Amalekites, Philistines, and other hostile nations, whom God commanded him to destroy!

4 And the Gibeonites said unto him, * We will have [i] no silver nor gold of Saul, nor of his house; neither for us shalt thou kill any man in Israel. And he said, What ye shall say, that will I do for you.

5 And they answered the king, [k] The man that consumed us, and that † devised against us, that we should be destroyed from remaining in any of the coasts of Israel,

6 Let seven men of his sons be delivered unto us, and we will [l] hang them up unto the LORD [m] in Gibeah of Saul, ‡ whom the LORD did choose. And the king said, I will give them.

7 But the king spared [n] Mephibosheth, the son of Jonathan, the son of Saul, [o] because of the LORD's oath that was between them, between David and Jonathan the son of Saul.

8 But the king took the two sons of [p] Rizpah the daughter of Aiah, whom she bare unto Saul, Armoni and Mephibosheth: and the five sons of § Michal the daughter of Saul, whom she ‖ brought up for Adriel the son of Barzillai the Meholathite:

9 And he delivered them into the hands of the Gibeonites, and they hanged them in the hill [q] before the LORD: and they fell all seven together, and were put to death in the days of harvest, in the first days, [r] in the beginning of barley harvest.

10 And [s] Rizpah the daughter of Aiah [t] took sackcloth, and spread it for her upon the rock, [u] from the beginning of harvest [x] until water dropped upon them out of heaven, and suffered neither [y] the birds of the air to rest on them by day, nor the beasts of the field by night.

11 And it was [z] told David what Rizpah the daughter of Aiah, the concubine of Saul, had done.

12 And David went and took [a] the bones of Saul, and the bones of Jonathan his son from the men of Jabesh-gilead, which had stolen them from the street of [b] Beth-shan, where the Philistines had hanged them, when the Philistines had slain Saul [c] in Gilboa.

13 And he brought up from thence the bones of Saul and the bones of Jonathan his son; and they gathered the bones of them that were hanged.

14 And the bones of Saul and Jonathan his son [d] buried they in the country

These were able and determined to resist, and could not be subdued without apparent danger and difficulty; while the inoffensive Gibeonites might be oppressed with ease, and apparent safety. Perhaps he disliked them the more, for being peculiarly devoted to the service of the priests and the sanctuary; and attempted to destroy them when he slew the priests: (Notes, 1 Sam. 22:9—19.) but it does not appear, that many of them dwelt at Nob; and neither they, nor the Levites are mentioned in that transaction. Nor could it have been said, had the slaughter been made by Doeg on that occasion, that "Saul sought to slay them in his zeal for the children of Israel and Judah." It seems that Saul's relations also were disposed to cruelty, and concurred in this bloodshed; and that many Israelites had willingly assisted in the persecution.—The violation of the oath of God, the treachery of Israel towards the Gibeonites, and the murder of them, formed an enormous load of national guilt, which had never been expiated by the punishment of the guilty: and it pleased God in this manner, and so long after, to proceed against the nation for it; to shew them his abhorrence of such crimes; to teach rulers to keep at a distance from similar offences themselves, and to punish them in others; and to intimate that the chief punishment of sin is after the death of the offender. And God informed David of the cause of the visitation; that he might take proper measures for expiating the national guilt. (Notes, Num. 35:31—34. Deut. 21:1—9.)

V. 4—7. As God accepted the expiation here demanded, we must suppose, that both the inquiry of David, and the answer of the Gibeonites, were directed by some open or secret intimation from him. They did not demand their own liberty, or any accession of wealth, or the death of any other Israelite: but that, in the character of the avengers of the blood of their brethren, they might be permitted to put to death seven of Saul's descendants; whom they would "hang up unto the LORD," as a sacrifice to his justice, and an example to others not to injure or oppress them. They were willing to undertake the trouble and to bear the odium of the execution; and would do it in Saul's own city, for a warning to those who had witnessed or assisted in the oppression.—As David consented to this measure in obedience to God, and for the public welfare, and not out of private resentment; he did not violate his oath to Saul: (Notes, 1 Sam. 24:16—22.) but as he could spare one at least of Saul's descendants, his covenant, and his oath of sacred friendship with Jonathan, required the preservation of his son in preference to all the rest.

V. 8. "The five sons of Michal," here mentioned, seem to have been the children of her sister Merab, whom Michal had adopted, and brought up as her own. (1 Sam. 18:19.)—This Barzillai is called "the Meholathite;" to distin-

V. 9—14. As these persons were hung up by the express appointment of God, for an anathema, an accursed thing, a national atonement to divine justice; they were left on the tree or gibbet, till some tokens of the Lord's reconciliation were afforded by seasonable rains. (Note, Deut. 21:22,23.) They were not considered to be within the meaning of the law, against the bodies of malefactors being left on a tree all night: for that statute meant, that those, who were put to death for breaking human laws, should not be treated as "accursed of God." Indeed he may command that, in a particular case, which he prohibits in general: provided it be not intrinsically unjust. He ordered the children to be put to death for the parents' crimes, though magistrates in general were forbidden to do it: and in like manner he might require this treatment of these dead bodies, though, in some respects, contrary to the general rule.—Rizpah improperly fed and indulged her grief by a useless attention to the dead bodies: yet her case was truly pitiable, and her patient, self-denying natural affection extraordinary. David doubtless sympathized with the bereaved and aged parent; and gladly embraced the opportunity, as soon as it was proper, of relieving her from her melancholy charge, by decently interring them, together with the bones of Saul and his other sons: and by this he avowed that he had not acted out of disrespect to Saul or his family. (Notes, 2:5—7. 1 Sam. 31:11—13.)—The first rain was a token of reconciliation: but after the expiation was finished, the scarcity was removed in answer to prayer; and doubtless the Gibeonites joined, in seeking "this blessing for the inheritance of the LORD." (3)

V. 15—22. (Marg. Ref.) All these events seem to have occurred, in the order here related, and towards the latter end of David's reign. The Philistines, though frequently vanquished, were not totally subjugated: and the remains of the Anakims, of enormous size and strength, gave David and his servants, not only an opportunity of signalizing their courage, but repeated proofs of the Lord's truth and goodness.—David himself was on one occasion, in imminent danger of death, by the hands of Ishbi-benob, who seems to have been Goliath's son, (as indeed do the others here mentioned,) and probably aimed to revenge his father's death: and David's life was deemed too valuable to Israel to be any more exposed, now that his strength and activity began to fail him. For, as king, prophet, and psalmist, he was the "light of Israel," and a type of "the Light of the world." (Notes, 18: 3. 23:3,4.)

Six fingers, &c. (20) Other instances of this peculiarity are recorded by historians; and the author has been informed, by most indisputable testimony, of one such who is now living.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Every affliction arises from sin, and should excite us to repentance: but some troubles loudly proclaim that they were especially sent to "bring sin to remembrance." (Note, 1 Kings 17:18.) In this case, we prolong our sufferings by neglecting self-examination, and prayer to the Lord to shew us in what we have offended, if the cause be not already plain to our consciences: and, however reluctant, we must submit to this, before we can expect relief from his mercy.—While the grand outlines of the Lord's government are evidently righteous, some of his judgments are far too deep for us: but faith believes those appointments to be just, which assume a different appearance, and waits for the more complete display of the glory of God in them.—By the punishment of children for the sins of their parents, and of subjects for those of their princes, even after their death, he marks his abhorrence of destructive crimes, gives a check to enormous wickedness, and teaches us to pray for our rulers, and to deny our passions out of love to our offspring: and he will so arrange the whole, that no individual shall in the event have cause to complain of injustice.—That our guilty land should experience successive years of plenty, calls for admiring gratitude; and we need not wonder, if our misused abundance should be punished with as great a scarcity. Yet when a scarce season occurs, how few are disposed to inquire of the Lord, concerning the sinful cause; while the ingenuity of numbers is employed in discovering the second causes, by which he is pleased to work; and the impatience and malignity of multitudes are expressed by outrages against those who are, generally without cause, charged with being the authors of the calamity!—The Lord will plead for those who cannot or will not avenge themselves; and the prayers of the poor, either for or against us, are of very great efficacy. The blood of nobles is not an adequate, though the only required and accepted atonement, to expiate the guilt of the murder of the meanest person, in order that the wrath of God may be averted from the land: and violated oaths and covenants will be severely punished, either in this world or the next, let the criminal be ever so highly exalted among his fellow-creatures.—Our zeal, either for the public good or the supposed cause of religion, is naturally exercised in a perverse manner, and as if in contempt of God's commandments: but an apparently easy and safe exertion, which consists with our self-indulgence, and flatters our pride and lusts, is the temptation which prevails against us, unless the grace of God teach us a better way.—Little do we know what may befal our children, or what anguish they may occasion us: but if we educate them in the fear of God, and commit them to his keeping, he will either exempt us from heavy trials about them, or else support us under them. In every case resignation to the will of God is our duty and interest; and whatever cherishes inordinate grief, is sinful, rebellious, and tormenting, however specious its appearance.—All personal respects must yield to the command of God: yet, in subordination to it, a tribute of gratitude is due to the memory of our friends, and of respect to our civil governors.—While we are able, we ought to venture and labor for the public welfare; but we cannot exceed our appointed measure of service: and when bodily vigor fails, some are so useful by their counsels, prayers, and examples, that their lives should be taken care of as a public blessing.—Strength and courage often increase men's pride; but far more frequently hasten, than retard, the stroke of death; the unexpected approach of which miserably causes all their vain thoughts to perish.—The valor and affection of friends should be acknowledged; and the strongest need the assistance of the more feeble: but the glory of every thing belongs to God.—Through the atonement of Jesus who performed all that was commanded, and through his intercession, the Lord is willingly entreated for sinners: and the believer, having peace with God, needs not fear the stoutest foe who defies Israel; for though sometimes he be in apparent danger, he will at length be made "more than conqueror, through him who loved" and died for sinners.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXII. V. 1. It is probable, that this song of praise was composed early in the reign of David, and soon after he was finally delivered from the persecuting rage of Saul. Perhaps it stands in this place, as it was found among those compositions, which David used in his private devotions: and in the book of Psalms, as it was corrected and delivered to the chief singer, to be sung in the public service of the sanctuary, from time to time, on occasions of recent deliverances, as well as in remembrance of former mercies. (Ps. 18: title.) The variations are immaterial; though the Jewish writers enumerate no less than seventy-four. Few of them, however, need be here particularly noted. (Note, Ps. 18: 1.)—The first verse, of this chapter, forms the title of the eighteenth psalm, with some alterations; the most remarkable of which is, the insertion of the words, "The servant of the LORD," in which it seems, the Psalmist deemed himself more honored, than in being a renowned conqueror, and a very prosperous king.—He had had many enemies, both among his own people and the surrounding nations: but Saul especially is mentioned, as having been more formidable, malicious, and unwearied than any of them.—In the whole of this sacred hymn, David seems immediately to celebrate providential deliverances: yet he uses language, which may fairly be accommodated to spiritual blessings. He appears also primarily to speak of the Lord's dealings with himself: yet he was led by the prophetic Spirit to utter many things, which may with great propriety be applied to the Redeemer's sufferings and victories, of whom David was an evident and remarkable type. (Notes, Ps. 2: 22: 1. 40:1—5. 69:1—3. 88:1,2.)

V. 2, 3. The eighteenth psalm abruptly begins, "I will love thee, O LORD, my Strength;" perhaps these words were added, when it was made public, as an expression of David's exulting gratitude, in order to kindle the devotions of the people. (Note, Ps. 18:1.)—The accumulation of metaphors here used, as descriptive of David's expectations from God, which had been fully answered, denotes, that those energetic figures of speech, which commonly exceed the bounds of exact truth, are too feeble to express what God is to his believing people, and what he does for them. (Note, 2 Cor. 4:13—18.) He is a Rock, on which securely to build their confidence; a Refuge, in which to shelter themselves from every foe, and in every trouble: a Fortress and a strong Tower, which are formed by human art and labor, to supply the want of the natural fortifications of rocks and mountains, or to increase the security which they afford: a Shield to ward off every hostile assault; and a Horn with which to push and prostrate every assailant. (Notes, Ex. 17:5,6. Deut. 32:4,15,30, 31. 1 Sam. 2:1,2.) For the LORD is a Deliverer, a Savior, and Salvation, from every evil and danger, to which the believer is exposed, who cannot but be safe and comfortable, when exercising faith in him.—Several expressions, as "The God of my rock," and "the Horn of my salvation," seem to refer to the person of the Redeemer, "God manifested in the flesh," become the Salvation of his people, and in human nature displaying divine power and authority in the redemption of believers, and the destruction of their enemies. (Notes, Ps. 27:1—3. Is. 12:2. 45:15—17. Matt. 1:20,21. Luke 2:25—32. Tit. 2:13. 3:4—7.)

V. 4. 'The πανοπλια' (whole armor) 'of a soldier does him no service, except he put it on to defend himself, and offend his enemy; so, no protection or help from God is to be expected, ... unless we apply ourselves to him by prayer.' Strigelius in Bp. Patrick. (Note, Ps. 116:2.)

V. 5, 6. These verses contain a figurative and poetical description of the violence of David's enemies, and the imminent danger to which he was exposed. Death seemed ready to swallow him up, as the waves of the sea overwhelm those who are cast into them, and encompassed by them. (Notes, Jon. 2:1—7.) Multitudes of wicked men, pressed upon him with incumbent force, like the rising floods from which there appears no deliverance: nay, the temptations of Satan, and the consciousness of his sins, filled him with fears of wrath, and dreadful apprehensions of future consequences: and he felt like a malefactor bound for execution, whose fetters prevent him from attempting an escape, for whose body the grave has certainly opened her mouth, and who is horribly alarmed lest the pit of hell should swallow up his soul. In short, he was like the helpless bird caught in the fowler's snare, and doomed to inevitable death. (Marg. Ref.)—In this he was a type of Christ our King, when agonizing in the garden; when he endured the severest tortures, the pangs of death, the temptations of Satan, yea, the wrath of God against our sins; and was at the same time surrounded by the insulting scribes, priests, and people. (Notes, Ps. 18:4,5. 40:1—5.)

V. 7—16. When every other hope failed, the Psalmist simply and earnestly sought help from God; whose manifested presence, in the sanctuary above the mercy-seat, represented his tabernacling in human nature, as "God our Savior;" and our access to him on a throne of grace; (Note, Ex. 25:10—21.) as well as his exalted display of his glorious presence in his holy temple in heaven. Thither the prayers of David ascended, and thence they were answered in a most effectual manner.—As we are not informed, that the Lord delivered David, with the external displays of his power here mentioned; it is supposed that he adorned his sacred poem with sublime images, taken from the history of Israel in Egypt, at the Red Sea, at mount Sinai, in the wilderness, and in the conquest of Canaan; and 17 He [m] sent from above; he took me; [n] he drew me out of * many waters;

18 He [o] delivered me from my strong enemy, and from them that hated me: for they were too strong for me.

19 They [p] prevented me in the day of my calamity; but [q] the LORD was my stay.

20 He [r] brought me forth also into a large place: he delivered me, because he [s] delighted in me. [Practical Observations.]

22 For [x] I have kept [y] the ways of the LORD, and [z] have not wickedly departed from my God.

thus intimated, that the deliverances vouchsafed to him were as honorable to God, as those which of old he had wrought for his people, though effected in a different manner. The earthquake, and the shaking of the foundations of the heavens, the smoke, the fire, and the darkness, into which the Lord came down, and in which he majestically dwelt, with several other expressions, lead our thoughts to mount Sinai. (Notes, Ex. 19:16—20. 20:18—20.) His "riding upon a cherub," and "his flying on the wings of the wind," denote the ministration of angels, and the speed with which he effected the deliverance of his servant. (Notes, Gen. 3:22—24. Ps. 104:4. Ez. 1:4—25. 10:1—22. 11:22—25.) "The coals of fire kindled" at his presence, may indicate, that the wrath of God arms all creatures against his enemies, or that it will consume them as fuel is consumed by the fire. Other circumstances recal to our remembrance the dividing of the Red Sea, and of the river Jordan; the destruction of the Canaanites, when the hailstones destroyed more than the sword of Israel; and that of the Philistines, when the Lord thundered upon them and discomfited them. And the whole declared, that the indignation of the Lord, against the enemies of his servant, equalled his displeasure against those adversaries of his people; and that their consternation and destruction were no less, than that of the others had been.—Here David was eminently the type of Christ; and the figurative language, used by him, was in many respects exactly accomplished in the preternatural convulsions attending our Lord's death and resurrection. (Notes, Ps. 18:6—15. Matt. 27:51—53. 28:1—8.)

V. 17, 18. The providential interposition of God, in delivering David from his strongest enemy, when he was ready to devour him, was like sending from heaven on purpose to take him out of great waters, into which he must otherwise have sunk and perished. (Notes, Ps. 124:4—8 Lam. 3:52—57.) For his enemies were too strong for him, and therefore his preservation was evidently the work of God.—Goliath and Saul, and other enemies were perhaps intended by the Psalmist: but the victory of Christ over "death and him that has the power of death," was prefigured.

V. 19. When David had framed any plan, for secreting or securing himself "in the day of his calamity," his enemies employed every method of treachery and malice to prevent his success. Thus the men of Keilah were ready to deliver him to Saul, and the Ziphites repeatedly informed of him: (Notes, 1 Sam. 23:9—13,19—28. 26:1,2.) and therefore, notwithstanding his own prudence and activity, he must have been cut off, if the Lord himself had not protected him, by his own immediate and extraordinary interposition.

V. 20. David had been straitened in dens and caves, as in a prison, and was afraid to go abroad in the open air: but now, through the divine goodness, he might walk at liberty, according to his own inclination. The words may also refer to the extent of his dominions, and the greatness of his prosperity, compared with his former difficulties. (Notes, Ps. 31:7,8. 118:5. 142: title. 6,7.) All this the Lord had done for him, "because he delighted in him," as the object of his special love, and a partaker of his sanctifying grace; and as, in the general tenor of his conduct, "a man after his own heart." (Note, Ps. 22:7,8.)

V. 21—28. David's character had been grievously aspersed, and many heinous things laid to his charge: but his conduct had been upright and conscientious in an uncommon degree. In all his persecutions by Saul, he would not in any way, or on any account, injure him or his party; nay he embraced every occasion to serve the cause of Israel, though rewarded by envy, treachery, and ingratitude: and in his other ca lamities, he was hated without a cause, and was ever ready to overcome evil with good. Under every trial he stedfastly adhered to the worship of the Lord: and from fear and love of his name, he continued to act with equity, candor, and kindness to man; unreservedly and uprightly making the commandments of God his rule, and the glory of God his aim, in the habitual course of his conduct. In these respects he could "rejoice in the testimony of his conscience;" and confidently appeal to the Searcher of all hearts: and every providential deliverance was both a gracious recompense, and a divine attestation to his innocence, from those crimes of which his enemies accused him; and a declaration that his cause was more righteous than theirs.—He mentioned particularly, "That he had kept himself from his own iniquity;" from those sins, to which he was most strongly tempted; especially, he would by no means be induced to injure Saul, to which his circumstances powerfully tempted him.—He had indeed committed many sins, and some of them were very grievous; and he was conscious of manifold imperfections, (which the review of the book of Psalms will sufficiently demonstrate;) but he neither denied, excused, or persisted in them: on the contrary, he had been deeply humbled for them; and he was in that respect also conscious of his uprightness. This profession, therefore, did not relate to David's "justification in the sight of God;" nor was it intended as a vindication of every part of his conduct, as not needing forgiveness. (Notes, Ps. 130:3,4. 143:2.) But it was the same consciousness of general integrity, which every true believer possesses, and may on some occasions vow, as an answer to unmerited reproach, consistently with the deepest humility, and the most entire dependence on the mercy and grace of God through Jesus Christ. (Notes, 2 Cor. 1:12—14. 1 Thes. 2:9—12. 1 John 3:18—24.) And the gracious recompense, of which David spoke, may be generally expected by those, who act conscientiously in the sight of God, from right moves. This accords to his method of dealing with mankind, and especially with his professed worshippers. If he sees them humble, sincere, teachable. watchful, loving, pure, and obedient in their general conduct; he will be merciful and kind to them, and will fulfil his promises, and communicate his holy consolations, to them: but if he sees them dissembling or perverse, "he will wrestle with them." He will likewise save those who are poor in spirit, and suffer persecution for his sake; but with his wrath he will frown upon proud oppressors to bring them down. (Marg. Ref. k, l.)—It should be remembered, that David, in these things, was a type of Christ, to whom many of the expressions here used are applicable in the fullest sense, and to him alone.

Wilt shew thyself unsavory. (27) תִּתַּפָּל: "wilt wrestle." (Marg.) The rendering in the text is as if the word were formed from תָּפֵל, insulsum, insipidum. But no verb is formed from that root in any other part of the Bible.—In the parallel passage, (Ps. 18:26 or 27.) the word is תִּתְפַּתָּל; (from פָּתַל pervertere, luctari;) and it is generally supposed that the same is intended, though rather differently modified. Indeed the translation in this place gives no intelligible meaning.—Μετα στρεβλου στρεβλωθηση. Sept.

V. 29, 30. David's way had been intricate, dangerous, and gloomy; but the presence and favor of the Lord was a Lamp unto him, marking out his path, and cheering him as he walked in it. (Notes, Ps. 27:1—3. 84:11,12. John 8:12.) By his help also he had singly broken through whole armies of his enemies, and leaped over every wall which obstructed his escape or success. (Notes, Ps. 18:28,29.) Many of the verbs, in different parts of the Psalm, are future in the original: probably, as expressing David's previous believing expectations, to which the subsequent events corresponded; and thus turned the language of hope into that of thanksgiving.

V. 31—33. From experience the Psalmist could testify, that the word of God was in every case a sufficient security: as all the methods of providence and grace towards him had been ordered in perfect wisdom, justice, truth, and goodness. None else could be in any degree depended on, for JEHOVAH is God alone. (Notes, 2,3. Deut. 32:4.) They who trusted and served him were perfectly safe: and whatever stedfastness and integrity David had before spoken of, as marked in his own conduct, all the glory belonged unto God, by whose strength he had been upheld and preserved from falling.

V. 34, 35. As hinds climb the craggy rocks, and stand firm upon the slippery summit of the precipice; so David had been upheld in the most dangerous and slippery paths, and advanced to his present exalted station, by the providence and grace of God: (Notes, Deut. 33:24,25. Hab. 3:17—19.) and his extraordinary skill and strength in war must be ascribed to the same cause.—The word (נְחוּשָׁה) rendered steel, generally signifies copper, or brass, of which the ancients frequently made arms: though bows, requiring elasticity, could not well be made of it.

ed with his merciful forgiveness, encouragements, and deliverances, like the gentle tuition of a kind parent, tended to prepare David for prosperity and authority, and to advance him to them.

V 37—42. The meaning of these verses, as applied to David, wants no other explanation than the preceding history, implying his believing anticipations, fully verified by the event. But they are peculiarly descriptive of the Redeemer's conflicts and victories, and especially of the inevitable destruction which came upon the Jews, and the disgraceful dispersion of the degraded remnant of that nation, for crucifying the Lord of glory, and rejecting the gospel. They cried and still cry to the Lord to save them; but refusing to obey his beloved Son, he vouchsafes them no answer.—Thus David's enemies, in their extreme distress, are represented as crying to the Lord for deliverance from impending ruin; but, as they did it not in repentance, faith, and integrity, it was in vain. Thus Saul inquired of the Lord, and he answered him not. (Notes, 1 Sam. 28:6. 1 Chr. 10:13,14.)

V. 43—51. This conclusion may be explained of David's victories over his rebellious countrymen, and the surrounding nations; and of the desolations made among them. These he might consider as the earnest of still more decisive advantages; till the spirits of all his adversaries should fail, and their strength decay: and the strongest of them should tremble even in their fastnesses and fortified cities, and surrender themselves to him to be his servants upon the first summons. (Marg. Ref.)—But here the Spirit of inspiration seems especially to have carried his mind forward to the glorious kingdom of the Redeemer, the destruction of all his enemies, and the prevalency of his cause on earth. And while he concluded with the high praises of God, and exulting joy in him; he looked forward to his posterity, and rejoiced in the prospect of the blessings reserved for them, not only as kings of Judah for many successive generations; but also in Christ, the anointed King of the church and of the world for evermore, yea, even for ever and ever. (Note, Ps. 18:49.)

Submit themselves. (45) Or, yield feigned obedience. Heb. lie. (Marg.) May not this expression, which occurs in many Psalms prophetical of the Messiah's kingdom, be considered as a prediction of that influx of hypocrites into the church, especially in and after the days of Constantine, in consequence of the astonishing external displays of the Redeemer's power, in the first ages? From this time formal Christians, who lie in their profession, have been exceedingly multiplied. (Note, Ps. 66:1—3.)—The God of the Rock of my salvation. (47) This remarkable expression may well call to mind, what may be considered as 'the style of the 'New Testamant,' "The God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ." (Note, 2 Cor 1:1—7, v 3.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—20.

When we have received mercies from God, ve ought, without delay, to render him our trib- ıte of praise and gratitude; every recent favor hould be acknowledged with thankful remem- ›rance of former deliverances; and signal in- erpositions of the Lord in our behalf ought to ›e publicly celebrated, with the best endow- nents which we possess.—They who know the ord in his glorious perfections, and the various elations in which he stands to his rational crea- ures, and especially as "a God of salvation;" nd who thus learn to fear, trust, love and serve im, choosing him as their Portion, and waiting or his mercy unto eternal life, through Jesus hrist, and according to the covenant which he nediated, may expect from him every conceiv- ble blessing. Nay, words can never express, or the creation itself afford objects sufficient represent, all that the Lord is and will be nto them, through time and to eternity. The ore they expect and ask from him in humble ith, the larger blessings shall they receive; hile past experiences will encourage and dic- ate further supplications. But while this felici- belongs to all true believers; yet frequently oth the events of Providence, and their inward xperience, seem to indicate the contrary. hey are assailed by powerful enemies, and ex- osed to manifold troubles and dangers, from ithout; they are often disquieted by distressing ears and terrors of conscience, from within; hile Satan pours in his horrible suggestions to ggravate their distress, and to urge them to espair. Thus they feel, as it were, the very pains of hell," and are so bound in the snares f death, that they are ready to give up their ves and souls for lost. But in their extreme istress they cry unto the Lord with the great- st earnestness, and he supports them, and ppears for their relief: so that all their sor- ows and fears shall terminate in the more onspicuous display of the glory of God's per- ctions, and in the evidence of his special love to them: all shall exercise and increase their race, prepare the way for future comforts, and ecome the subject of triumphant praise and hanksgiving; and however painful their feel- ngs are at present, the retrospect shall hereaf- r be delightful.—When therefore temptations nd tribulations abound, and our prayers are ingled with groans and fears, with dismay and nguish of spirit; let us not despond, but be of ood courage: for we shall certainly bless God r them ere long, as many before us have done r similar or severer trials. Without a renewal the miraculous displays, with which Israel of d was favored, the true believer, comparing s dangers, fears, prayers, and deliverances, ay be as firmly assured, that the Lord has rought for him, as that he wrought for that fa- ored people: and that he has not only made his ngels, and other creatures, the ministers of od to him; but that his own hand has effected e surprising change which he has experienced, his condition, character, hopes, and prospects. Nor are the judgments of God less terrible w on the enemies of his people, than they ere, when the earth swallowed them up, the pths of the sea overwhelmed them, or the fire the Lord consumed them: though they are ss noticed, because more spiritual, and chiefly xecuted in the eternal world. For still the hole creation fights against his enemies, yea, s own almighty arm is lifted up to destroy em, as well as to deliver those who trust in m.

V. 21—33.

Under reproaches and persecutions, the testi- mony of our conscience, to our integrity and sincerity in our religious profession, "not of fleshly wisdom, but by the grace of God," will prove a singular support: and it perfectly con- sists with the deepest humility and the most sim- ple dependence upon the Savior. Nor can we without it expect the witness of the comforting Spirit of God. We should therefore "exercise ourselves to have a conscience void of offence towards God and man:" and, earnestly seeking supporting and sanctifying grace, we should steadily persevere in the path of duty, rejecting every temptation to seek relief by forsaking it. —We must keep all God's statutes and judg- ments before our eyes, without one exception, that we may regulate our conduct and conver- sation by them; and we must watch and pray especially against those sins which, by consti- tution, custom, or circumstances, may be called "our own iniquity." If this be our aim and practice, the Lord will plead our cause, and clear up our characters in due season. For he will deal with us, according as we walk before him in humility and sincerity, or the contrary; both with respect to the dispensations of his providence, and the consolations of his Spirit.— In the darkest seasons the Lord will guide and comfort those who trust in and follow him: and of the very many millions, who have tried his word, none ever complained that he was un- faithful; but all have been so assisted, that they have at length wondered at what the Lord had enabled them to do, as well as what he had done for them. Without him all other helpers are vain; and with him they are needless, ex- cept as he pleases to work by them as his in- struments of good to us.

V. 34—51.

All our talents and abilities are from God, and all our improvement of them: whatever ser- vices we have performed, or however consistent our walk has been, the will and the power have been from him: "He is our Strength, who maketh our way perfect." Ability and success in our spiritual warfare, liberty from sin and Satan, enlargement of heart in the service of our God, and preservation in the slippery paths of this ensnaring world, are causes for thankful- ness, and not for glorying in ourselves. His gentle rebukes and corrections tend to real ad- vancement, as much as our comforts and pros- perity do. (Note, Heb. 12:9—11.) Armed with the shield of salvation and "the sword of the Spirit," the Christian soldier, being "strong in the LORD," will pursue his victories, till he has trodden upon the necks of all his enemies, and received the conqueror's crown. (Notes, Rom. 8:35—39. Eph. 6:10—17.) For "the LORD liveth," as the God of strength and salvation, and will never leave us nor forsake us, till he has brought us forth from all our enemies, and lifted us up on high, above all that rose up against us. In the prospect of that complete salvation, let us joyfully praise him on the field of battle, surrounded with our enemies, and in the midst of our conflicts: and ere long we shall adore him, and sing praises to his name in more exalt- ed strains, surrounded with millions of the re- deemed, and innumerable multitudes of holy angels, who will triumph in our victories, and re- joice in our felicity.—But we may here likewise meditate upon the Redeemer's sufferings, and the glory which was to follow, and which has fol- lowed, and shall still far more be displayed: for our sins he was encompassed with the waves of death, the floods of ungodly men, and the very sor- rows of hell, in the garden and on the cross. his distress he called upon the Lord, and was heard, and raised from the dead, and exalted to the throne of glory: while his death was attended by the most stupendous displays of the divine indignation, against those who perpetrated that most atrocious crime. In him the Father delighted: his righteousness was perfect, yea, divine: he was justified from the blasphemies of his enemies by his resurrection and ascension. All power in heaven and earth are in his hands: all enemies shall be put under his feet, and he will destroy all who hate him. He has been "delivered from the strivings of the people, and made the Head of the heathen:" he continually receives the submissions of those who hear of him, and willingly obey him; while many who have no love for him, profess submission to him from fear of his power: but all opposition shall at length melt away before him, and all nations shall do him service. For he is the anointed King, whom the Father has exalted, and his kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him: (Dan. 7:27. Note, Rev. 11:15—18.) may we then accept of his salvation, and submit to his authority; may we now follow him bearing our cross; that, when he shall appear to judgment, we also may "receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away."

NOTES.

CHAP. XXIII. V. 1, 2. Many things, after this, are recorded concerning the words and actions of David; so that it is not agreed in what sense these were his "last words." Some suppose them to have been the last words which he spoke by inspiration, and, as it were, an appendix to the Psalms which he composed: but perhaps he repeated them in his dying moments, as the expression of his faith and hope, and the source of his consolation. (Notes, Ps. 72:17—20.)—The last words of eminent persons have often been much attended to, and long remembered: and these of David were peculiarly worthy of consideration, as they shewed that this venerable servant of God, when dying, was more than ever assured of the reality and excellency of true religion; decided in his judgment concerning it, and his choice of its blessing; and animated with humble gratitude, and joyful expectation of his approaching felicity.—In the introduction, he mentioned his lowly birth, obscure station, and unexpected exaltation, with thankfulness. God had raised him to a throne, and made him very successful and prosperous: but the most valuable circumstance of his advancement was, that he was the anointed of God, to rule over his own people Jacob, and to be the type of the Messiah. Nor was he less thankful for being made "the sweet Psalmist of Israel;" for being employed and enabled to compose hymns of praise and sacred poems, for the use of his people, and of the church of God, in all future ages; and to set them to music, and provide for the public performance of this delightful part of God's worship. And no wonder that the work was done in so complete a manner; "for the Spirit of the LORD spake by him, and his word was in his tongue." This he declared with his dying lips, that Israel, and that we through successive generations, might learn how to estimate that part of holy Scripture; not so much as the words of David, as of the holy Spirit, which spake by him. (Marg. Ref.—Note, Mark 12:35—37.)

V. 3, 4. "The Spirit of the LORD spake," by David, yea, "the God of Israel spake to him;" and he recorded his words with his own meditations on them.—These verses, explained of David, taught the duties incumbent on him, as king of Israel; how he ought to instruct his son and successor Solomon; and the general character of good and pious magistrates, who are blessings to the people.—"He that ruleth over men" should treat them as reasonable creatures of the same nature with himself: and therefore he "must be just;" oppressing and injuring none, and by an equal administration of justice, restraining them from defrauding or doing wrong to one another; and by his example and influence promoting general equity: "ruling in the fear of God," as accountable to him for the authority deputed to him, and the use which he makes of it, and teaching others to fear God. Rulers of this character may reasonably expect that the Lord will prosper them, and afford them blessings and comforts, like the exhilarating light of the unclouded morning-sun: while their salutary regulations, discountenancing every species of evil, and protecting and advancing every good thing, diffuse the most important advantages, temporal and spiritual, around them; as the rising sun dispels the fogs and damps, and brightens and cheers the face of nature; or as his clear shining, after refreshing showers, rapidly promotes vegetation, and renders the earth luxuriantly fruitful. (Marg. Ref.)—Many expositors, however, interpret the words almost exclusively of Christ; the anointed King of Israel, and the Ruler over the sons of Adam in general. He is indeed just and righteous: he is the Righteousness and Sanctification of his subjects; and both requires and teaches, inclines and enables, them to fear God, and work

V. 5. This verse is supposed to be peculiarly ifficult, and is variously interpreted, generally s relating to the covenant made with David oncerning the kingdom.—But, he seems here to ave turned his reflections from the kingdom of is posterity, and especially that of the Messiah, his own personal concerns, and those of his mily and immediate descendants; and he could ot but regret, that "his house was not so with od," as the preceding statement implied. By s own misconduct, as well as that of others conerned, his family was much less religious and osperous, than it might have been expected; d both he and Israel had suffered many things consequence. Several grievous and scandaus events had occurred: matters were not yet he could wish; and he seems to have had his ars concerning his descendants who should cceed him in the kingdom. Perhaps, by proetical monition, he foresaw, that they would ither be happy themselves, nor blessings to Isel, nor instruments of glorifying God, in that easure which he desired, and had hoped. He wever comforted himself, that "the LORD had ade with him an everlasting covenant." God d indeed covenanted to David that his family ould succeed him in the kingdom; (Notes, 7:8 16. Ps. 89:19—37.) yet this was not "all his lvation and all his desire:" and it could give n comparatively but little consolation in his ing moments, (for these are part of his last rds,) except as it referred to the promised ed, who was to descend from him. By "the erlasting covenant" therefore, David no doubt incipally intended the covenant of mercy and ace, which the Lord had made with him, as one o believed in the promised Savior, and had ielded up himself to be his redeemed servant, d had been made partaker of his sanctifying ace as the seal and pledge of it. (Notes, Is. 55:1-3. Jer. 32:39—41. Ez. 37:25,26. Heb. 13:20,2) This covenant was "from everlasting" in the poses of God, and shall be "to everlasting" in t blessed effects of it. From age to age sinners, hen they accede to it by true faith, are admitt to share its benefits, which believers shall f ever enjoy; and God the Father, the Son, al the Holy Spirit, shall for ever be glorified t ough it, in their salvation. It is made with th Surety, in behalf of those for whom he engged; all the blessings of it were obtained and sured by his atoning blood, and are freely beswed upon all who believe in his name; and it sures to them pardon, righteousness, grace, a "eternal life, as the gift of God through Jesus Christ." It is "ordered in all things:" for in th Person, undertaking, and mediation of the Sior, effectual provision is made for the manifestation of the holiness, the satisfaction of the juice, and the honor of the law of God, and the discovery of the evil and desert of sin. While h mercy abounds in the forgiveness and salvatin of the chief of sinners; there is an infinite fness of grace, and of all blessings, treasured in Christ, for the supply of those who seek for th salvation; a way opened to the mercy-seat of God, in which they may come in humble confidence; ordinances appointed, through which these blessings are communicated; invitations to draw near, and "exceedingly great and precious promises" to plead with God. All those things, which in one respect are commanded, in another are promised; and while we pray for the performance of the promise, we are enabled to obey the command, to repent, to forsake sin, to turn unto God, and to walk in newness of life. This covenant is also "sure" or preserved. (שמרה) It is preserved by the continual intercession of Christ, and the promises, and securities grounded on it. (Notes, Luke 22:31—34. Rom. 5:7—10. 8:32—34. Col. 3:1—4. 1 Pet. 1:3—5. 2 Pet. 1:10,11. Jude 1,2.)—Provision is made for the recovery of those, who have walked inconsistently with it, in the most disgraceful manner: and yet not the least encouragement is given to commit sin, but the most effectual methods are used to deter men from it, and constrain them to all holy obedience. (Note, 1 John 2:1—3.) So that it is "ordered in all things," in such a manner, that no believer can want wisdom, grace, or strength sufficient for him, whatever his conflicts, temptations, or difficulties may be: and he shall either persevere in a uniform course of holy obedience, or be brought to deep and evident repentance of his misconduct, and shall infallibly at length inherit eternal life.—This covenant was "all David's salvation;" for he was so well acquainted with the holy character and law of God, the evil of sin, and his own sinfulness in every thing, that he knew he could not escape condemnation, according to the covenant of works: and he perceived that all things suited to his case, and sufficient for his salvation, were engaged for by it to every believer; and that it was framed in perfect wisdom, so as to honor God, to humble and encourage the sinner, to inspire love and gratitude, to bring him to a holy and happy disposition of mind, and to prepare him for that state of complete felicity, in which all the powers of the human soul shall be eternally satisfied. It was also "all his desire," or delight, as the word is generally rendered: in comparison with it, all earthly objects lost their attractions; he was willing to renounce them, as far as required, for the sake of the blessings of the covenant, his comfort while he possessed them, was derived from it, not from them; and he was willing to die and leave all else, that he might enjoy its full felicity. This he was conscious of: and yet he complained, that matters were not with his soul, any more than with his house, as he could wish; for this seems the meaning of the words, "although he make it not to grow." The grace of the covenant he had received, but it had not been made to increase and flourish, in that measure which he desired. Still the prevalence of sinful propensities, and the weakness of his faith, hope, and love, were his grief and burden. The Lord had not "made them to grow." David did not mean to impeach the wisdom, justice, and goodness of God, who had good reasons for what he withheld, as well as for what he gave; and doubtless David would have allowed that his own inattention and negligence were the criminal cause, why his grace had not more been made to grow. But the hope, that it would ere long be perfected in glory, animated and encouraged him in his dying moments.—Referring this also to the Redeemer, it may be observed, that the kingdom of David's family was not so with God in any other period, as under him: and foreseen by faith, he, as the Surety of the everlasting covenant, was all Da-

V. 6, 7. Those who opposed the authority of David, and afterwards of his descendants, were generally worthless and troublesome characters, and would be certainly rejected and destroyed, as useless thorns are cast into the fire. And those sons of Belial, who will not bear the yoke of Christ, or "have him to reign over them," are injurious to his people; but they bring upon themselves certain destruction. They cannot indeed be "taken with hands," or dealt with by those who are unarmed and unprotected. But in every government, there must be persons, who possess power to apprehend, confine, and punish the disobedient and rebellious; in the same manner, as a man fenced, or completely armed, (marg.) "with iron and the staff of a spear," can thrust the thorns into the fire: and so Christ is able to destroy out of his kingdom all his enemies, and will "make them as a fiery oven in the day of his wrath;" for he can deal with those who, to all others, are utterly unmanageable. (Notes, Ps. 21:8—12. Nah. 1:9, 10.) As the willing subjects of David prospered, but his opposers were crushed; so shall it be with those who submit to the authority of the Redeemer, and those who reject him. (Notes, Matt. 3:11,12. 13:36—43. 2 Thes. 1:5—10.)

V. 8. Under Joab, the chief captain, the persons mentioned in this chapter, were the principal officers in David's army: and as only thirty-six are named, Joab must be added to complete the number thirty-seven. (39) There were two triumvirates; and under them thirty officers, who commanded subdivisions of the troops. Of several of them, and of their exploits, we read nothing elsewhere: so that David's reign and actions were far more splendid, than they appear in the history.—Adino the Tachmonite, is called Jashobeam the Hachmonite. (1 Chr. 11:11.) It is supposed that he had his title from his wisdom, and that he ordinarily presided in councils of war. (חַכְמוֹנִי, from חָכָם wise.)—It is here said that he slew eight hundred men, in Chronicles only three hundred are mentioned: perhaps three hundred were left dead on the spot, and the rest died afterwards; or two different actions are meant, or some trivial mistake has been made. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 9, 10. (Marg. Ref.) When the most of David's army had retired or fled, for fear of the Philistines; he and three of his officers defied them, as Goliath had done the army of Saul: and Eleazar greatly distinguished himself on the occasion; fighting till his hand was weary and clave to his sword. Thus "the LORD wrought a great victory that day," principally by him: and when the people that had fled saw what was done, they rallied again, and shared the spoil of their vanquished enemies.—The divine interposition seems to have been miraculous, in answer to the expectation of faith; as in the case of Jonathan and his armor-bearer. (Notes, Josh. 10:9,10. Sam. 14:6—10,45,46.)

V. 11, 12. In Chronicles this victory seems ascribed to Eleazar, who perhaps was the chief commander, though Shammah most distinguished himself.—The field also is said to have been "full of barley:" perhaps part of it was sown with lei

18 And [r] Abishai, the brother of Joab, the son of Zeruiah, was chief among three. And he lifted up his spear against three hundred, * and slew them, and had the name among three.

19 Was he not most honorable of three? therefore he was their captain: howbeit [s] he attained not unto the first three.

20 And [t] Benaiah the son of Jehoiada, the son of a valiant man of [u] Kabzeel, † who had done many acts, he slew two ‡ lion-like men of Moab: he went down also and [x] slew a lion in the midst of a pit in time of snow:

22 These things did Benaiah the son of Jehoiada, and had the name among three mighty men.

23 He was ‖ more honorable than the thirty, but he attained not to the first three. And David set him ¶ over his guard.

V. 13—17. It is probable, that during the harvest, the Philistines invaded the land of Israel; in order to carry off or destroy the crop, and that David and his men opposed them: and the three captains, of the thirty afterwards mentioned, having come to him in the cave of Adullam, (probably when persecuted by Saul,) assisted him. (Notes, 1 Sam. 22:1,2. Ps. 142: title.) A garrison also of Philistines, at the same time, occupied the outer gate of Bethlehem the city of David.—Some expositors think that David, by wishing for the water of the well of Beth-lehem, meant to stir up his whole band to attempt dispossessing the garrison, and not that his officers alone should attack them. It is more probable, however, that being very thirsty in hot weather, he eagerly desired, and inconsiderately wished, to quench his thirst at that well, the water being remarkably good· and that these brave men, to express their peculiar attachment to him, broke, sword in hand, through the Philistines, and returned to him with some of the water. David however was, on recollection, ashamed of his inordinate desire and rash wish; and, being unwilling to encourage such desperate attempts, he refused to drink of it, but poured it out as a drink-offering unto the Lord. For as it had been procured at the hazard of the lives of these brave officers, he would no more drink of it, than he would drink their blood: "Far be it from me," said he, or "My God forbid it me." (Notes, Ps. 72:14. 116:15.)—"Beth-lehem" signifies the house of bread; and the place was likewise noted for excellent water. There Christ was born, who is the Bread of Life, and who also gives us the Water of Life. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 18—24. (Marg. Ref.) We are not told on what occasions these exploits were performed: but they were done in faith, by the Lord's extraordinary assistance, and for the public good. Asahel seems to have been the third captain in the second triumvirate, though mentioned as one of the thirty, over whom perhaps he presided as captain: for there are thirty names besides his; and only two of the three are named, if he was not the third. (Marg. Ref.—Note, 2:18—23.)

V. 25—39. The names of the captains here enumerated are not exactly the same in Chronicles, but the same persons must be meant. In some instances a trivial variation is made in the spelling; in others, they might be known by more names than one.—The list closes with Uriah, who met with a base reward of his services! Others also are added in Chronicles; but they were not so renowned as these. (Marg. Ref.—Note, 1 Chr. 11:10—47.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—7.

It has been observed by those who intimately converse with persons of genuine piety, that they are uniformly most sensible of the reality and importance of heavenly things, when they consider themselves as very nearly approaching to the eternal world. If discouraged respecting their own interest in the invisible blessings, their assured belief excites the most earnest and distressing anxiety, lest they should come short of them: but when their hope abounds, they exult and triumph, though parting with all below, though oppressed with pain and sickness, and in the very agonies of death! So that many have gone from their dying beds more convinced of the truth and excellency of the gospel by their "last words" and behavior, than by all the arguments which have conclusively been adduced in proof of it.—When we approach this closing scene, it will be useful and pleasant to consider what we originally were, and to inquire what the Lord has done for us, in his providence, and by his grace. The more we have been conformed to the Savior, as bearing his image, and copying his example; and the more we have been treated by the world as he was; the more clearly it will appear that we belong to him. When our endowments have been employed in the service of the church; and our words and works have been such, as evince, that we were "led by the Spirit," and brought forth "the fruits of the Spirit," the review will be comfortable to us, and we shall give the glory to God.—They who stir up and assist their brethren in the exercises of devotion, are peculiarly useful: and the sweet work of praise and thanksgiving, when conducted with solemnity, as springing from lively affections, is an anticipation of heavenly joy, a solace of earthly sorrows, a preparation for every service, most honorable to God, and calculated to give religion an attractive aspect. When by us the Lord excites others to their duty, he speaks to us likewise concerning our own; that we may exemplify by our conduct, in our proper station of life, the rules that we propose to others.—"Those who rule over men" must be reminded on every occasion which occurs, and ought themselves continually to remember, that they are the subjects of God: and in all things responsible to him for their conduct, especially in the exercise of their delegated authority; and are under the most powerful obligations to imitate his equity, maintain his cause, and seek his glory, in all their plans and undertakings. Then will they be happy themselves, and blessings to multitudes, who will praise God for them. The sons of Belial indeed will be the more enraged against their equitable administration, and will create disturbance and vexation: but they should endeavor, and will in some measure be able, to crush and keep them under; though they cannot quite extirpate them.—The best of men, however, reviewing their past conduct, and comparing it impartially with the rule of duty, will see great cause to be humbled, and to mourn over their sins. Neither their hearts nor their houses will be found what they ought to be: but it will be their earnest desire, aim, and prayer, that their families may be the accepted servants of God, without which no outward prosperity will satisfy their minds: and if, through their own negligence, or occasional misconduct, they are otherwise; they will be the more earnest in supplication for them, that they may not perish with the sons of Belial.—Yet in all their troubles, true believers, being conscious that they "have fled for refuge to the hope set before them" in the gospel, and having experienced the power of renewing grace, may rejoice that the Lord "hath made with them an everlasting covenant;" and may meditate with comfort on the rich provisions and firm security of it: and seeing all their salvation there treasured up, and there finding all their desires centre, they may cheerfully bear up under all they feel or fear, and look forward with joyful hope of complete deliverance.—Such, as are in reality partakers of divine grace, will long for more holiness: and those who, in this imperfect state, are satisfied with their present attainments, have no good ground to consider themselves as true Christians.

V. 8—39.

The Lord dispenses all his gifts as he pleases and there are various degrees of eminence and usefulness among able and serviceable men Whether our talents therefore be more or fewer the honor of them belongs to God, and we ought to improve them for the benefit of the Church and of the world, without envying or despising others.—In a good cause we should willingly venture, and endure hardship, even when deserted by those who ought to help us; for the Lord will be our Helper: and we should allow others sometimes to share the advantages, who would not expose themselves with us for the public good.—The habit of wishing and hankering after those things which Providence withholds though natural to us, and often given way to by godly men in an unguarded hour, is indeed a degree of rebellion against the Lord; and it shews the remaining sensuality and selfishness of the heart, and leads to many snares and evils. Upon recollection and experience, a wise man will be ashamed of this folly; and will abstain, not only from unlawful indulgences, but from those also which are inexpedient, and might expose his brethren to temptation and danger.—Were we but as much attached to the person and cause of "the Captain of our salvation," and as much pleased to shew our love and gratitude to him, by doing his will and promoting his honor, as some soldiers have been to a beloved prince or commander; how self-denying, and ready for every service and suffering should we be, and how glad to spend or lay down our lives for his sake! Yet surely, never ruler or captain was of so excellent a character as ours; his commands are all

CHAP. XXIV.

David requires Joab to number the people, who very reluctantly complies, 1—8. Joab delivers in the number to the king, 9. He repents; and being warned by Gad the prophet, and obliged to choose one plague, out of three proposed to him, he fixes on three days' pestilence, 10—14. After seventy thousand had died in Israel, the angel is stayed from destroying Jerusalem, in answer to David's prayer, 15—17. David directed by God, purchases Araunah's threshing-floor, builds an altar, and sacrifices; and the plague is stayed, 18—25.

3 And Joab said unto the king, [g] Now the LORD thy God add unto the people, how many soever they be, an hundred fold, and that the eyes of my lord the king may see it: but why doth my lord the king delight in this thing?

righteous and beneficial, his authority is an inexpressible blessing. The obligations that he has conferred on his soldiers and servants, the love he bears to them, and the honors that he has prepared for the meanest of them, are beyond all computation or conception. The blessings, which he freely bestows, were dearly purchased by him; and for them when rebels and enemies! "Precious in his sight is the death of his saints:" he will expose them to no danger or loss, but for their good; he will comfort them under every suffering; and finally deliver them, and present them and all their services, as an oblation to the glory of God. Under his command, and refreshed by the waters of life which he bestows, we may venture to engage, yea defy, all our adversaries at the greatest disadvantage, and shall be able to turn their own arms upon them. Though not numbered with apostles and prophets, our names and services will be recorded in the book of life; and not a cup of cold water, given for his sake, shall be unrewarded: yea, the willing mind to suffer for him, shall be accepted, as if we had actually laid down our lives in his cause. But, as he has shed his blood for sinners, let all beware of neglecting so great salvation: for the sons of Belial, especially those who reject or pervert his truth, and persecute his people, will be thrust away as thorns into the everlasting fire of hell.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXIV. V. 1, 2. The Israelites had offended God, by their ungrateful and repeated rebellions against David; by not duly profiting under the means employed for the revival of religion; and probably by that pride, luxury, and ungodliness, which generally spring from great prosperity. They had before, in a famine which lasted three years, experienced the effects of the divine displeasure; and it is likely they had not been amended by the correction: (Notes, 21:1—14.) but some think, that the sin immediately intended, was their setting up Absalom for king, and rebelling against David. (Notes, 1 Sam. 8:6—9. Hos. 8:2—4.) This David had cordially forgiven: but it was a national defection from God, which he did not judge it proper to leave unpunished. So that "again the anger of the LORD was kindled against Israel:" and he permitted Satan to tempt and prevail against David, that in chastising him, he might punish them. David's thought and purpose of numbering the people, sprang from his remaining depravity, excited by Satan's suggestions: and as this "was of the LORD," (in the same manner, that it was of him that the Canaanites should be hardened, and that Ahab should be deceived,) he withdrew every internal or external restraint, and left him to follow his own counsels. (Marg. Ref. b.) Thus, by a manner of expression common in Scripture, the Lord is said to have "moved David against Israel;" for certainly this is the most natural construction of the words. (Marg.—Note, 1 Chr. 21:1.) But other passages prove, that the sinful disposition and resolution could not be from God, though he both permitted them, and over-ruled them to accomplish his own wise and righteous purposes: and this example throws light upon the doctrine of God's providential government of the world, and suggests many practical instructions. (Notes, 12:11,12. Gen. 50:20. 1 Kings 22:19—23.)—But what constituted David's sin in numbering the people? Some expositors think it was a contempt of the promise that they should be innumerable; and that they ought not to have been numbered without express command, as in the days of Moses: and others suppose, that David neglected to collect the half shekel a piece for the use of the sanctuary, which should have attended the numbering of them. (Notes, Gen. 13:16. Ex. 30:11—16.) It however seems evident, that pride both induced David to this measure, and rendered it so very displeasing to the Lord. Elated with the prosperity and extent of his dominions, he wished to know, and that others might know, the number of his subjects who were capable of bearing arms. This originated from an ambitious curiosity, and an ostentatious vanity; and probably it was accompanied with a secret complacency in his own good conduct, under whose government Israel had attained this prosperity, and with an improper dependence on the number and valor of his forces. As he was far advanced in life, he probably indulged the idea of having it said, how populous and flourishing a kingdom he had left to his posterity. It is likewise evident, that the chastisement was especially levelled against his pride and ambition. These evils had before been secretly indulged: but the Lord would have restrained them, had he not seen it best to permit them to break forth, both for the people's punishment, and David's deeper humiliation: as a physician permits some disorders to come forward to a crisis, that the cure may be radical; which is more salutary than merely for a time to suspend their effects. (Notes, 2 Kings 20:12—19. 2 Chr. 32:24—33. 2 Chr. 12:1—6.)

V. 3, 4. Joab readily perceived, that David's purpose arose from ambition, and was inconsistent with his character and interest; and that if he persevered to "delight in," or require, "such a thing, it would be a cause of trespass," i. e. of guilt and punishment, "to Israel." (1 Chr. 21:3.) On this occasion he spoke with great reason and temper; expressed much affection both for his prince and country; and even assumed an appearance of piety: and David would have shewn his wisdom, had he yielded to his remonstrances. Yet the king's word prevailed, but "it was abominable to Joab:" (1 Chr. 21:6.) and as he and the captains set about it reluctantly, we may suppose that they did not perform it very exactly. 'It is 'something strange, that Joab should see the dan-'ger of this, and David not think of it; no, not 'when it was so plainly represented to him. But 'the best of men are sometimes very drowsy, and 'apprehend not those things, which plainly appear 'to those who are not so good.' *Bp. V. 5—8. Joab and his assistants began, by numbering the inhabitants of the country, to the east of Jordan; thence they proceeded to the northern part of the land in the borders of Zidon and Tyre; and, passing through the regions to the west of Jordan, they numbered all the men capable of bearing arms, (except the Levites and Benjamites;) having spent almost ten months in accomplishing it! (Marg. Ref.—1 Chr. 21:6.)

Land of Tahtim-hodshi. (6) "Nether land newly inhabited." (Marg.)—It is not known what region is meant; as the name occurs only in this place: probably, it was a tract of low land, which had lately been taken possession of by the Gileadites, in the northern part of the country.

V. 9. The numbers, as stated in Chronicles, are very different from those here given: and in order to reconcile them, it is thought that the regular troops, serving in rotation every month, and amounting to two hundred and eighty-eight thousand, (besides their officers, as it is supposed,) are included in the one account, but not in the other. (Note, 1 Chr. 27:1—15.) If these are added to the men of Israel as here numbered, and a due proportion taken from the men of Judah for their part of this militia, the round numbers will amount to nearly the same in both places.—This is, however, uncertain: and as Levi and Benjamin were not numbered, we may suppose that in other respects the accounts were inaccurate: and it might please God thus to order it, that David at last "might not know the number of the people." (Notes, 1 Chr. 21:2—6. 27:23,24.)—It is remarkable that the Israelites had not multiplied when possessed of Canaan, in any proportion to what they had done during their bondage in Egypt. (Note, Ex. 1:7.)

V. 10. David was not convinced of the evil of his conduct, until he received an account of the numbers which had been rated, and then "his heart smote him;" he became sensible that he had displeased the Lord, and earnestly entreated God to forgive him. (Notes, Ez. 11:17—20. 1 John 3:18—24.)—'When he ordered it, he 'was possessed with other thoughts; and did not 'seriously reflect upon what he had done, till God 'touched his heart with a sense of his guilt after 'the sin was committed.' Bp. Patrick.

V. 11. Literally: "And David arose in the morning; and the word of the LORD was unto the prophet Gad." It is probable, that David had become in some measure sensible of his sin, and had offered his humble confession and supplication to God over night, or in the night; before Gad delivered his message to him in the morning.—Gad was called David's seer, for he had long been employed as the messenger of God to him, and David had paid great regard to his admonitions; (Notes, 1 Sam. 9:6—10. 22:5.) and he also compiled, in part at least, the annals of David's last years. (Note, 1 Chr. 29:29,30.) —Had David's history been written in the manner of modern memoirs, by friends of the deceased; how many things would have been concealed, or thrown into the back-ground! how much palliated! and what eulogiums would have been paid to his excellent and honorable actions. Thus David's character would have appeared more faultless: but his history would have been, in exact proportion, so much the less instructive.

V. 12—14. Though the Lord intended to forgive the sin of his repenting servant, as to his personal concern; yet as it was a public offence, he would correct it in a public manner, by destroying his subjects before his eyes. (Notes, 1,2. 2 Kings 23:26,27. 24:3,4. 2 Chr. 33:12—17.) This would be extremely distressing to him, both because of his affection for them, and because they suffered in consequence of his pride and vain-glorious confidence.—Only three years of famine are proposed in Chronicles: (1 Chr. 21: 12.) but such variations frequently occur, and are probably owing to some trivial errors of transcribers in so long a course of years; especially as the numbers were often distinguished by marks which might the more easily be mistaken.—In this distressing difficulty, David preferred a calamity, which came immediately from God, whose mercies he knew to be very great, to those in which men were concerned; who would have triumphed in the miseries of Israel, and thus have been hardened in their idolatry. He seems also to have chosen the pestilence in preference to the famine, not only because the land had already been visited with one famine of three years' continuance, from which perhaps it was scarcely recovered; and because he and his family would be as much exposed to the pestilence, as the poorest Israelite: but especially that he might continue for a shorter time under the divine rebuke, however severe it might be.—'They that fear the Lord will pre-'pare their hearts, and humble their souls in his 'sight, saying, We will fall into the hands of the 'LORD, and not into the hands of men: for as his 'majesty is, so is his mercy.' Ecclesiasticus 2:17, 18. (Heb. 10:31.)

V. 15, 16. "The time appointed" may mean either, the close of the third day: or, as it is more probable, the appointed hour of the evening-sacrifice on the first day. For "the LORD repented him of the evil," which implies, that he did not proceed to the extent of the judgment denounced. Yet on this supposition seventy thousand died in the different parts of the land, in about as few hours, as Joab had employed months in numbering the people; and this apparently by the ministration of a single angel! (Notes, Ex. 12:29,30. 2 Kings 19:35. Heb. 11: 28.) 'If it' (the pestilence) 'had raged three 'days, and in every nine hours had killed so 'many, above a third part of those who had been 'numbered, would have died by this plague: but 'as Kimchi here observes, by the great mercy of 'God, the time was contracted.' Bp. Patrick. (Notes, Num. 16:45—50. 1 Cor. 10:6—10.)

V. 17. Probably, the angel had before been invisible: but at length "David lifted up his eyes, and saw the angel of the LORD stand between the earth and the heaven, having a drawn sword in his hand, stretched out over Jerusalem. Then David and the elders of Israel, who were clothed in sackcloth, fell upon their faces." 1 Chr. 21:16,17. The "drawn sword" was an emblem of the divine justice about to be executed upon the city. David had before humbled himself in the sight of God, and no doubt, had earnestly interceded for the people; but this sight affected him more than ever: and, while he and the elders prostrated themselves upon the ground, he poured out his soul before God in fervent prayer for his subjects, and especially for Jerusalem. He pleaded, that "it was he who had commanded the people to be numbered," that "he had sinned, and done evil indeed:" and entreated that, as the whole blame belonged to him, so the indignation might cease in the punishment of him and his family. His guilt indeed occasioned the judgment: but the people were far from that innocency which David supposed; for their wickedness was in reality the cause of the calamity. (Note, 1,2.) His intercession however prevailed: and it was doubtless in answer to his prayer, that the Lord said to the destroying angel, "It is enough: stay now thine hand."

king and his servants coming on toward him: and Araunah went out, and [y] bowed himself before the king on his face upon the ground.

21 And Araunah said, [z] Wherefore is my lord the king come to his servant? and David said, [a] To buy the threshing-floor of thee, to build an altar unto the LORD, that [b] the plague may be stayed from the people.

22 And Araunah said unto David, [c] Let my lord the king take and offer up what seemeth good unto him: behold here be [d] oxen for burnt-sacrifice, and threshing-instruments, and other instruments of the oxen for wood.

V. 18—25. (Note, 1 Chr. 21:18—25, v. 20.) Araunah, or Ornan, though a Jebusite by birth, seems to have been cordially attached to the interests of David and of Israel; and was permitted to possess a threshing-floor, and some contiguous estate, near mount Zion. On that very spot the angel of the Lord appeared, and thence spake to Gad, (16. 1 Chr. 21:18.) that he should order David to build an altar there; whose ready obedience afforded Araunah an opportunity of shewing his veneration for the king, his affection for Israel, and his liberality in the service of God and for the public advantage. With a generosity like that of a king, he was ready to give David the oxen, threshing-floor, and all that appertained to it, that he might offer the appointed sacrifices: but David did not think it right to accept of them as a gift: and therefore he gave him fifty shekels of silver for the oxen and the wood, and six hundred shekels of gold for the ground; for this is the most obvious way of reconciling this account with that in Chronicles. (1 Chr. 21:25.) There the sacrifices were offered, and "the LORD answered by fire from heaven;" (Notes, Lev. 9:24. 1 Kings 18:38,39. 1 Chr. 21:26. 2 Chr. 7:1—3.) and the plague was stayed. On this very spot, bought of a Gentile, the temple was soon after built, no doubt, by the express command of God. (Note, 1 Chr. 22:1.—2 Chr. 3:1.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.
V. 1—9.

In the righteous government of God, rulers and their subjects have a reciprocal influence on one another. Like the members in the human body, they are interested in each other's conduct and welfare; and cannot sin or suffer without being mutually affected.—When the wickedness of nations provokes God, he leaves princes to adopt pernicious measures, or to commit atrocious crimes, which bring calamities on the people: and when the ruler commits iniquity, he is punished by the diminution of his power, and by witnessing the distresses of his subjects. Instead therefore of mutual recriminations under public calamities, however occasioned, all parties should be reminded to repent of their own sins, and to practise their own duties. Princes should hence be instructed, even for their own sakes, to repress wickedness, and to promote righteousness in their dominions, as well as to set a good example: and the people, for the public benefit, should concur in salutary measures, and pray continually for their rulers.—The remains of sin live, and will often revive, in the best of men, as long as they continue in this world: and the wisest are soon induced to do very foolishly, when God leaves them to themselves, and permits Satan to tempt them: and against this there is no security, except humble watchfulness and unceasing prayer.—Pride, in all its varied exercises, is the sin of fallen man, as well as of fallen angels: it is the substance of spiritual wickedness, the rival and enemy of the glory and authority of God, and equally averse to the submissive obedience of the law, and the sovereign grace of the gospel. (Notes, Dan. 4:28—37. Jam. 4:4—6.) Yet this hateful evil mixes with and defiles the best of our services. Even the believer often sacrilegiously assumes to himself the glory which belongs to God; idolatrously confides in himself, or in some creature; ostentatiously courts that admiration and applause, of which the Lord alone is worthy; and becomes vain of those endowments or possessions, which he had no share in procuring, and cannot secure for one hour! Those, who are altogether proud, God will resist and fight against to their destruction: and he will detect and chastise the indulged pride of those who, upon the whole, are humbled before him as mean, sinful creatures, and yet inconsistently value and prefer themselves upon some incidental advantages! (Notes, 2 Kings 20:12—15. 2 Cor. 12:1—6.) Through this hateful principle it comes to pass, that we so readily can spy a mote in our brother's eye, and yet remain unconscious of a beam in our own: so that even ungodly men can discern those evil tempers and that unbecoming conduct in eminent believers, to which themselves are insensible! (Note, Matt. 7:3—5.) This should warn Christians to walk circumspectly, lest their mistakes should encourage others in unbelief and ungodliness: and it is sometimes a part of our chastisement to be shamed and rebuked by men of very bad characters. Yet those who have no real piety may, on personal and relative accounts, be sincerely attached to the interests of true Christians; and in a certain way have the cause of religion much at heart, as it happens to be connected with that of their party or their friends: but they cannot love the disciple simply because he loves and bears the image of his Master. They sometimes however give good advice supported by solid arguments: they can foresee consequences which the believer does not suspect, and sincerely endeavor to prevent them; and they can mingle their expostulations with affectionate good wishes, and a kind of prayers for their welfare and success. These things do not prove a man to be a partaker of the grace of God; but they entitle him so far to the attention of godly persons. It is indeed a shame for us to require and delight in those things, that such men perceive to be wrong: and it is our own fault, if we do not in many ways profit by their advice and cautions.—But when authority prevails against reason and truth, pernicious effects must follow: yet this is so common, that those who possess much power and influence, rarely acquit themselves honorably as professors of godliness.—Men seldom accomplish to good purpose those services, in which they reluctantly engage: and God does not generally allow those whom he loves, the satisfactions which they sinfully covet.

V. 10—25.

Where grace possesses the heart, a man's conscience, on reflection, will reproach him with his transgressions: and he will not only be frighted and distressed, (which the hypocrite may be,) but he will be humbled before God, and with ingenuous confessions and fervent prayers, seek forgiveness from him; sincerely purposing by his grace no more to return to folly: and thus a man's pride will prove an occasion of increasing his humility. (Notes, 2 Chr. 32:24—26,30—33, v. 31.)—But when God corrects the transgressions of his people; he makes them by the anguish of their souls, in the great straits to which he reduces them, taste the bitterness of their sins, and perceive his abhorrence of them.—Whatever we idolize, or grow proud of, will generally be taken from us, or converted into a source of distress; and no aggravation or affliction is more painful to generous minds, than the reflection, that others whom they love are suffering on their account. This is a common case in kingdoms and families: and perhaps, while ministers mourn over the state of their congregations; they may sometimes profitably inquire, whether their own supineness, pride, and desire of applause or popularity; their want of zeal and simplicity; their self-indulgence, or conformity to the world, do not bring a secret blight upon their labors, although more open evils do not bring a blot upon their profession? and whether the people's souls are not suffering for their correction; and to bring them to deeper humiliation, greater fervency in prayer, and a more simple, spiritual frame of mind, and devotedness to God? And surely we should choose to be chastened in our own persons, rather than that the blessing should be withheld from our congregations: for, though the Lord is righteous in these dispensations; yet the people have not deserved at our hands, that we should occasion this evil to them.—Grace teaches men to condemn themselves rather than others, and to seek the interests of their fellow-creatures in many respects before their own: and earnest prayers offered in this temper of mind, by those who unreservedly cast themselves on the mercies of the Lord, are very prevalent. For "he is slow to anger, and ready to forgive:" and he never fails of his promises, though he readily recedes from his threatenings in behalf of the humbled sinner.—If the power of angels, as it appears in this chapter, is so terrible, what is that of the Almighty Creator! and as they are so obedient to their Maker's word, and so prompt in executing his will; we ought carefully to imitate them, especially in the delightful service of "ministering to the heirs of salvation."—Death is continually, and in so many forms and so suddenly, destroying all around, that it is madness not to be expecting and preparing for the closing scene.—Through the great sacrifice and intercession of the Savior, the chief of sinners may approach a reconciled God: and, being justified by faith in his blood, may become his servant and child, and be made meet for his eternal kingdom. This message, the ministers of God propose to men, that they may "advise, and consider what answer they will return to him that sent them;" and they affectionately long that sinners would thankfully accept of this great salvation. Though men are required to forsake sin, to renounce the world and its friendship, and to deny themselves, if they would be Christ's disciples: yet surely this need not reduce them to a great strait; for he will supply every want, make up every loss, and give them a hundredfold more in this present time, for all which they part with for his sake.—Grace will teach men liberality when the honor of God and the good of his people require it: and extraordinary occasions require extraordinary disinterestedness. But we should not encroach on those who are willing to give, or prefer a cheap religion. All we possess and are belongs to God, and we should desire to employ in his immediate service, that measure of our time and substance, which he requires: and while we simply follow his directions, we shall speedily obtain the comfort of his pardoning love, and also be instrumental in averting his wrath from others.

THE

FIRST BOOK OF THE KINGS,

COMMONLY CALLED

THE THIRD BOOK OF THE KINGS.

The two following books contain, as their name imports, the history of Judah and Israel, under the government of kings, from the close of David's reign to the Babylonish captivity, during about four hundred and twenty-seven years. They seem originally to have formed but one book; but they were afterwards divided into two, and called "The first and second books of the Kings;" and in some versions, "The third and fourth books of the Kings;" as the two books of Samuel are, in the Septuagint and in the Vulgate, called "The first and the second books of the Kings."—It is evident, that they contain an abstract of the history, compiled from much more copious records, which seem to have been collected and preserved by contemporary prophets. (11:41. 14:29. 15:31. 22:39,45. 2 Chr. 9:29. 12:15. 13:22. 20:34. 26:22.) Indeed a considerable part, of the transactions of their own times, is recorded in connexion with the prophecies of Isaiah, Jeremiah, and Ezekiel. It is, however, uncertain by whom this compilation was made: but, if Ezra, as it is generally and probably supposed, compiled the books of Chronicles; it is not likely, that, (according to the opinion of some learned men,) he compiled these also: as they form a distinct history of the same times. If, therefore, they were arranged in the present manner, principally by one sacred writer, those, who ascribe them to Jeremiah, seem to have adopted the more probable opinion. Indeed, the second book of the kings and his prophecy end with the narrative of the same events; though, perhaps, both were added after his death by another hand: and it is not unlikely that some other trivial alterations were made in the days of Ezra, to render the narrative more perspicuous to the Jews after the captivity.—They have, however, been constantly received, both by Jews and Christians, as a part of the sacred canon, the holy Scriptures: and the events recorded are frequently referred to in the New Testament. (Matt. 1:7—12. 6:29. 12:42. Luke 4:25—27. Acts 2:29. 7:47—50. Jam. 5:17,18.) It is observable also, that our Lord and his apostle James not only speak of them as authentic records, and a part of the sacred oracles as received by the Jews; but especially attest some of the most wonderful miracles recorded in them; and thus affix a direct sanction to them, as given by inspiration of God.—They also contain many prophecies; especially that of Josiah, who was foretold by name three hundred years before his birth: (Note, 1 Kings 13:2.) but none of these predictions, in their most evident literal meaning, refer to events later than the Babylonish captivity.—After the death of David, the sacred historian records the principal transactions of Solomon's long and peaceable reign; which, however, was covered with a dark cloud towards the close: and under his successor, the nation was divided into the two distinct kingdoms of Judah and Israel.—The descendants of Solomon reigned over that of Judah till the captivity, for about three hundred and eighty-seven years. So that from the accession of David, during a course of four hundred and sixty-seven years, the throne was filled by his descendants, in lineal descent, except as the sons of Josiah succeeded one another. During this long term of years there was not a single revolution, or civil war; and but one short interruption, by Athaliah's usurpation. Perhaps it would be difficult to find, in universal history, any thing equal to this permanent internal order and tranquillity. Let the reader recollect how many revolutions, civil wars, murders of reigning kings by rivals and successors, and changes in the succession, are found in the English history, during the same number of years.—Above half the kings of Judah supported true religion, and several of them were eminently pious men: and it is remarkable that their reigns were much longer, than those of the wicked princes; (11:42. 15:10. 22:42. 2 Kings 15:2,33. 18:2. 22:1.) so that they comprise much above three hundred years of this period; and the greatest part of this time was evidently passed, either in profound peace, or in remarkable prosperity. Let this state of things be compared with the history of Greece or Rome; and the situation of Judah must be allowed to have been exceedingly more desirable, than that of these celebrated heathen nations.—The kingdom of Israel continued about two hundred and fifty-four years, till the Assyrian captivity. The nineteen kings, of several families, who, during this period, reigned in succession, were all idolaters, and most of them monsters of iniquity: yet the Lord by his prophets, especially by Elijah and Elisha, preserved a considerable degree of true religion in the land, till the measure of their national wickedness was full; and then they were finally dispersed among the Gentiles: except as a remnant of them was in various ways, and at different times, incorporated among the Jews.—In these books the history of the two kingdoms is carried on together: and the whole forms an admirable comment on the prophecies delivered to the nation by Moses and Joshua; (Notes, Lev. 26: Deut. 4: 28: 29: 30: 31: 32: Josh. 23:15,16.) and a striking illustration of the proverb, "Righteousness exalteth a nation; but sin is the reproach of any people."—This first book contains the history of about a hundred and twenty years. Connected with the peace and prosperity of Solomon's reign, and the fame of his wisdom, a full account is given of the temple having been built by him. God had commanded Israel to offer all their sacrifices at one place; Shiloh had for some time been that place; and the ark had been removed to Zion, by David, in order that a temple might there be built, which Solomon his son accomplished. (Note, Deut. 12:5—7.) A large proportion of the subsequent parts of the Old Testament relate to this temple; to the sins of the people in sacrificing elsewhere; to their profanation of the temple; to the judgments of God upon them for these crimes; especially to the destruction of the temple by the Chaldeans; and to the rebuilding of it by Zerubbabel: and these things so run through all the subsequent history and prophecies; that if Solomon did not build the temple by the express command of God, it must follow, that God punished the nation with tremendous judgments for violating merely human appointments.—When the Samaritans preferred mount Gerizim, our Lord told the woman of Samaria, that they "knew not what they worshipped, for salvation was of the Jews:" and this declaration, with his own constant attendance at the ordinances administered at the temple in Jerusalem, sufficiently attest the divine inspiration of those records, in which alone it is expressly declared, that Solomon built the temple by the direction and appointment of God himself.—Solomon's fall into idolatry seems evidently implied in the book of Ecclesiastes: and the history of Rehoboam's imprudence, the division of his kingdom, Jeroboam's idolatry, and the subsequent events to the end of the book, are assumed as undoubted facts in the writings of all the prophets. So entirely does the whole canon of Scripture coincide; while each part confirms, and receives confirmation from, all the rest

NOTES.

CHAP. I. V. 1—4. David was seventy years old when he died, and these events occurred not long before. He seems to have been a healthy man: yet his constitution was entirely worn out; perhaps in some measure through his great exertions in his various wars.—The counsel of his courtiers, or physicians, (if they may be so called,) to excite in him a due degree of animal heat, especially when we advert to the pains bestowed to find out a very fair damsel for the purpose, deserves much censure: though similar advice has been given in other ages and countries. We may suppose, that David acceded to it merely in compliance with their wishes, and in deference to their judgment; but the appearance was not at all becoming his character, and circumstances. (Marg. Ref.—Note, 2:15—18.)

V. 5, 6. Adonijah could not be ignorant, that Solomon had been appointed by God himself to succeed David in the kingdom; (Notes, 2 Sam. 7:12—16. 1 Chr. 22:6—10. 23:1.—28:5.) and his whole conduct shews, that he considered Solomon only as his rival. After the death of Absalom, Adonijah was David's eldest son: and no doubt he considered the kingdom as his birthright, and confided in the support of the people to seize upon it; without any regard to his father, or to the revealed will of God.—It is remarkable how frequently the first-born were set aside by his express appointment. In the ordinary course of things, it is expedient that the primogeniture should have the precedency; and the judicial law of Moses, (as well as the civil laws of most nations,) was formed accordingly. But the examples of Jacob, Judah, the sons of Joseph, David, Solomon, and others, prove that this is not grounded on moral obligation: that it is not divine, or unalterable, or to be put in competition with the welfare of whole nations, and the liberty and rights of all the rest of mankind; according to the sentiments of some authors, who most absurdly ground their doctrine upon the word of God, though it is evidently contradictory to it!—Absalom had been displeased with his father, though most unjustly, because of the disgrace under which he laid him for the murder of Amnon: (Note, 2 Sam. 14:28,29.) but David had never given Adonijah the least cause of displeasure; except that, in obedience to God, he intended and appointed Solomon to be his successor. It is probable, that Adonijah was of an imperious disposition; and David very imprudently indulged him, and never restrained or reproved him in any matter. This was David's fault: for he ought to have exerted his authority, and kept him in subjection; but at the same time it aggravated Adonijah's contempt and ingratitude. He seems to have greatly resembled his elder brother Absalom: like him he was too much indulged, and beloved on account of his exterior acomplishments; and like him, he affected royal pomp and magnificence: (Notes, 2 Sam. 14:25—27. 15:1—6.) and he succeeded to his ambitious projects, though he concealed and deferred them, till his father was, as he supposed, finally incapacitated for business.

V. 7. It seems wonderful that Joab and Abiathar, who were persons of years, experience, and capacity; who had long attended on David, and were highly preferred under him; and who doubtless understood his intentions concerning Solomon, should at last concur in Adonijah's conspiracy! But perhaps Joab, though attached to David, was not favorable to Solomon, and preferred Adonijah as more congenial with his own disposition. Being destitute of piety, he disregarded the divine appointment, and deemed it more politic to place the eldest son upon the throne; and no wrong to David, who, he might think, injured Adonijah in preferring his younger brother. Perhaps he was still afraid of being called to account for his murders; and hoped to secure himself, to continue his preferment, and to increase his influence, by helping Adonijah to the kingdom: and it may be supposed, that he [z] the mighty men which belonged to David, were not with Adonijah.

9 And Adonijah [a] slew sheep and oxen and fat cattle by the stone of Zoheleth, which is by * En-rogel, and [b] called all his brethren the king's sons, and all the men of Judah the king's servants.

10 But [c] Nathan the prophet, and Benaiah, and the mighty men, and Solomon his brother, he called not.

11 ¶ Wherefore [d] Nathan spake unto Bath-sheba the mother of Solomon, saying, Hast thou not heard that [e] Adonijah the son of Haggith doth reign, and David our lord knoweth it not?

12 Now therefore come, [f] let me, I pray thee, give thee counsel, that thou mayest [g] save thine own life, and [h] the life of thy son Solomon.

13 Go, and get thee in unto king David, and say unto him, Didst not thou, my lord, O king, swear unto thine handmaid, saying, [i] Assuredly Solomon thy son shall reign after me, and he shall [j] sit upon my throne? why then doth Adonijah reign?

secretly resented David's conduct in attempting to lay him aside, and to put Amasa in his place. (Notes, 2 Sam. 19:9—15. 20:6—10.)—Abiathar, though high priest, seems to have been less regarded by David than Zadok was: (Note, 2 Sam. 15:24—29.) and perhaps he suspected that Solomon would set his family aside, in favor of the line of Eleazar to which Zadok belonged. But by attaching himself to Adonijah, he hastened that event, and shewed, that David had good reasons for preferring Zadok, who probably was a man of much deeper and more serious religion. (Notes, 2:26,27,35. 1 Sam. 2:31—36. Ezek. 44:15, 16.)

V. 8—10. Adonijah knew that it would be in vain and dangerous, to tamper with Zadok, Nathan, and Benaiah, who were firmly attached to the cause of Solomon, as well as to that of David.—It is highly improbable, that Shimei, the son of Gera, would be much regarded by either party. (Notes, 2:8,9,36—46. 2 Sam. 16:5—14. 19:19—23.) Solomon afterwards preferred a person of this name: (4:18.) and probably he was a man of considerable consequence. (Note, Zech. 12:9—14.)—We know nothing further of Rei, but no doubt he also was a person of rank and great influence.—The mighty men were the chieftains before enumerated. (2 Sam. 23:8—39.)—It is most likely that Adonijah made a solemn sacrifice, as well as a magnificent feast, on the occasion; and thus he concealed his designs, till ripe for execution. (Note, 2 Sam. 15:7—9.)—En-rogel was in the vicinity of Jerusalem. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 11—14. Solomon could not be ignorant of Adonijah's intentions, of which he made no secret: but he remained quiet, and left his cause with God. His life and succession were secured by promise: yet it was proper that Nathan and Bath-sheba should use prudent means for his preservation, and the maintenance of his right. Had Adonijah succeeded, he would, no doubt, have put Solomon and Bath-sheba to death: for the history of the world demonstrates, that when men are aspiring after dominion, they are easily tempted to the most enormous crimes, which seem necessary for their purpose, even when most contrary to their apparent natural disposition. (Notes, Judg. 9:4—6. 2 Kings 11:1,2. Matt. 2:3—6,16—18.)

V. 15—18. It is not recorded, on what occasion David sware to Bath-sheba, that Solomon should succeed him: but it is supposed with probability, that it took place after Absalom's rebellion; and as God himself had settled the succession, he might very properly give her this assurance.—David was aware that Adonijah had taken great state upon him; but he did not know that he had actually advanced a claim to the kingdom: this both enhanced Adonijah's crime and pleaded David's excuse.

V. 20. The people knew, that "the Spirit o the LORD spake by David, and his word was in his tongue:" (Note, 2 Sam. 23:1,2.) and they had great confidence in his wisdom, piety, and affection. They therefore waited to know the will of God from him. David, though anointed to the kingdom, did not assume regal authority at first, without the concurrence of the elders of Judah and Israel: (Notes, 2 Sam. 2:4. 5:1—5.)

21 Otherwise it shall come to pass, when my lord the king shall [v] sleep with his fathers, that I and my son Solomon shall be counted * offenders.

22 ¶ And lo, [x] while she yet talked with the king, Nathan the prophet also came in.

23 And they told the king, saying, Behold, Nathan the prophet. And when he was come in before the king, [y] he bowed himself before the king with his face to the ground.

24 And Nathan said, My lord, O king, [z] hast thou said, Adonijah shall [a] reign after me, and he shall sit upon my throne?

25 For he is gone down this day, and hath [b] slain oxen, and fat cattle, and sheep in abundance, and hath called all the king's sons, and the captains of the host, and Abiathar the priest; and behold they eat and drink before him, and say, † God save king Adonijah.

26 But me, even [c] me thy servant, and Zadok the priest, and Benaiah the son of Jehoiada, and thy servant Solomon, hath he not called.

27 Is this thing done by my lord the king, [d] and thou hast not shewed it unto thy servant, who should sit on the throne of my lord the king after him?

[Practical Observations.]

and after Absalom's rebellion, he did not return to the exercise of it without their approbation. (Note, 2 Sam. 19:9—15.) He could not therefore claim a right to dispose of the kingdom by will, as if it had been his own private property, according to the statement of some writers: but he might very properly inform the people of the Lord's appointment in that behalf: (Note, 1 Sam. 8:19—22.) and so far were they from eagerly joining Adonijah, as they had done Absalom; that they remained in suspense, till his determination was notified.

V. 23. He bowed, &c.] The exterior indications of civil honor, to persons in authority, were generally rendered by the most eminent servants and prophets of God. The refusal of them may arise from an erroneous conscience: but it has the appearance of pride and affected moroseness. (Acts 26:25.)

V. 24—27. (Marg. Ref.) As the transaction was so public, and so many eminent persons were concerned, it had the appearance of being countenanced by the king: but after all that had passed, the prophet could not believe that David would have taken such a step without informing him.

38 So [z] Zadok the priest, and Nathan the prophet, and Benaiah the son of Jehoiada, and [a] the Cherethites, and the Pelethites, went down, and caused Solomon to ride upon [b] king David's mule, and brought him to Gihon.

39 And Zadok the priest took [c] an horn of oil [d] out of the tabernacle, and [e] anointed Solomon. And they blew the trumpet; and [f] all the people said, God save king Solomon.

40 And all the people came up after him; and the people piped with [*] pipes, and [g] rejoiced with great joy, so that the earth rent with the sound of them.

41 And Adonijah and all the guests that were with him heard it, [h] as they had made an end of eating. And when Joab heard the sound of the trumpet, he said, [i] Wherefore is this noise of [k] the city being in an uproar?

47 And moreover, the king's servants came to [r] bless our lord king David, saying, [s] God make the name of Solomon better than thy name, and make his throne greater than thy throne: and the king [t] bowed himself upon the bed.

an earnest desire of the prosperity of Israel, under the government which God had placed over them.—This instance serves to explain the original use and emphasis of the word Amen. (Notes, Deut. 27:15—26. Ps. 72:17—19. Matt. 6:13.)

V. 38. Notes, 1 Chr. 23:1. 29:21—25.—Gihon.] A fountain near Jerusalem. (33. 2 Chr. 32:30.) It does not appear, that there was any special reason, why this spot was selected; but, probably, it was a place so much frequented, that it was peculiarly suited to make the transaction speedily known throughout the whole city.

V. 39. An horn, &c.] Neither Absalom, nor Adonijah, regarded this expressive ceremony: perhaps presuming on the right of primogeniture; for we do not find that kings, who succeeded as the first-born of their predecessors, without any interruption, were anointed. (Notes, 19:15—17. 1 Sam. 10:1. 16:13. 2 Kings 9:5—10. 11: 12.) The anointing denoted both their appointment expressly from God, and the qualifications with which he would endow them: and their being types of Christ, the anointed of the Father.—The oil, with which Solomon was anointed, was taken out of the tabernacle; being, as it is probable, the same holy oil with which the priests were anointed. (Note, Ex. 30:22—33.)

V. 41. Adonijah and his guests seem to have wasted much time upon this magnificent feast, when far more important concerns waited their attention, and when ruin hung over their heads. (Marg. Ref.—Notes, Dan. 5:1—9. Nah. 1:9,10.)

V. 42. (Note, 2 Sam. 17:17—21.) It is probable, that Jonathan was not invited to the feast, nor concerned in the conspiracy; but he went to warn his father of the danger: though some think he was left in the city to learn what should occur, and to bring an account of it to Adonijah.

V. 43—48. The loud acclamations of the people on this occasion, and the pious and fervent congratulations of David's servants, were especially suited to dismay the conspirators (Notes, Matt. 21:6—11.)

V. 49—53. Adonijah had doubtless expected to be joined by the multitude; but finding himself mistaken, and being deserted by his friends, he gave up all for lost.—The murderer was to be taken from the altar and slain: (Note, Ex. 21:12—14.) but in other crimes it was a customary refuge, at least till a pardon could be supplicated; as representing the method of obtaining forgiveness from God, through the great sacrifice for sin.—Adonijah acknowledged Solomon as king, both by word and deed; and received a conditional pardon, but Solomon gave him fair warning that he was put upon his good behavior. He also required him to go to his house and live a retired, private life, not affecting the splendor and state which he had before.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—10.

The most vigorous constitutions must soon wear out, and our lives hasten to a close: and, though proper means of restoring health and prolonging our days should be used; yet a pious and wise man ought not to yield to such expedients as have the appearance of evil, or may become temptations to him. But carnal men counsel others according to their own inclinations, and often enforce their advice under specious pretexts; by which they impose upon such as mean no evil, but are induced to actions inconsistent with their character and profession.—Indulgent parents are commonly chastised with disobedient children, who ungratefully despise their infirmities, and are impatient to get possession of their estates.—Every depraved propensity gathers strength by being gratified: and when ambition comes within the reach of its object, it urges a man to violate all obligations, to break through all obstructions, to despise all dangers, and to disregard the examples of those who have before been ruined by similar attempts. So long as carnal self-love reigns in the heart, no worldly wisdom and experience, no maturity of age, no rank or station in the community or in the church, no previous fidelity or attachment to princes or patrons, can secure men's continuance in their former course or connexions: for innumerable circumstances may occur, which may prompt them to some new method of attempting to gratify their reigning inclinations. So that disgust, fear, conscious guilt, or the hope of greater authority, influence, or wealth, may speedily induce them to measures, which stand in opposition to all their former lives! We ought therefore to depend on the Lord to preserve us from the deceitfulness of our own hearts, and from the fickleness and treachery of men.—Political wisdom frequently contradicts the word of God, and proves in the event the greatest folly: and crafty seducers can discern who are, and who are not, fit for their purpose; and will shun determined honest characters as their enemies and rivals.

V. 11—27.

In every age men form designs, which their own consciences condemn as contrary to the will of God: and yet they hope for success from the favor and assistance of man! But those, who are vain of their own accomplishments, often flatter themselves with the imagined attachment of numbers, that have no real esteem or affection for them.—A feast, and a sacrifice, are proper baits to draw in the sensual or the unsuspecting: and aspiring men, according to the taste of the times, have always employed one or both of these expedients, to subserve their own ambitious purposes; by which numbers have been inadvertently betrayed to concur in criminal measures, contrary to their judgments, consciences, characters, and interests.—In these days, when kingdoms are disposed of by common providence, the ministers of God have little to do with disputed successions; and are best at a distance from the cabals, intrigues, and parties, which generally surround the courts of kings: yet the welfare of the state, as well as of the church, should lie near their hearts: and they ought to use all their influence, and embrace every opportunity, to remind the greatest men, to whom they are allowed access, of the words of God, and to excite them to do their duty according to his revealed will.—If a neighbor is in danger of being injured or murdered, without knowing it, or being able to avoid the snare; it must be the duty of every man, in all cases or at any hazard, to give him warning or counsel, and to interpose for his preservation.—When others are neglecting their duty, through inattention or multiplied infirmities or engagements, they should be put in remembrance of it: when they are slack to do it, prudent contrivances, and quickening expostulations may be successfully employed to incite them; and every means should be used to prevent manifest injustice, to exclude occasions of future discord, and to promote decisive measures for the glory of God, and the good of his people: for if the enemies of religion be combined, active, and daring; its friends should not be timid, supine, and disunited.—The most respectful behavior to our superiors is very consistent with plainness of speech in the great concerns of God; and such language and behavior, combined in persons of known and approved character, will be very forcible with men of piety and integrity.

V. 28—53.

The true believer loves to review his past experience: even the frequent recollection of his distresses, from all which "the LORD hath redeemed him," increases his comfort as well as his gratitude; and inspires him with hope, and animates him to his duty, though under the decays of nature, and at the approach of death. In preparation for that event, we should arrange all our domestic or more public concerns, as may best secure peace and good to the survivors: and we should lose no time before we do so useful a work, even though it somewhat interrupt our religious exercises.—Those enterprises must end well, which are conducted with piety and integrity, in simple dependence on God, and cordial acquiescence in his will.—We can see no one so wise, so good, or so happy, in this world, but we may well desire that others may be more wise, more holy, and more happy than he; and every pious man must long that it may be thus with his beloved children, both for their sakes, and for the benefit of the community.—They, who are engaged in a bad cause, are exposed to continual terrors: and no good man can bring other than evil tidings to those who are rebelling against God and the king.—Vain confidence and sensual pleasure are the usual forerunners of temporal and eternal destruction.—Combinations formed upon iniquitous principles will speedily be dissolved, when self-preservation or self-interest calls another way. But clemency becomes those in power, especially towards such as have rather injured them than the public: yet, no government can pardon or tolerate a traitor, who perseveres in his treasonable machinations.—But we see here, as in a glass, Jesus, the Son of David and the Son of God, exalted to the throne of glory, notwithstanding all the conspiracies and opposition of his enemies. (Notes, Ps. 2:) His kingdom is far greater than that of his father David; and all the true people of God most cordially rejoice in his exaltation. The prosperity of his cause and the triumphing of his servants, are the vexation and terror of his enemies: and no "horns of the altar," no forms of godliness, no pretences to religion of any kind, can profit those who will not submit to his authority and accept of his salvation. He spares and is ready to pardon those, who have most desperately rebelled against him, when they seem disposed to repent, and do works meet for repentance. But if wickedness be afterwards found in them, discovering the hypocrisy of their professed submission, they will at length die without mercy, and perish without remedy.

NOTES.

CHAP. II. V. 1, 2. Solomon could not at this time be more than twenty years of age; and, it is probable, he was not so much: an early period for him to enter upon so weighty a charge, as the government of God's people! (Note, 3:5—14.) But he was endowed with extraordinary wisdom; and David charged and exhorted him to shew all Israel, that though he was but a child in years, he was a man in capacity and attention to business. (Notes, Num. 27:19. 1 Tim. 4:11—16. 2 Tim. 2:1,2.)

V. 3. (Notes, Josh. 1:7,8. 1 Chr. 22:11—13. 28:9.) Testimonies, in this connexion, may signify those laws, which preserved the remembrance of great events; as the sabbaths, the passover, and others. (Notes, Deut. 6:1. Ps. 19:7—11. Is. 8:16,20.)—Nothing can be more manifest, than that the law of Moses, as written in the Pentateuch, was known at this time. (Notes, Deut. 17:16—18.)

V. 4. (Notes, Gen. 18:18,19. 2 Sam. 7:12—16.) The continuance of the kingdom to David's posterity was sure, as it respected the Messiah and his spiritual reign: nor would every transgression forfeit the temporal kingdom entailed upon his descendants; for chastisements would be used to bring them to repentance: yet obstinate and aggravated disobedience would cut off the entail. Thus the Lord punished Solomon's idolatry by the defection of the ten tribes from his son: (Notes, 11:9—13. 12:8—15.) and at length, the family of David was deprived of all authority, till Christ came and set up his spiritual kingdom.

V. 5, 6. These dying counsels of David ought by no means to be imputed to personal resentment; but to a regard to justice, and a wise and pious concern for the security of Solomon's throne, which was the cause of God and of Israel. —Joab had long deserved to die: and David's timidity had left blood-guiltiness upon his family and kingdom. (Notes, Num. 35:31—34. 2 Sam. 3:28,29.) His late conspiracy proved him to be a factious and dangerous person: and, though his influence seems to have been weakened by it; yet his party was still so strong, that it was not probable Solomon would reign in peace while he lived.—He had not so much as attempted to conceal the base murders which he had committed; but he avowed and vindicated them, without shame or fear of punishment; and it was evident that he did not now repent, but would readily repeat them, to carry his purpose and secure his preferment. His murders were crimes against David, as committed upon two men who were connected with David: and yet they were so conducted, as to bring him into suspicion as if privy to them. David, therefore, reminded his successor to expiate the guilt of these murders

[z] Barzillai the Gileadite, and let them be of those that [a] eat at thy table: for so they came to me [b] when I fled because of Absalom thy brother.

8 And, behold, thou hast with thee [c] Shimei the son of Gera, a Benjamite of Bahurim, which cursed me with a * grievous curse in the day when I went to Mahanaim: but [d] he came down to meet me at Jordan, and I sware to him by the LORD, saying, I will not put thee to death with the sword.

9 Now therefore [e] hold him not guiltless: for thou art [f] a wise man, and knowest what thou oughtest to do unto him: but [g] his hoar head bring thou down to the grave [h] with blood.

by Joab's blood, that he and his kingdom and family might be guiltless. (Note, 28—34.)—It is observable that David did not blame Joab for killing Absalom: being doubtless conscious that he deserved to die; and that his own desire to spare him was a weakness and a sin.

V. 7. Notes, 2 Sam. 17:27—29. 19:31—39.

V. 8, 9. (Notes, 2 Sam. 16:5—14. 19:19—23.) Shimei also deserved to die, though for an offence of a different kind from Joab's. Probably he retained his old enmity to the family of David, and his partiality to the house of Saul. Solomon was not bound by the oath, which David had sworn not to put him to death: his punishment, at first, would indeed have been a salutary act of justice; yet David would not then consent to it, because unsuitable to his circumstances: and had he been suitably affected with David's lenity, and acted properly afterwards, he would have been fully and finally pardoned. But it is evident that he had not done this: and the case was different with Solomon; who might take occasion from some recent offence, to remember the old crimes, and to execute deserved vengeance on an irreconcileable enemy to him and the peace of the kingdom. David therefore counselled him, as a wise man, not to trust Shimei, but to watch him narrowly; and he would be sure to find just cause for punishing him. (Note, 36—46.)

V. 10, 11. (Marg. Ref.) The remains of Saul, and his sons, were buried in the sepulchre of Kish his father. (2 Sam. 21:14.) But David was not buried in the sepulchre of Jesse at Bethlehem; but in that city which he had taken from the Jebusites, and made the capital of his kingdom, and the seat of his government, and that of his family. (Note, Acts 2:25—32.)

V. 14.—18. It is evident that Adonijah had by no means given up his pretensions to the throne: and highly probable, that neither he, nor Joab, nor Abiathar expected safety, unless in success; and that they were in concert forming new designs against Solomon. With this view, they seem to have thought, that if Adonijah married Abishag, it would increase the number of his adherents; both by the accession of her friends and relations, and from the general notions which prevail, concerning the wives and concubines of deceased kings. (Notes, 2 Sam. 3:6—10. 12:8. 16:20—23.) But they could not get possession of Abishag, without Solomon's consent; which they had no hopes of obtaining, but by the interposition of Bath-sheba. —In Adonijah's speech to her, he insinuated, that the kingdom was his, by the right of primogeniture: and that he had been in possession of it, by the consent of all Israel. This, however, was totally false: the kingdom had never been his, except in his own groundless opinion, and that of the few who abetted his usurpation; for the people generally favored Solomon. But he meant to induce Bath-sheba to compassionate his case; and to make a merit with her of peaceably receding from his claim: and that she might not suspect any ill design, he at length conceded, that "it was Solomon's from the LORD." But though his language was not well calculated to inspire confidence; and his request was in itself improper, and highly indecorous at least; yet, according to his hopes, Bath-sheba suspected no ill, but considered him as entitled to compassion, and supposed his request to be the result of love, not ambition: and perhaps she thought this an easy way of satisfying Adonijah, and securing Solomon in the kingijah. And the king [u] rose up to meet her, and bowed himself unto her, and sat down on his throne, and caused a seat to be set for the king's mother; and [x] she sat on his right hand.

20 Then she said, [y] I desire one small petition of thee; I pray thee, say me not nay. And the king said unto her, [z] Ask on, my mother, for I will not say thee nay.

21 And she said, [a] Let Abishag the Shunammite be given to Adonijah thy brother to wife.

22 And king Solomon answered and said unto his mother, And [b] why dost thou ask Abishag the Shunammite for Adonijah? ask for him [c] the kingdom also; for he is mine elder brother; even for him, and for Abiathar the priest, and for Joab the son of Zeruiah.

23 Then king Solomon sware by the LORD, saying, [d] God do so to me, and more also, if Adonijah have not [e] spoken this word against his own life.

24 Now therefore, [f] as the LORD liveth, which hath established me, and [g] set me on the throne of David my father, and who hath [h] made me an house, [i] as he promised, Adonijah shall be [k] put to death this day.

25 And king Solomon sent by the hand of Benaiah the son of Jehoiada: and [l] he fell upon him, that he died.

[Practical Observations.]

26 ¶ And unto [m] Abiathar the priest said the king, Get thee to [n] Anathoth, unto thine own fields; for thou art * worthy of death: but I will not at this time put thee to death, [o] because thou barest the ark of the Lord GOD before David my father, and [p] because thou hast been afflicted in all wherein my father was afflicted.

27 So Solomon thrust out Abiathar from being priest unto the LORD; [q] that he might fulfil the word of the LORD, which he spake concerning the house of Eli in [r] Shiloh.

28 ¶ Then tidings came to Joab; for [s] Joab had turned after Adonijah, though he turned not after Absalom. And Joab fled unto the tabernacle of the LORD, and [t] caught hold on the horns of the altar.

29 And it was told king Solomon that Joab was fled unto the tabernacle of the LORD; and behold, he is by the altar. Then Solomon sent Benaiah the son of Jehoiada, saying, [u] Go, fall upon him.

30 And Benaiah came to the tabernacle of the LORD, and said unto him, Thus dom.—She did not look upon Abishag as the wife of David, (Note, 1:1—4.) and therefore did not consider her marriage with Adonijah as unlawful: and she readily consented to become his intercessor with Solomon. (Note, Matt. 20:20—23.)

V. 20. For I, &c.] All such general promises imply the supposition, that the request is lawful and proper to be granted: for even the assurances of God's word, that whatever we ask of him, shall be given, admit of a similar limitation: i. e. if consistent with his glory, and for our real good. (Notes, Rom. 8:24—27. Jam. 4:1—3. 1 John 5:14,15.)

V. 22. Solomon immediately saw through Adonijah's intentions, and was fully convinced that he was aiming to take the fortress by sap, (so to speak,) which he had failed of seizing by surprise. He perceived him still restless, aspiring, and scheming; that he considered this as one step to the throne, and that Joab and Abiathar were concerned in the project. To shew the inefficacy therefore of every application in his favor; to convince Bath-sheba of the impropriety and impolicy of her request; and to declare the necessity of his death, in order to public peace, and the establishment of his authority, he spoke with great earnestness and decision. (Notes, Matt. 12:46—50. John 2:1—5.)

V. 23—25. Solomon has been censured, as too severe and precipitate in this execution; but there is no intimation of this in the Scripture. Adonijah's pardon had been conditional; and he had owned Solomon as king, yet he was plotting against him: (Note, 1:49—53.) he affected to tread in the steps of Absalom; and doubtless he would have created as fatal disturbances to Solomon's government, as Absalom had to David's. Nor would sound policy admit of any delay; when persons of so great authority and extensive influence were joined in the conspiracy, and had far more specious reasons for opposing Solomon, than Absalom had for rebelling against David.

V. 26, 27. Solomon's language to Abiathar, and his silence, clearly prove, that some recent conspiracies had been formed. Abiathar had suffered much with David, and had been faithful and useful to him; (1 Sam. 22:20—23. Notes, 1 Sam. 23:1—13. 2 Sam. 15:24—29.) so that, in remembrance of his services, as well as in respect to his sacred character, Solomon resolved to spare his life: and as he had not committed murder, this clemency might properly be exercised. In deposing Abiathar from the high priesthood, Solomon purposely intended to fulfil the word of God to Eli. (Notes, 1 Sam. 2:30—36.) And in confining him to his own estate in the country, he only put him under a disgrace which he justly merited. (Notes, 36—46. 2 Sam. 14:23,29.) The entire subjection of the priests, and even of the high priest, to the kings of Israel, in all civil and political concerns, is saith the king, Come forth. And he said, Nay; but I will die here. And Benaiah brought the king word again, saying, Thus said Joab, and thus he answered me.

31 And the king said unto him, [x] Do as he hath said, and fall upon him, and bury him; that thou [y] mayest take away the innocent blood, which Joab shed, from me, and [z] from the house of my father.

32 And the LORD shall [a] return his blood upon his own head, who fell upon [b] two men [c] more righteous and better than he, and slew them with the sword, [d] my father David not knowing thereof, to wit, Abner the son of Ner, captain of the host of Israel, and Amasa the son of [e] Jether, captain of the host of Judah.

33 Their blood shall therefore return [f] upon the head of Joab, and upon the head of his seed for ever: but [g] upon David, and upon his seed, and [h] upon his house, and upon his throne, shall there be peace for ever from the LORD.

34 So [i] Benaiah the son of Jehoiada went up, and fell upon him, and slew him: [j] and he was buried in his own house [k] in the wilderness.

35 And the king put Benaiah the son of Jehoiada in his room over the host: and [l] Zadok the priest did the king put in the room of Abiathar.

36 ¶ And the king sent and called for [m] Shimei, and said unto him, [n] Build thee an house in Jerusalem, and dwell there, and go not forth thence any whither.

37 For it shall be, that on the day thou goest out, and passest [o] over the brook Kidron, thou shalt know for certain that thou shalt surely die: [p] thy blood shall be upon thine own head.

38 And Shimei said unto the king, [q] The saying is good: as my lord the king hath said, so will thy servant do. And Shimei dwelt in Jerusalem many days.

39 And it came to pass at the end [B. C. 1011.] of three years, that two of the servants of Shimei ran away unto [r] Achish son of Maachah king of Gath. And they told Shimei, saying, Behold, thy servants be in Gath.

40 And Shimei [s] arose, and saddled his ass, and went to Gath to Achish to seek his servants; and Shimei went, and brought his servants from Gath.

41 And it was told Solomon that Shimei had gone from Jerusalem to Gath, and was come again.

42 And the king sent and called for Shimei, and said unto him, [t] Did I not make thee to swear by the LORD, and protested unto thee, saying, Know for a certain, on the day thou goest out, and walkest abroad any whither, that thou shalt surely die? and thou saidst unto me, The word that I have heard is good.

43 Why [u] then hast thou not kept the oath of the LORD, and [x] the commandment that I have charged thee with?

44 The king said moreover to Shimei, [y] Thou knowest all the wickedness which thine heart is privy to, that thou didst to David my father: therefore the LORD shall [z] return thy wickedness upon thine own head;

45 And king Solomon shall be [a] blessed, [b] and the throne of David shall be established before the LORD for ever.

46 So the king commanded Benaiah the son of Jehoiada; which went out and fell upon him, that he died. And [c] the kingdom was established in the hand of Solomon.

clearly shewn in this instance: nor is any exemption from capital punishment, in the case of treason, or other crimes deserving death, even in favor of the high priesthood itself, in the least intimated.—How different from the claims of the Roman hierarchy in these respects!

V. 28—34. (Note, 5,6.) In fleeing to the altar, Joab pleaded guilty of the treason charged upon him: and Solomon, in ordering him to be slain before the altar, not for that crime alone, but especially for his former murders, evinced his knowledge of, and his regard for, the law of God, and his superiority to vulgar prejudices. He also shewed the people, that no place, however sacred, should secure a murderer from justice. (Note, Ex. 21:12—14.)—His language, on this occasion, proves, that he considered the guilt of innocent blood as resting on his family and kingdom, so long as Joab's murders remained unpunished. (Note, Num. 35:31—34.)

V. 35. Zadok.] The high priesthood seems to have continued, from this time, in the line of Eleazar and Phinehas, at least till long after the Babylonish captivity. (Marg. Ref.—Note, 1 Chr. 6:4—15.)—Nothing further is said of Jonathan the son of Abiathar. (Note, 1:42.)

V. 36—46. No doubt Solomon suspected, that Shimei's influence would be dangerous upon his own estate, and among his numerous dependents in different parts of the land: and therefore he proposed to him, as the condition of his indemnity for former crimes, that he should live in Jerusalem under his eye, and by no means remove thence. (Note, 26,27.) These terms Shimei readily agreed to, and solemnly sware to observe them; and for three years he lived unmolested, and in affluence. But growing secure, in contempt of Solomon's authority, and of the oath of God, upon an unnecessary business, he took a journey, which according to his own engagement forfeited his life. Thus the Lord left him to be infatuated, that due punishment might be inflicted upon him: in order, that every ringleader of opposition to Solomon's kingdom might be crushed, and others be intimidated by their examples; and that his throne might be established in peace, as the type of the Redeemer's kingdom of peace and righteousness. (Note, 8,9.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—9.

It is desirable to be habitually and calmly expecting the approach of death; for that is "the way of all flesh," appointed for all men, to pass from this world to another: a dark and gloomy road indeed it is for the workers of iniquity, to a still more dark and dreadful place; but rendered cheerful to the righteous, by the presence of the Lord, and by the hopes of complete felicity. Whilst they are supported by these lively hopes and strong consolations, how becoming is it for them to animate their survivors and successors, to fill up their stations in the church of God, and in society, after a proper manner!—Young men, who are called to important services, should be cautioned by their seniors to act with gravity and prudence, that they may prevent others "from despising their youth." And those who, in this evil world, would keep the commandments of God, and, as magistrates or ministers, would induce others to do the same, need resolution and fortitude, as well as meekness, discretion, and zeal. "For they must keep the charge of the LORD;" and the smiles and flatteries, the reproaches and opposition, the friendship and enmity of the world, will, in different ways, impede them in the performance of their duty.—We can neither act with true wisdom, nor prosper in our undertakings further, than we make the whole word of God our rule and our hope; nor can we finally come short of all desirable success, if we do this, however appearances may for a while be against us.—No length of time will obliterate the guilt of sin; and justice, though long delayed, will finally be executed on the impenitent.—In human governments undue lenity is an evidence of imbecility, want of wisdom, and disregard to justice. Can it then be supposed that the King of heaven will so indiscriminately exercise mercy, as not to magnify his law, and shew decidedly his abhorrence of iniquity?—No human authority has a right to pardon wilful murder: and the magistrate, who presumes to do so, is unfaithful to him, who has commissioned him to execute vengeance upon evil doers; and not only exposes the peaceable subject, but brings guilt on his own soul, on his family, and on the land. They, therefore, who act "according to wisdom," will not let the murderer, though advanced in years, or exalted in rank, go down to the grave in peace.—As private persons, we are not to avenge ourselves, but must return blessings and prayers for the bitterest curses and injuries of our enemies: but such offenders will not be held guiltless before God; and if their crimes be a violation of human laws, we may, out of regard to public justice, and for the sake of the peace and prosperity of the church or state, desire that they should be restrained and punished; and in our proper stations we may promote the execution of the law upon them. Nay, in doing this, we "may serve our generation according to the will of God," and prepare for death; no less than when we are recompensing our benefactors, and doing acts of kindness to the distressed.

V. 10—25.

It is very happy for a nation, when the death of one good king is followed by the peaceable succession of another, equally wise and righteous. But men are not duly thankful for these blessings: and therefore the Lord permits their course to be interrupted; that public calamities, experienced or dreaded, may promote humiliation for sin, fervency in prayer, and general reformation; and make way for more lively gratitude, when they are removed or prevented. On such great emergencies, wisdom is needful to direct Christians, that they may neither neglect their present duty, nor intermeddle out of their proper sphere.—Ambitious men can never rest; they must continually be aiming to disturb the settled order and public peace, that they may mount to superior authority; and when baffled with one weapon, they make trial of another. Whatever goes besides them in Providence they deem taken from them; and if they may not domineer, they claim compassion as injured persons: under plausible pretences and soft insinuations, they conceal their aspiring purposes; and with apparent modesty and affection, address themselves to the passions of the unsuspecting, the undiscerning, and the tender-hearted. These they would persuade into improper concessions, and engage to use their influence, that their moderate and equitable desires may be granted; and then they shall rest satisfied, and give nobody any further disturbance: whilst perhaps all this covers the most dangerous and subtle intentions. But those, who have the ear of princes, should be careful what requests they present to them. Compassion, generosity, or even gratitude, may induce them to ask for others, what cannot be granted, consistently with the honor of the sovereign, or the interest of the kingdom: and it were better to be upbraided with unkindness or ingratitude, than to make so ill a use of influence.—The duty of honoring parents is obligatory upon us in every station in life; and too much respect and gratitude cannot be shewn them, provided they be not gratified by unlawful and improper compliances: but no relative affection, no engagement whatever, can bind us to do a thing that is evil, or of bad tendency to the public.—The machinations of crafty men generally entangle themselves, and involve them in mischiefs which simple, upright men escape. (Note, Ps. 125:4,5.) No government can be secure, whilst they, who aim to subvert it, remain unpunished: and such as have been convicted, and still persist in treasonable designs, are proper persons to be sacrificed for the public good, and for an example to others; for apparent severity to them may eventually be mercy to thousands.

V. 26—46.

Those, who have disgraced the sacred ministry by their crimes, are unworthy to officiate in holy things, and should be excluded from them; and wicked priests, though often spared here, will hereafter receive the deepest condemnation. Yet distinctions should be made in the punishment of the guilty; former services and sufferings in a good cause may plead for an alleviation of the sentence, where the law of God will admit of it: and in every event his word will one way or other be accomplished.—Many, who slight th-ordinances of God in their prosperity, flee to them in terror and affliction: but no expedients will avail to secure the impenitent from condign punishment; and the crimes, in which men long glory and prosper, will at length fall with heavier vengeance on their heads.—Even murder admits of degrees of criminality. The character of the persons murdered, their rank, and usefulness to society; and the malice, treachery, and boldness, with which the crime was perpetrated; enhance proportionably its malignity.—Different offenders ought to be treated in diverse ways, and punishments so inflicted, as may appear most equitable.—The old malignity remains in the unconverted heart, and a watchful eye should be kept on those, who have manifested their enmity, but have given no evidence of their repentance: yet, it is well to shew them such impartiality, as shall cause them to confess, "The saying is good." But no engagements or dangers can restrain worldly men from their pursuits; they will go on, though they forfeit their lives and souls: and contempt of authority, and the obligation of an oath, when their own interests are concerned, evince them to be ripe for destruction.—Thus, the kingdom of Christ is established by the ruin of its obstinate opposers, and the advancement of its cordial friends. Those who injure his people will be called to account perhaps long after; and all, who are kind to them, shall be surely recompensed. Wisdom, justice, truth, and mercy unite in his administration: his kingdom is from the Lord; his enemies will be condemned out of their own mouths; and the wickedness, to which their own hearts are privy, will silence all their pleas. (Note, 1 John 3:18—24.) Many have incurred his wrath by a forbidden pursuit of worldly objects; and in aiming to secure some needless possession, have lost their immortal souls. May we be his faithful subjects! May the Lord more and more establish and extend his kingdom, by making his foes his footstool; and may the whole earth be filled with his glory, and with the acclamations of his willing people!

NOTES.

CHAP. III. V. 1. As Rehoboam was born before the death of David, (comp. 11:42 with 14:21.) it is plain that Solomon had before this married Naamah an Ammonitess; (Note, 14:21.) and at this time he married the daughter of the Egyptian king. It is supposed that both of them had embraced the religion of Israel: and, as Solomon is not censured on this account, there might be special reasons inducing him to this conduct, of which we are not informed. It is also remarkable, that when Solomon's wives drew him into idolatry, the idols of Egypt are not mentioned: so that Pharaoh's daughter does not seem to have been one of his tempters. (Note, 11:1—8.) At first he brought her into the city of David: but after he had finished his other works, he built her a palace at some distance from the temple. (9:24. Note, 2 Chr. 8:11.)

V. 2, 3. Until the temple was builded, the irregularity of sacrificing to the God of Israel in high places, and burning incense at them by the priests, was in some degree connived at: but the people proceeded much further in it, than in the days of David, and Solomon was censurable for countenancing them by his example. Upon high hills, especially when covered with trees, as having peculiar solemnity, and being favorable to retirement, they erected altars, and offered sacrifices, after the manner of the nations around them, but contrary to the law of Moses. (Notes, Lev. 26:30. Deut. 12:2—7. 2 Kings 18:4,22. Ez. 20:28,29.) Solomon, however, "loved the Lord, walking in the statutes of David his father."

V. 4. The tabernacle made under the direction of Moses, and the altar belonging to it, were at this time stationed at Gibeon: and this was on that account, the principal high place, where the priests and Levites officiated according to the law. (2 Chr. 1:5,6. Notes, 1 Chr. 16:37—43. 21:28—30.) Solomon must have continued at Gibeon for some time on this occasion; as he offered a thousand burnt-offerings, upon the altar made child: I know not how [v] to go out or come in.

8 And thy servant is in the midst of [x] thy people which thou hast chosen, a great people, that [y] cannot be numbered nor counted for multitude.

9 [z] Give therefore thy servant an * understanding heart [a] to judge thy people, that I may [b] discern between good and bad; for [c] who is able to judge this thy so great a people?

10 And the speech [d] pleased the LORD, that Solomon had asked this thing.

11 And God said unto him, Because thou hast asked this thing, and [e] hast not asked for thyself † long life; neither hast asked riches for thyself, nor hast asked the life of thine enemies, but hast asked for thyself understanding, to ‡ discern judgment;

12 Behold, [f] I have done according to thy words: lo, [g] I have given thee a wise and an understanding heart; so that there was none like thee before thee, neither [h] after thee shall any arise like unto thee.

13 And [i] I have also given thee that which thou hast not asked, both [k] riches and honor; so that there § shall not be any among the kings like unto thee all thy days.

14 And [l] if thou wilt walk in my ways, to keep my statutes and my commandments, [m] as thy father David did walk, then [n] I will lengthen thy days.

15 And Solomon [o] awoke; and behold, it was a dream. And he came to Jerusalem, and stood [p] before the ark of the covenant of the LORD, and offered up burnt-offerings, and offered [q] peace-offerings, and made [r] a feast to all his servants.

V. 5—14. (Notes, Gen. 20:1—6. 31:23,24. Job 4:12—16. 33:14—18.) In ordinary dreams almost every thing is incoherent and irrational, though they often savor of a man's waking thoughts, pursuits, and character: but Solomon's dream was of another kind. While his corporeal senses were locked up in sleep, the powers of his soul were supernaturally invigorated; and he was enabled to receive the divine vision, and to make a suitable choice in the case referred to him. His pleas were cogent, and his determination wise. His father had ruled over Israel in truth and righteousness, and had been greatly favored and prospered; he was the first of the rulers of Israel, who had been succeeded by his son; Solomon had been preferred before his elder brethren by God's own appointment: all these circumstances concurred to raise men's expectations, or to excite their enmity and envy; and thus to increase the importance and arduousness of his station. The people were very numerous, they were the chosen of God, and among them he must both judge in equity, and promote true religion. Yet he was very young, and inexperienced as a child. (Notes, 2:2. 1 Chr. 22:2—5. 29:1. Jer. 1:6—8.) His single petition therefore was, that the Lord would give his servant an understanding heart: that is, that he would enlarge and strengthen his intellectual powers, give him a ready discernment in spiritual things and a correspondent disposition; and furnish him with the peculiar talents and capacities for government; that he might administer justice and judgment, with impartial rectitude and deep penetration, for the benefit of the people and the honor of God. Doubtless these sentiments were habitually in Solomon's mind, previously to this dream: and his consciousness of his own insufficiency had led him to depend upon the Lord to qualify him for the discharge of the duties of his important station: and his request accorded to the exhortations which David had given him, and the prayers which he had offered for him. (Notes, 1 Chr. 22:11,12. 28:9. 29:10—19. Ps. 72: title. 1, 2. Prov. 2:1—6. 14:8. Jam. 1:5—8.)—Absalom and Adonijah do not seem to have been troubled with anxiety on this account, though far inferior to Solomon in capacity for ruling: but they sought the honor and power of the kingdom, he desired to discharge the duty of a king.—The disposition and judgment which dictated this petition, in preference to all those alluring distinctions which carnal minds pursue, and which especially attract young persons in superior stations, was well pleasing to the Lord; and he assured Solomon, that "he had given him a wise and understanding heart," and that he should receive a very large accession of wisdom: (Note, Matt. 13:12.) so that he should excel all the kings of Israel, who had preceded or should succeed him, and indeed all other kings, in every kind of knowledge and discernment, and also in riches and honor which he had not asked. (Notes, 4:30—34. Matt. 6:33,34. 12:41,42.)—The promise of long life was conditionally added; and perhaps it was in part forfeited by the idolatry, and other sins, into which he was afterwards betrayed. (Notes, 2 Chr. 1:7—13.)

V. 15. Marg. Ref.—Note, 2 Sam. 6:17

after that I was delivered, that this woman was delivered also: and we were together; there was no stranger with us in the house, save we two in the house.

19 And this woman's child died in the night, because she overlaid it.

20 And she arose, at [x] midnight, and [y] took my son from beside me, while thine handmaid slept, and laid it in her bosom, and laid her dead child in my bosom.

21 And when I arose in the morning to [z] give my child suck, behold it was dead; but when I had considered it in the morning, behold, it was not my son which I did bear.

22 And the other woman said, [a] Nay; but the living is my son, and the dead is thy son. And this said, No; but the dead is thy son, and the living is my son. Thus they spake before the king.

23 Then said the king, The one saith, This is my son that liveth, and thy son is the dead: and the other saith, Nay; but thy son is the dead, and my son is the living.

24 And the king said, Bring me a sword. And they brought a sword before the king.

25 And the king said, [b] Divide the living child in two, and give half to the one, and half to the other.

26 Then spake the woman, whose the living child was, unto the king, (for [c] her bowels * yearned upon her son,) and she said, O my lord, [d] give her the living child, and in no wise slay it. But the other said, Let it be neither mine or thine, but divide it.

27 Then the king answered, and said, Give her the living child, and in no wise slay it: she is the mother thereof.

28 And all Israel heard of the judgment which the king had judged; and they [e] feared the king: for they saw that [f] the wisdom of God was † in him to do judgment.

V. 16—22. These harlots, who by some means escaped punishment for their licentious conduct, were alone when the child of the one died; though probably not when the children were born. The first woman's account, though in great part conjectural, seems to have been the truth. Perhaps the other woman feared some reproach, suspicion, or punishment, as if she had willingly or negligently occasioned the death of her child; or she hoped to have some gain by means of the living child; or perhaps she was induced by envy and malignity to claim it as her own: for her willingness to have it divided afterwards evinced that she had no true affection for it. (26)

V. 23—28. As there were no witnesses in this transaction, and both parties were alike strenuous and positive, the cause became extremely difficult; and probably it was referred to the king's hearing, because it had proved too difficult for the inferior judges. In many countries such cases have been decided by lot, and, which is much worse, by duels; or the parties have been tortured, that they might be compelled to declare the truth. But Solomon adopted the only rational method, by making use of his acquaintance with the human heart, to discover which of them had the feelings of a mother for the living child. Yet when he called for the sword, and ordered the living child to be divided; as none of the auditors seemed to have perceived his intentions, they doubtless would secretly condemn the proposal, as puerile, absurd, and inhuman. The woman, who consented to the division of the child, perhaps expected to obtain Solomon's favor by this acquiescence: but she betrayed her want of natural affection for the child, and her resentment against her competitor; while the other expressed all the feelings of a mother in an artless and inimitable manner. And when the people saw, that, by this extraordinary measure, Solomon had extorted the truth beyond all further doubt; they revered and stood in awe of him, notwithstanding his youth; perceiving "that the wisdom of God was in him to do judgment." (Note, 2:2.)—The murder of illegitimate infants by their mothers, to conceal their own sin and shame, which so frequently occurs in this land, is not so much as intimated in any way in the scriptures, nor, as far as my reading and recollection extend, in any ancient history. The state of morals among the heathen accounts for this, among them, in two ways: 1st. It was not considered as peculiarly disgraceful to either parent to have spurious children: and 2dly. The common practice of exposing infants, whether spurious or not, excluded all temptation to the secret murder of any. But the case must have been very different in Israel: yet this crime seems never to have occurred; nor was any law enacted concerning it. It is not, however, difficult to discover the cause of its frequent and horrid occurrence in our enlightened land, in the stern rejection of the offending female, if detected, from the society of all who are not thus disgraced, without discrimination, or hope of recovery from this infamous loss of caste, so to speak; and in the entire impunity of her male paramour, though perhaps far more deeply criminal. And it is a question of no small importance, in every view, whether some measures might not be taken, to counteract this dire evil, without lowering the standard of morality, or giving encouragement to vice.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—15.

Whatever external or intellectual accomplishments any man may possess; "to love the Lord" is the grand distinction between one man and another: and thus the meanest believer is preferred before all the wise, learned, renowned, and prosperous unbelievers on earth; and is classed among apostles, prophets, and those few princes who have served God. Indeed, admiration of his perfections, gratitude for his goodness, delight in his service, and zeal for his glory, form the perfection and felicity of angels:

and to this character the grace of our Redeemer renews all those, who accept of his salvation.—Such as love the Lord ought to copy the examples, and follow the instructions, of those who have gone before them in the same path; especially of pious parents: but they should be careful to avoid their errors and transgressions; for even good men find it difficult to act themselves at all times as they would counsel others: so that defects will be found in the best characters, and the best state of the church upon earth. We should indeed watch and pray against all evil in ourselves, and use our influence to prevent it in others: yet we should expect to see many things that we disapprove, and learn to make allowances for them.—That is never wasted, which is prudently spent in the service of God: and the munificence and liberality of the great should be proportioned to their affluence, that their example may edify their inferiors. To abound in the work of the Lord, upon scriptural principles, forms the proper method of waiting for the communications of further knowledge, grace, and comfort.—In effect, the Lord by his gospel makes this proposal to all who hear it, "Ask what I shall give thee." (Note, Matt. 7:7—11.) He does not indeed engage to gratify the desires of the ambitious, the covetous, the sensual, the envious, or the revengeful: but he is ever ready to answer the petitions of those, who ask of him heavenly wisdom and spiritual blessings, however guilty, depraved, and foolish they have hitherto been. We should therefore first request the Lord to teach us what to pray for, and how to pray aright: and if we pray from our hearts, and in the Redeemer's name; if we have been taught to ask of the Lord, his favor, his image, his graces, and his comforts; with wisdom, ability, and a willing mind, to fill up our station, in the church and in society, to his glory and the good of others; he has already given us an understanding heart, and will make continual accessions to this gift. When we decidedly prefer these spiritual blessings to all worldly advantages, we may be sure that he will give us as much of outward comforts, as he sees really subservient to our good. We should also honor the riches of his all-sufficiency and liberality, by multiplying and enlarging our requests, and grasping at more and more from him; for he will take it graciously, and deal with us accordingly.—In every service, public and private, they are most qualified for their work, and acquit themselves the best in it, who are most sensible of its difficulty, and of their own insufficiency. It is a hopeful circumstance, when those, whom others call wise men, deem themselves children; and very discouraging, when men are singular in a good opinion of their own abilities and attainments.—Distinguishing favors require peculiar returns of gratitude: and a man's being evidently called to very important and arduous services, may dictate his prayers, and encourage his expectations of proportionable assistance.—Such as succeed eminently wise and good men, should ask a double portion of wisdom and grace, to answer the expectations of others from them: and they who, in deviation from ordinary rules, are employed in any public service, will be more narrowly watched, and more severely censured, if they act inconsistently. Let not this hint be overlooked, or taken amiss, by those who preach the gospel without an express regular appointment from man, in any of those ways by which ministers are ordinarily sent forth.—The continued blessing of God can only be expected in the way of persevering obedience: and negligence or wickedness will always ensure loss in our temporal or spiritual comforts.

Judges, magistrates, and all concerned in trying causes, need great discernment, as well as integrity, in order to search out the truth, when all possible pains and fallacy are employed to conceal it: they ought therefore, in all their studies and in all their decisions, to ask wisdom of God; and we should earnestly remember them in our prayers that he would confer it upon them.—Where the Lord has given abilities, and a heart disposed to improve them, he will open a way for the profitable exercise of them in his due time: and an accurate acquaintance with the human heart will be found a most profitable kind of knowledge for all, but especially for magistrates and ministers.—God has made natural affection very strong, especially in mothers, as the great means of preserving their infants, in the midst of their dangers and infirmities, and notwithstanding all the trouble and fatigue which they occasion. Yet human depravity, habitual wickedness, or fear and shame, can extinguish it, and even mothers are capable of becoming the murderers of their own infants! Surely these harlots will rise up in judgment against such unnatural criminals, and condemn them; and still more their brutal seducers, who have deserted them when exposed to these awful temptations.—But to accommodate this transaction, may we not observe, that many professors of the gospel (like the pretended mother who consented to have the child divided,) would mutilate the sacred Scriptures, and leave out those parts, which oppose their prejudices, pride, and lusts? yea, they would fain divide their hearts between God and mammon. But the true believer loves the whole Scripture, and holds it fast, and values doctrines, precepts, warnings, promises, and every part, as necessary to the perfection of the inestimable whole: and this cordial affection proves the whole to be his own. He would yield his heart entirely to the Lord, and seek after his happiness from him alone. Soon our Solomon will decide between these two characters: "in him is the wisdom of God to do judgment." Let us then see to it, that our cause and title be clear: for he cannot be imposed upon by any evasions or subterfuges; seeing he "searcheth the hearts of all the children of men," and "all things are naked and open before him, with whom we have to do."

V. 2—6. (Marg. Ref.)—Several of these princes, or ministers of state, and chief officers, were either the same persons as David had employed, or their sons. (20:23—25. Note, 2 Sam. 8:15—18.)—Abiathar, though deposed from the high priesthood, and secluded from the sanctuary, retained under Zadok the title and emoluments of a priest, or one of the chief priests. Azariah the son, or grandson, of Zadok, being the son of Ahimaaz, (1 Chr. 6:8,9.) might under his grandfather have the chief management of ecclesiastical matters. Two sons of Nathan the prophet, as it is supposed, were preferred by Solomon, and one was dignified as the king's friend.

V. 7—19. (Marg. Ref.) These officers were appointed to procure every kind of provision, where it was most plentiful and good: and we may suppose that, besides the monthly supply of such productions as were common to the whole land, they would purchase upon the spot those provisions which were peculiar to each district, and which could be preserved. This was a salutary and economical arrangement, and would prevent any part of the country from being improperly drained; it would also promote an equal consumption, and supply the requisite plenty upon the best terms.—Two of these purveyors married daughters of Solomon: for it was not his policy, to prevent his children from intermarrying with his subjects. Perhaps he had more daughters, though but one son by all his wives. But these marriages must have taken place many years after his accession, and this chapter should be considered as a general account of the state of the land in his reign. Geber seems to have had the chief management of the whole country beyond Jordan, and to have employed his son, and Ahinadab, under him in that district. (13,14,19.)

V. 20. The people were not diminished in Solomon's reign, by wars, invasions, or intestine contests; and therefore they grew exceedingly numerous and prosperous, and lived in great peace and plenty. (Marg. Ref.—Note, Ec. 2:24—26.) But they seem to have been too much pleased and elated with their external blessings, and to have indulged themselves too freely in the use of them.

31 For he was [c] wiser than all men; than [d] Ethan the Ezrahite, and [e] Heman, and Chalcol, and Darda, the sons of Mahol: and [f] his fame was in all nations round about.

32 And [g] he spake three thousand proverbs: and his [h] songs were a thousand and five.

33 And he spake of trees, from [i] the cedar-tree that is in Lebanon, even unto [k] the hyssop that springeth out of the wall: he spake also [l] of beasts, and of fowl, and of creeping things, and of fishes.

34 And [m] there came of all people to hear the wisdom of Solomon, from all kings of the earth, which had heard of his wisdom.

V. 21. David had subdued all the countries, from the entrance of Egypt to the river Euphrates: and Solomon reaped the fruit of his victories, by reigning peaceably over these extensive territories, and increasing his own wealth, and that of his native subjects, by the presents and tributes of the inhabitants. (Notes, Gen. 15:18—21. Ex. 23:31. Josh. 1:3,4. 2 Sam. 8:3. Ps. 72:8—11.)

V. 22, 23. The provisions here mentioned would suffice for several thousands of people. Solomon's servants and officers, and those who flocked to his court from all parts of the land, and from distant nations, with their retinues, were no doubt entertained upon them. (Note, Neh. 5:14—18.)

Measures. (22) Cors. (marg.) A cor is generally computed at ten ephahs, or rather above seventy-two gallons.

V. 24. Tiphsah is supposed to have been a city, near which there was a passage over the Euphrates, either by a ford, a ferry, or a bridge; the name being derived from a word which signifies to pass over. (Note, 2 Sam. 19:18.) Azzah is Gaza of the Philistines, the original word being the same.

V. 25. (Marg. Ref.) The land from the one end to the other was in such profound peace, and was so exempt from oppression or terror, that the people disregarded the protection of walled cities, and lived upon their lands, that they might enjoy their abundance upon the spot, where it was produced. V. 26. "A thousand four hundred chariots, &c." 10:26. 2 Chr. 1:14. "Four thousand stalls for horses and chariots, &c." 2 Chr. 9:25. Different ways have been taken of reconciling these texts; none of which are satisfactory. Four thousand stalls (not stables) would be a proper number, for a thousand chariots to have change of horses. The four hundred might be added afterwards. As numbers were generally expressed in the manuscripts by numeral letters, over which, in many cases, a small mark distinguished one number from another much smaller; it seems most obvious to suppose that a trivial mistake has here occurred. Forty thousand stalls for chariot horses, (unless all sorts of carriages be included,) seems out of all proportion to twelve thousand horsemen: and in no other place are more, than a thousand and four hundred chariots mentioned. (Notes, 10:24—27. Deut. 17:16.)

heavenly wisdom, and singular talents for government, but extraordinary capacities for the attainment of all kinds of knowledge: so that he excelled the wise men of Egypt, and of Babylon, of Arabia, or countries still more to the east, in astronomy, and all other sciences for which they were renowned. In the knowledge of divinity he surpassed Ethan and Heman, who seem to have been men renowned for extraordinary piety and wisdom at that time; and all others who were celebrated in Israel on the same account.—(Marg. Ref. d—f. 1 Chr. 2:5,6.) He excelled also in morality, politics, and economics; for he spake three thousand proverbs, of which such as were most suited for general utility have come down to us in the book of Proverbs. He likewise excelled in poetry, and wrote one thousand and five songs: but only one of these is preserved in Scripture. It may, however, be supposed, that many of the others were upon moral and religious subjects; as well as remarkable for the beauties of poetry. He was, moreover, deeply versed in all the branches of natural philosophy, and discoursed in an admirable manner upon the nature, properties, and uses of the several species of plants and animals. So that in every thing he possessed such an undisputed superiority over all men in that age, that his reputation for wisdom brought numbers from different kings and nations all around, to learn every kind of useful knowledge from him: and perhaps he possessed more accurate and extensive knowledge, on an immense variety of subjects, than any mere man besides, in any age or nation of the world, ever did.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—28.

True wisdom generally directs those, who succeed prudent and prosperous men in kingdoms or estates, to tread in their steps, to employ their servants, and to avail themselves of the good advice of their friends and counsellors: but folly and self-conceit delight in making many and great changes, though they commonly prove disadvantageous. (Notes, 12:6—15. 2 Kings 21:1—3. Ec. 2:18—23.)—Those who faithfully seek the good of our souls, though sometimes with sharp reproofs, are our best friends: and their memories are always entitled to grateful respect, and their children to kind regard; yet these are worthy of a wise man's confidence and friendship, only when they tread in the steps of their pious parents.—The different ranks of men in society should be distinguished by a suitable attendance and provision: but "when goods increase, they are increased that eat them," and the owners have much additional incumbrance, and but little accession of solid advantage. (Note, Ec. 5:9—12.) It is also extremely difficult to possess abundance, without covetousness, luxury, or ostentation; without abusing, wasting, or burying, the goods of our common Lord, to whom every one must give an account of his stewardship: yet, prudent management and frugality are excellent appendages to liberality, and serve to support the expenses of it.—Wise and righteous princes are most valuable blessings to whole kingdoms, and should be sought in prayer from that God, who has all hearts in his hands: yet all outward prosperity is precarious and transient; and too often it proves unfavorable to religion, and increases pride, sloth, and sensual indulgence; thus rendering divine judgments necessary.—Wealth without wisdom, and knowledge without humility and grace, are generally destructive to the possessor, and to those with whom he is connected; yet both are the gifts of God, good in themselves, and only evil as perverted by man's depravity. And heavenly wisdom teaches men to give God the glory in the use of these inferior blessings, and so renders them ornamental to the Christian profession, and conducive to promote designs of extensive usefulness.

V. 29—34.

A reputation for wisdom and piety is no further desirable, than as it consists with humility, and affords a man an opportunity of communicating more extensively that useful knowledge, which the Lord has imparted. (Note, Ec. 10:1.)—Every information, which is needful in order to our glorifying God and obtaining his "salvation with eternal glory," is preserved to us in the sacred Scriptures: and the light of heaven will more certainly and speedily instruct us in all useful knowledge, than all the regretted records of antiquity could do if we had them Let us then rejoice that the Lord reigns on a mercy-seat, and that his name is Emmanuel. His kingdom was faintly shadowed forth in that of Solomon, but is of a nobler and more heavenly nature. The blessings of it consist not "in meat and drink, but in righteousness, peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost." In his days the righteous flourish; their numbers have already been exceedingly multiplied, and future ages shall witness a more rapid and immense increase, "when all kings shall bow down before him, and all nations shall serve him." (Note, Ps. 72:8—11.) Then "shall they beat their swords into plowshares, and war shall be learned no more:" then shall "every man call his neighbor under the vine, and under the fig-tree." (Notes, Is. 2:2—5. Mic. 4:1—5.) "In him are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge;" his fame shall spread through all the earth, and all people shall come to him, learn of him, take upon them his easy yoke, and find rest for their souls.—But, whilst we look with joyful, longing desires and fervent prayers for these glorious days, let us now sit at his feet, hear his word, ask of him wisdom, submit to his will, and seek his glory. Then, outward tribulation shall not break our inward peace; then, we shall be satisfied with the plenteousness of his house; then, we shall enjoy much liberty, and have many glimpses of his glory on earth; and shall speedily remove to yon brighter world above, where innumerable angels, and redeemed sinners, are happy in his presence, and rapturously celebrating his praises.

NOTES.

Chap. V. V. 1. (Note, 2 Sam. 5:11.) It is highly probable, that Hiram was himself a worshipper of Jehovah, and loved David on account of his wisdom and piety; though his people in general seem to have continued idolaters. He sent to condole with Solomon on his father's death, and to congratulate him on his peaceable

2 And [d] Solomon sent to Hiram, saying,

3 Thou knowest how that David my father [e] could not build an house unto the name of the LORD his God, [f] for the wars which were about him on every side, until the LORD [g] put them under the soles of his feet.

4 But now the LORD my God [h] hath given me rest on every side, so that there is neither adversary, nor evil occurrent.

5 And, [i] behold, I [*] purpose to build an house unto the name of the LORD my God, [k] as the LORD spake unto David my father, saying, Thy son, whom I will set upon thy throne in thy room, he shall build an house unto my name.

6 Now therefore command thou, that they hew me [l] cedar-trees out of Lebanon; and my servants shall be with thy servants: and unto thee [m] will I give hire for thy servants, according to all that thou shalt [†] appoint: for thou knowest [n] that there is not among us any that can skill to hew timber like unto the [o] Zidonians.

7 And it came to pass, when Hiram heard the words of Solomon, that he rejoiced greatly, and said, [p] Blessed be the LORD this day, [q] which hath given unto David [r] a wise son over this great people.

8 And Hiram sent to Solomon, saying, I have [‡] considered the things which thou sentest to me for: and I will do all thy desire, concerning timber of cedar, and concerning [s] timber of fir.

9 My servants shall bring them down from [t] Lebanon unto the sea; and [u] I will convey them by sea in floats unto the place that thou shalt [§] appoint me, and will cause them to be discharged there, and thou shalt receive them; and thou shalt accomplish my desire in [x] giving food for my household.

10 So Hiram gave Solomon cedar-trees and fir-trees, according to all his desire. [B. C. 1012.

11 And Solomon gave Hiram twenty thousand [‖] measures of wheat for food to his household, and twenty measures of pure oil: thus gave Solomon to Hiram year by year.

12 And the LORD gave Solomon wisdom, [y] as he promised him: and there was peace between Hiram and Solomon; and [z] they two made a league together.

13 ¶ And king Solomon raised a [¶] levy out of all Israel; and [a] the levy was thirty thousand men.

14 And he sent them to Lebanon, ten thousand [b] a month by courses; a month they were in Lebanon, and two months at home: and [c] Adoniram was over the levy.

15 And Solomon had [d] threescore and ten thousand that bare burdens, and fourscore thousand hewers in the mountains;

16 Beside the chief of Solomon's officers, which were over the work, [e] three thousand and three hundred, which ruled over the people that wrought in the work.

17 And the king commanded, and they brought great stones, [f] costly stones, and hewed stones, to lay the foundation of the house.

18 And Solomon's builders and Hiram's builders did hew them, and [] the stonesquarers: so they prepared timber and stones to build the house.

succession.—Tyre and Zidon lay north of Canaan, and were not expressly included in the grant to Israel; it was therefore lawful to form alliances with them.

V. 2—9. (Marg. Ref.)—Notes, 1 Chr. 22:6—10. 2 Chr. 2:3—12.) The Tyrians possessed only a small tract of land, and were employed and enriched by commerce and manufactures; and they had their provisions chiefly from the fruitful land of Canaan. (Note, Acts 12:20—23.)

temple. (Marg. Ref.—Note, 9:20—22.) These were superintended by three thousand and three hundred persons, perhaps of the same nations. Three thousand six hundred are mentioned in Chronicles: (2 Chr. 2:17,18.) perhaps three hundred were officers over the rest; or they were supernumeraries, to supply for such as were sick and disabled from attendance.—Thus the temple was chiefly built by the labor and riches of those, who were originally Gentiles; which typified the calling of the Gentiles into the church: and the costly stones laid out of sight, as the foundation of the temple, typified Christ our tried and precious Foundation; and were an emblem of the hidden excellency of those who form a part of his spiritual temple. PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Those who love God are influenced to love one another, and rendered superior to selfish jealousies and envyings: and this divine energy teaches them to rejoice in each other's prosperity, and to be glad to receive or afford mutual assistance in every good undertaking.—The most necessary and successful wars, not only produce very much temporal evil, but obstruct or retard the execution of many useful designs for promoting godliness: we may then, well pray, 'Send peace in our time, O Lord:' and when he "gives rest on every side, so that there is no adversary nor evil occurrent," no time should be lost, but every one should be intent to devise and execute such useful undertakings as were before prevented. (Note, Acts 9:31.)—Different persons are qualified for diverse services; and while all harmoniously concur, in their proper places, and by improving their several talents, the common cause will prosper.—It is admirable when the children rise up, and complete the wise and pious designs of their deceased parents: and all should rejoice and bless the Lord, when they see such tokens of the prosperity of his church.—God has so constituted the earth, that every nation has its peculiar productions, and its inhabitants their distinguished endowments: thus their mutual intercourse is forwarded; and, by an interchange of benefits, they are instructed to love one another as children of the same family. Happy would it be, if commerce were generally conducted on such principles, and rendered subservient to the promulgation of true religion: but alas! through man's depravity, it has often tended to diffuse wickedness and misery rapidly through the nations of the earth!—All agreements should be made with consideration, that equity may be established, and contests precluded: and great punctuality should be observed in paying laborers their wages.—Frequently, they are most ingenious in the liberal arts, who are strangers to true godliness; and many are employed about the church of God, who have no interest in its blessings. (Notes, Ps. 87:4—7. P. O.) The meanest office in his service is honorable and profitable, if cordially performed: and millions of us poor Gentiles, who in ourselves were devoted to destruction, have been employed by him.—Our gracious Lord lays no intolerable burdens on any of his people; but in every injunction consults their interests and comfort. Let us then serve him cheerfully, and attend to our proper work: and after his example may we be humane and considerate in all our requisitions from our inferiors; that our service, like his, may be loved, and considered as a privilege by those employed in it.

NOTES.

CHAP. VI. V. 1. The use and typical meaning of the temple, and those of the tabernacle, were the same: but the moveable tabernacle suited the state of Israel when wandering in the wilderness, and a magnificent temple was more proper when they were settled in Canaan. (Notes, Ex. 25:8,9.)—A temple was not indeed essential to the religion of Israel: and therefore the building of it was deferred till four hundred and eighty years, after that people was brought out of Egypt; or four hundred and forty years after they entered Canaan: (Note, Judg. 11:26.) and this temple was destroyed, in less than four hundred and twenty years after it was finished.—Solomon was more than three years, in making the necessary preparations; and in the fourth year of his reign, he laid the foundation. The month Zif was the second of the ecclesiastical year. Some think that the names of the months, here given, were not in use before the captivity.

V. 2, 3. The temple was a very magnificent building, and immense quantities of gold and silver were used about it: yet, apart from its courts, it was but a small structure, compared with many buildings in ancient and modern times.—It was about a hundred feet long, thirty-three feet wide, and fifty feet high: and it had a porch, on the east end at the entrance, which formed in some respects an ornamental steeple of about two hundred feet high. (Notes, 2 Chr. 3:3,4.) The tabernacle erected in the wilderness is computed to have been fifty feet long,

4 And for the house he made *windows of narrow lights.

11 ¶ And the word of the LORD came to Solomon, saying,

12 Concerning this house which thou art in building, [l] if thou wilt walk in my statutes, and execute my judgments, and keep all my commandments to walk in them; [m] then will I perform my word with thee, which I spake unto David thy father:

13 And [n] I will dwell among the children of Israel, and [o] will not forsake my people Israel.

[Practical Observations.]

14 ¶ So [p] Solomon built the house, and finished it.

15 And he built the walls of the house within with boards of cedar, ††both the floor of the house, and the walls of the ceiling: and he covered them on the inside with wood, and covered the floor of the house with planks of fir.

16 And he built twenty cubits on the sides of the house, both the floor and the walls, with boards of cedar: he even [q] built them for it within, even for the oracle, even for the most holy place.

17 And the house, that is, the temple before it, was forty cubits long.

18 And the cedar of the house within was carved with ‡‡knops and §§open flowers: all was cedar; there was no stone seen.

19 And [r] the oracle he prepared in the house within, [s] to set there the ark of the covenant of the LORD.

twelve or thirteen feet wide, and nearly seventeen feet high.

V. 4. The tabernacle had no light from without, and the temple had not much. (Note, Ex. 25:31—39.) These windows, which are supposed to have been wider on the inside than without, were situated in the spaces between the chambers afterwards mentioned; or, as some think, above them. (Marg.)

V. 5, 6. These chambers accommodated the priests, when they were upon duty at the temple: and in them they laid up their clothes, the sacred vessels not in immediate use, and the other treasures belonging to the temple. For the purpose of fixing these chambers, the wall of the temple was made two cubits thicker at the bottom than at the top: and where it was made a cubit less in thickness, a rest was formed on the outside, for the beams of the second story of chambers to lodge upon, and so for the third. By this contrivance the upper stories were larger than the lower; and the wall of the temple was not weakened, either by building, or by repairing the chambers. It is supposed that there was also a gallery round about, by which the priests entered the chambers; and that there were no chambers over the entrance of the temple. (Notes, Ez. 41:5—12.)

V. 7. Every stone was squared, and fitted for its place, at the quarry; so that the temple was erected without noise, or the encumbrance of useless rubbish. Several of these circumstances may shadow forth spiritual things. (P. O.)

V. 8. There seems to have been a door, in each of the two upper stories, into a gallery, which communicated with all the chambers; and winding stairs from one story to another.

V. 10. The chambers were five cubits high in each story; and thus they did not go up to the top of the temple, which was thirty cubits high. (3) The windows are supposed to have been placed above the top of the chambers. (Note, 4.) —The beams of cedar lay on the rests in the wall. (Note, 5,6.)

V. 11—13. This word of the Lord was both an encouragement to Solomon to proceed; and an intimation to him, and to Israel, that neither the service performed in building the temple, nor its continuance with them, could secure to them the Lord's favor, if they were not obedient to his commandments: for both king and people stood upon the same terms with God, as they did

20 And the oracle in the forepart was twenty cubits in length, and [t] twenty cubits in breadth, and twenty cubits in the height thereof; and he overlaid it with [*] pure gold; and so covered [u] the altar which was of cedar.

21 So Solomon [x] overlaid the house within with pure gold; and he made a partition [y] by the chains of gold before the oracle, and he overlaid it with gold.

22 And the whole house he overlaid with gold, until he had finished all the house: [z] also the whole altar that was by the oracle he overlaid with gold.

23 And within the oracle he made [a] two cherubims of [†] olive-tree, each ten cubits high.

24 And five cubits was the one wing of the cherub, and five cubits the other wing of the cherub; from the uttermost part of the one wing unto the uttermost part of the other were ten cubits.

25 And the other cherub was ten cubits: both the cherubims were of one measure, and one size.

26 The height of the one cherub was ten cubits, and so was it of the other cherub.

27 And he set the cherubims within the inner house: [b] and [‡] they stretched forth the wings of the cherubims, so that the wing of the one touched the one wall, and the wing of the other cherub touched the other wall; and their wings touched one another in the midst of the house.

28 And he overlaid the cherubims with gold.

29 And he carved all the walls of the house round about with [c] carved figures of cherubims, and [d] palm-trees, and [§] open flowers, within and without.

30 And [e] the floor of the house he overlaid with gold, within and without.

31 And for the entering of the oracle he made [f] doors of olive-tree: the lintel and side-posts were [‖] a fifth part of the wall.

32 The [¶] two doors also were of olive-tree; and he carved upon them carvings of cherubims, and palm-trees, and [] open flowers, and overlaid them with gold, and spread gold upon the cherubims, and upon the palm-trees.

33 So also made he for the door of the temple, posts of olive-tree, [††] a fourth part of the wall.

34 And the two doors were of [g] fir-tree: the [h] two leaves of the one door were folding, and the two leaves of the other door were folding.

35 And he carved thereon cherubims, and palm-trees, and open flowers; and covered them with gold fitted upon the carved work.

36 And he built [i] the inner court with three rows of hewed stone, and a row of cedar beams.

before the temple was begun. (Notes, 9:3—6. Jer. 7:3—15.)

V. 15—22. The inside of the walls of the temple were throughout wainscotted with cedar, ornamented with exquisite workmanship; and it was floored with planks of fir, or, as some explain the word, of a very durable kind of cedar: yet both these were covered with plates of solid gold. (Note, Ez. 41:22.) In the same manner and proportion, as the tabernacle had been, this building was divided into two parts. (Note, Ex. 26:31—33.) "The oracle," or "the most holy place," in which was the ark of the covenant, with the mercy-seat, and from whence the Lord delivered his answers to the high priest from above the mercy-seat, was twenty cubits square: it is also said to have been twenty cubits high, though the house was thirty: it was therefore either built or ceiled lower than the other part of the temple. The veil, which separated the holy of holies, was hung by golden chains on pillars erected for that purpose. (2 Chr. 3:15,16.)—"The altar, by the oracle," was the altar of incense without the veil; in the holy place, which was twice as long as the most yoly place.

V. 23—28. These cherubim were the emblems of the angels, as jointly worshipping God our Savior; and as delighting to contemplate the mysteries of redemption.—They were distinct from, and much larger than, those which covered the mercy-seat and indeed were inseparably united to it. (Notes, Ex. 25:10—22.)—They stood erect with "their faces towards the wall;" (2 Chr. 3:13.) and they covered with their out-stretched wings the whole breadth of the most holy place.—The others were of solid gold; but these of olive-tree covered with gold.

V. 31—35. It is probable, that, besides the veil, there was another partition between the holy of holies and the sanctuary. The veil covered the whole of this: but when that was drawn aside, folding doors, of olive-tree plated with gold, and curiously engraved with cherubim and palm-trees, took up a fifth of the partition, or about four cubits.—The doors at the entrance of the sanctuary were rather larger.

V. 36. The inner court, at the entrance of the sanctuary, in which the altar of burnt-offering stood, was principally appropriated to the priests, Levites, and those who brought the sac-

CHAP. VII.

Solomon builds himself an house, 1: and the house of the forest of Lebanon, 2—5: the porch of pillars, 6: the porch of judgment, 7: the house of Pharaoh's daughter, 8. The costly materials of these structures, and of the great court, 9—12. Hiram, a skilful artificer, is fetched from Tyre, 13, 14. He casts two pillars of brass, 15—22: and the brazen sea; with ten bases, and ten lavers, and other vessels for the temple, 23—47. The furniture and sacred vessels of gold are made for the temple, 48—50. The dedicated treasures are brought into it, 51

2 He built also [b] the house of the forest of Lebanon; the length thereof was an hundred cubits, and the breadth thereof fifty cubits, and the height thereof thirty cubits, upon four rows of cedar-pillars, with cedar-beams upon the pillars.

(Notes, Ex. 27:9—19. Ez. 40: 41: 42:) It was separated from the other courts by a wall of hewn stone: but it is supposed that part of it was built of cedar-beams, to leave openings, through which the other worshippers might see the sacrifices offered, and join in the sacred services.

V. 37, 38. The whole time was seven years and a half; but the number of whole years alone is mentioned. This is frequently the case.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—13.

Though God does not delight in outward magnificence, but is present with his poor people who assemble in the meanest place, and accepts their worship: yet he expects that the wealthy should devote their riches to his service. And whatever is liberally expended, out of zeal for his glory, and according to the rule of his word, shall be graciously accepted; though perhaps man may censure the expense, as needless or useless. (Notes, Matt. 26:6—13. John 12:1—8.)—Every good work should be done heartily and without procrastination: but it is not needless delay to consult prudent measures, to make requisite preparations, and to remove such obstructions, as might afterwards impede our progress, or divert our attention. Thus, young men, animated with a laudable design to seek the salvation of souls, and impatient to be employed in the work of the ministry, would do well to restrain their ardor, to wait for a proper opening in Providence, and to spend some time in previous study, meditation, and prayer; that they may acquire the wisdom, experience, humility, and steadiness, requisite for so important a work; and afterwards proceed in it without interruption, and to better effect: and a few years spent in this manner will no more be lost time, than those which were employed in preparations for the building of Solomon's temple.—Every thing in the church above is conducted in perfect harmony and regularity; every part of that spiritual temple being made ready for its place, before it is conveyed thither: and the more the church on earth resembles it the better.—The true church of God is most glorious within; and the true believer is chiefly employed in attending to the state of his heart.—In all religious matters conveniency must be preferred to splendor; but stability must not be sacrificed even to apparent convenience.—No pompous services will purchase a dispensation from obeying the least of God's commandments. All those things in which men, who allow themselves in sin, confide, will be found as unavailing, as the temple was to the wicked kings and people of Israel: for nothing but unreserved obedience, to the precepts and statutes of God's word, can prove the sincerity of our faith, and our love to the Savior. But, though numbers of professors apostatize, and whole nations forfeit their peculiar privileges; yet the Lord will dwell in the midst of his true people, and never forsake them: and they will delight in his ordinances and commandments; and be encouraged by being told their duty, as it is a token of the Lord's favor to them.

V. 14—38.

What is begun in the fear and love of God, in dependence on him, and obedience to him, will in due time be accomplished to his glory.—God must be honored with the best we have: but gold is only meet to be trodden under foot, in comparison with the beauty of holiness, which is the glory and ornament of his spiritual temple.—The human nature of the Redeemer, that true Temple in which God dwells with man, is immaculately holy: the Christian, as united unto Jesus, and "an habitation of God through the Spirit," is sanctified in his measure: and the church above, where innumerable angels unite with redeemed sinners, in ceaseless worship of God our Savior, is perfect in this beauty. Let not then the hypocrite, or formal professor of Christianity, who is a stranger to the sanctifying influences of God's Spirit, and who lives in secret or open sin, suppose himself a part of this living Temple.—Yet let sinners come to Jesus, as the living Foundation, that they may be built on him, a part of this spiritual house, consecrated in body and soul to the glory of God. (Notes, Eph. 2:19—22. 1 Pet. 2:4—6.)—If we have good ground to conclude, that we are a part of this living Temple; let us look to it, that our inward part, which is seen by God alone, may be preserved most pure: let us be careful also of our outward conduct, that our blameless conversation may be ornamental to our profession in the sight of man: let us look to Jesus for encouragement and assistance in every service, and as the great exemplar to which we are to be conformed: and let us by faith behold that glorious company whom we hope soon to join; that we may now emulate their praises, imitate their obedience, and thus anticipate their comforts, even in this world of sin and sorrow.

NOTES.

CHAP. VII. V. 1. Solomon began the temple first, and was most earnest in expediting it; and therefore it was finished in far less time than his own palace. As he employed twenty years in these buildings; (9:10.) it seems he finished the temple before he began his own house; though his numerous workmen might have carried on both together.

V. 2. Some have thought that this palace was built, for retirement, in a beautiful situation near mount Lebanon: but it seems rather to have been erected not far from Jerusalem; and to have been thus called, either from its airy and lofty situation, or from the cedars of Lebanon of which it was built. For Solomon put the shields of gold "in the house of the forest of

V. 6—12. The "porch of pillars" is supposed have been a covered portico, in which Solnon's guards and attendants waited: and "The rch of judgment," another portico, in which sat to decide causes. It is not certain, hether "the porch of pillars," belonged to "the use of the forest of Lebanon," or to the pale in Jerusalem: but it is most probable, that he porch for the throne" was at Jerusalem.—he palace seems to have stood within two urts; one nearer to it than "the porch for the rone," and the other farther off.—The palace Pharaoh's daughter was placed at some disnce, "out of the city of David:" (Note, 2 Chr. 11.) but it was built with the same magnifence as the other palaces. The costly stones em to have been large valuable blocks of marble, beautifully squared and polished on every side: and the outer court was surrounded with a wall, like that which separated the court of the temple; so that the people might look through the rows of the cedar-beams, which were placed at proper distances. These buildings, though magnificent, were intended for use, and not merely for ostentation: and no doubt they were finished in the best style of the architecture of those days. The court round Solomon's own house was built in the same manner, as the inner court of the house of the Lord.

V. 13, 14. Hiram's mother is in Chronicles said to have been "of the daughters of Dan;" (2 Chr. 2:14.) and some think, that Dan was the name of her father: but probably, she was originally of the tribe of Dan, and had first been married to a man of Naphtali; and, being by him left a widow, had married a Tyrian to whom she bare Hiram, or Huram, who was called by the name of the king of Tyre. This man, uniting, as it were, the Israelite and the Gentile in one person, and being the chief workman pillars had pomegranates also above, over against the belly which was by the network: and the [x] pomegranates were two hundred in rows round about upon the other chapiter.

21 And [y] he set up the pillars in [z] the porch of the temple: and he set up the right pillar, and called the name thereof [*] Jachin; and he set up the left pillar, and called the name thereof [†] Boaz.

22 And upon the top of the pillars was lily-work: so was the work of the pillars finished.

23 ¶ And [a] he made [b] a molten sea, ten cubits from [‡] the one brim to the other: it was round all about, and his height was five cubits: and a line of thirty cubits did compass it round about.

24 And under the brim of it round about there were [c] knops compassing it, ten in a cubit, [d] compassing the sea round about: the knops were cast in two rows when it was cast.

25 It stood upon [e] twelve oxen, three looking toward the north, and three looking toward the west, and three looking toward the south, and three looking toward the east: and the sea was set above upon them, and all their hinder parts were inward.

26 And it was [f] an hand-breadth thick, and the brim thereof was wrought like the brim of a cup, [g] with flowers of lilies: it contained [h] two thousand baths.

27 And he made ten [i] bases of brass: four cubits was the length of one base, and four cubits the breadth thereof, and three cubits the height of it.

28 And the work of the bases was on this manner: they had borders, and the borders were between the ledges:

29 And on the borders that were between the ledges were [j] lions, oxen, and cherubims: and upon the ledges there was a base above; and beneath the lions and oxen were certain additions made of thin work.

30 And every base had four brazen [k] wheels, and plates of brass; and the four corners thereof had undersetters: under the laver were undersetters molten, at the side of every addition.

31 And the mouth of it, within the chapiter and above, was a cubit: but the mouth thereof was round, after the work of the base, a cubit and a half; and also upon the mouth of it were gravings with their borders, four-square, not round.

32 And under the borders were four wheels: and the axle-trees of the wheels were [§] joined to the base, and the height of a wheel was a cubit and half a cubit.

33 And [l] the work of the wheels was like the work of a chariot-wheel; their axle-trees, and their naves, and their felloes, and their spokes, were all molten.

34 And there were four undersetters to the four corners of one base: and the undersetters were of the very base itself.

35 And in the top of the base was there a round compass of half a cubit high: and on the top of the base, the ledges thereof, and the borders thereof, were of the same.

36 For on the plates of the ledges thereof, and on the borders thereof, he [m] graved cherubims, lions, and palm-trees, according to the [‖] proportion of every one, and additions round about.

37 After this manner he made the ten bases: all of them had one casting, one measure, and one size.

in making the furniture of the temple, aptly represented the union of Jews and Gentiles in the Christian church. (Note, Eph. 2:19—22.)

V. 15—22. (Marg. Ref.) Each of these pillars being eighteen cubits in height, the two together would measure thirty-six cubits in length: but one cubit is supposed to be allowed for the bases. (2 Chr. 3:15.)—The chapiters are, in one place, said to have been three cubits in height: but the upper part, covered with decorations, is thought to be there mentioned separately, and to be here included. (16. 2 Kings 25:17.)—There were four hundred pomegranates in all; two hundred on each chapiter, in two rows of an hundred each. Perhaps ninety-six of these might be counted on every side; being nearly one half of the whole number on each chapiter: but, as some think, there were ninety-six smaller pomegranates in each row, in four divisions, towards the four quarters of the sky; and four larger pomegranates were placed between these four divisions. (Jer. 52:23.)—A writer, who completely understood such subjects, would scarcely be able, by words without plates, to convey any adequate ideas of the ornamental workmanship described in this chapter.—These pillars were intended for ornament and for significancy. "Jachin" signifies, He shall establish: "Boaz," In him is strength. (Marg.) And thus the priests and worshippers were reminded to ry laver was four cubits: and upon every one of the ten bases one laver.

39 And he put five bases on the right * side of the house, and five on the left side of the house; and [o] he set the sea on the right side of the house eastward, over against the south.

40 ¶ And [†] Hiram made [p] the lavers, and [q] the shovels, and [r] the basons: [s] so Hiram made an end of doing all the work that he made king Solomon for the house of the LORD:

46 In the plain of Jordan did the king cast them, in ‖ the clay-ground between [a] Succoth and [b] Zarthan.

47 And Solomon left all the vessels unweighed, ¶ because they were exceeding many: neither was the weight of the brass  found out.

trust only in the Lord, and not in themselves, or in their forms.

V. 23—39. In the tabernacle there had been one laver of brass, at which the priests continually washed themselves, and the sacrifices. (Note, Ex. 30:18—21.) But now the numbers of the priests and Levites were multiplied, and the sacrifices were proportionably increased. Therefore Solomon prepared this brazen sea; and ten lavers besides, at which the sacrifices were to be washed. These were constantly supplied with water by the Nethinim, or the Gibeonites, who were servants to the priests. (Note, Josh. 9:27.) The brazen sea was a very large reservoir, capable of holding three thousand baths, or about four hundred and fifty hogsheads; though no more than two thousand were generally put into it.—The knops are supposed to have been in the form of an ox's head, (2 Chr. 4:3.) and some think that the water flowed out at the mouths of them, or of some of them.—The oxen on which it was placed, might be intended as a protest against the absurd idolatry of worshipping God under an image in that form.—The ten lavers, though generally placed in two rows, in the inner court of the temple, were fixed upon bases, which ran on wheels, that they might be removed as conveniency required.—The description given of these bases, is very difficult: many of the original words are but seldom used, if at all, elsewhere: and it would be impossible to give a satisfactory explanation of each particular, without labor and prolixity, disproportioned to its importance to us.—The likeness of lions, oxen, &c. we shall hereafter find to be undeniably emblematic of the boldness, patience, diligence, and heavenly-mindedness of the ministers of Christ. (Notes, Ez. 1:5—14. Rev. 4:6—8.) Oxen and cherubim are both mentioned, (29) which shews they were not the same figures. (Note, Ez. 10: 14.)

V. 40—47. Marg. Ref.—Notes, 15—39.—In the plain of Jordan. (46) The place chosen for casting all these vessels of brass, or copper, was doubtless selected for conveniency, and as best suited for the purpose: and, being at a considerable distance from Jerusalem, that city would be preserved from the smoke and noxious vapors necessarily occasioned by the process: and all the vessels brought ready for use to the court of the temple. (6:7.)

V. 48—51. There were ten tables; (2 Chr. 4:8.) but perhaps one was much larger than the rest, and the shew-bread was chiefly placed upon it. Every thing was made new for the temple, even the altar for burnt-offerings; (Note, 2 Chr. 4:1.) except the ark of the covenant with the mercy-seat and cherubim: for this was the peculiar symbol of the Lord's presence with his people, as reconciled in Jesus Christ, the one Mediator between God and man. (Notes, Ex.

CHAP. VIII.

Solomon assembles the elders and princes; and the priests carry the ark into the most holy place, 1—9. The glory of the Lord fills the house, 10, 11. Solomon blesses Israel; and praises God for performing his word to David, 12—21. He prays, that God would answer the supplications of Israel, and of strangers, in all ages, and in all cases, in which they should call upon him, towards this his holy temple, 22—53. He again praises God, and blesses the people, 54—61. He offers very numerous sacrifices, keeps the feast fourteen days; and dismisses the people, who return home joyful and thankful, 62—66.

THEN [a] Solomon [b] assembled the elders of Israel, and all the heads of the tribes, the * chief of the fathers of the children of Israel, unto king Solomon in Jerusalem, [c] that they might bring up the ark of the covenant of the LORD, [d] out of the city of David, which is Zion.

2 And all the men of Israel assembled themselves unto king Solomon [e] at th feast, in the month Ethanim, which is the seventh month.

Thus under the gospel-dispensation, externals of worship are altogether changed, but the way of access and acceptance with God is the same.—Most things were multiplied, or enlarged above what they had been in the tabernacle; but there was but one altar of burnt-offering, and one altar of incense as before. Thus the New Testament dispensation is suited to the promulgation of the gospel, through all nations: but the multiplication of atonements and intercessors is antichristian.—Solomon, having plenty of materials, prepared great quantities of all requisite utensils for the service of the sanctuary, for the benefit of those who should come after him: and he deposited the remainder of the consecrated treasures in the house of the Lord, for the same purpose in future times. (Marg. Ref.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—12.

Princes and nobles may be allowed, without censure, to build their houses, and to lay out their estates, as it is suitable to their rank, conveniency, or inclinations: yet they should be reminded that Solomon found it, and they will at length find it, all a mere vanity. (Notes, Ec. 2:9—11.) They should also be cautioned, not to expend too much in that manner, lest they should be straitened in their ability of doing good to others, and glorifying God: (Notes and P. O. Luke 16:1—12.) and likewise not to suffer such cares and contrivances to take up their time, or to draw their thoughts and affections off from communion with God, and the care of their souls: for peace of conscience, joy in the Holy Ghost, and the lively hope of a heavenly inheritance, are the choicest comforts; the beauties of holiness are the most valuable ornaments; and distinguished usefulness is the most honorable and durable testimony to a man's character. —When, however, men begin first with the service of God, and are not by other employments taken off from it, or rendered negligent in it, and still return to it for satisfaction; and when in all their undertakings, they have an eye to the peculiar duties of their stations, as well as to general conveniency and utility; we may hope, that the multiplicity of their engagements will not materially injure them: but they are treading on perilous ground, and have need of peculiar circumspection, watchfulness, and earnestness in prayer.

V. 13—51.

It is well when great ingenuity unites with equal integrity; when entire confidence is proved to have been well placed; and when every one abounds in the work of the Lord, in proportion as his abilities are enlarged. Yet, in all our services, and after them, we need washing from the guilt and pollution of sin, which defiles us and all we do. Let us therefore bless God for "the Fountain" which he has "opened for sin and for uncleanness;" and which by the preaching of the gospel and the written word, may be conveyed to every part of the earth.—In him also is Strength, and he will establish all who trust in him. Those who depend on their own resolutions, wisdom, or works; who trust in riches, honor, prosperity, or powerful friends; who worship other gods, or depend on other intercessors; and who presume upon their notions, creeds, or external forms; can never be established, but will at length sink and perish. But the power of Christ rests upon the humble believer; his arms uphold him; his grace establishes his heart in hope and love; he is his Stability in every trial, and his Sufficiency for every service: and is both able, and willing "to keep him from falling, and to present him faultless before the presence of his glory, with exceeding joy." He indeed is both the Temple and the Builder; the Altar and the Sacrifice; the Light of our souls, and the Bread of life; and is every way adequate to the largest and most numerous wants of the millions, who have applied, and shall in faith apply to him. External images cannot describe, words cannot express, the heart cannot conceive, his preciousness or his love. Let us come to him, and wash away our sins in his blood; let us seek for the purifying grace of his Spirit; let us walk in the light of his instructive word, and observe his kind directions; let us feed upon him daily 'in our hearts by faith with thanksgiving,' maintain communion with God the Father, through his intercession, and yield up ourselves and all we have to his service. Thus being "strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might," we shall be accepted, useful, and happy; and shall be enabled to do our own work, in our proper places, with fidelity, in a manner consistent with our profession, and to the glory of his name.

NOTES.

CHAP. VIII. V. 1. (Notes, 2 Sam. 6:1,2. 1 Chr 13:1—4.) The temple was in a peculiar manner the residence of JEHOVAH in the midst of Israel, when the ark of the covenant was placed in it: and the want of the ark, after the Babylonish captivity, in the temple then built, intimated that that dispensation was ready to vanish away. Solomon's undertaking therefore was incomplete, and the temple lacked its chief glory, (notwithstanding all its gold and exquisite workmanship,) until the ark was removed thither and fixed in the most holy place. This therefore he took care to perform, according to th law, and in the most public and solemn manner —Mount Moriah, on which the temple was built, was near to the city of David, on mount Zion where the ark was before placed; but was distinct from it. (Notes, 1 Chr. 21:18—30. 22:1. 2 Chr. 3:1,2.)

V. 2. This was about eleven months after the temple was completed. The intervening time

3 And all the elders of Israel came, and [f] the priests took up the ark.

4 And they brought up the ark of the LORD, [g] and the [h] tabernacle of the congregation, and all the holy vessels that were in the tabernacle, even those did the priests and the Levites bring up.

5 And king Solomon, and all the congregation of Israel that were assembled unto him, were with him before the ark, [i] sacrificing sheep and oxen, that could not be told nor numbered for multitude.

6 And [k] the priests brought in the ark of the covenant of the LORD unto [l] his place, into the oracle of the house, to the most holy place, even [m] under the wings of the cherubims.

7 For the cherubims spread forth their two wings over the place of the ark, and the cherubims covered the ark and the staves thereof above.

was doubtless employed in getting every thing ready for the solemnity; and the time which was chosen coincided with the feast of tabernacles, which ensured the presence of multitudes of the most zealous and pious Israelites, along with the elders and chief persons. (2 Chr. 7:8,9. Note, 63—65.)

V. 3. The Levites of Kohath's family were appointed to carry the ark; and the priests were of that family: on the most solemn occasions, therefore, the priests performed this service. (Notes, Num. 7:4—9. Josh. 3:3,4. 2 Sam. 6:12, 13. 1 Chr. 15:15. 2 Chr. 5:2—5.)

V. 4. It is probable, that both the ancient tabernacle which Moses had made, and that which David had formed at Jerusalem, were brought up to the temple, and, with all their vessels and furniture, deposited in its treasuries, 'to avoid all 'danger of superstition and idolatry; and that no 'worship might be performed any where, but only 'at this house of God, which he' (Solomon) 'now 'dedicated to him.' Bp. Patrick. (Note, 2 Kings 18:4.) Thus the Mosaic dispensation afterwards resigned up all its honors to the Christian: and thus the knowledge and grace of the church on earth will be absorbed and lost in the vision and glory of heaven

V. 5. The altar of burnt-offering, which Solomon had prepared, seems to have been covered with sacrifices, without any fire under them: and when Solomon had ended his prayer, the fire came down from heaven and consumed them. (Note, Lev. 9:24. 2 Chr. 7:1—3.) But there might also be other sacrifices on the former altar, and likewise temporary altars erected, with all suitable preparations for so extraordinary an occasion. (Note, 63—65.)

V. 6. (Marg.Ref.)—Oracle] דביר, (from דבר to speak;) because from above the mercy-seat the Lord spake, when the rulers inquired of him by the high priest.

V. 7—9. The cherubim, here mentioned, do not mean those made of solid gold, in the days of Moses, shadowing the ark, which were inseparable from the mercy-seat; (Note, Ex. 25:10—21.) but those which Solomon had just prepared in the most holy place. (Note, 6:23—28.) The ends of the staves might be seen in the holy of holies, but not in the outer sanctuary. The ark now came to its resting place, and it continued in the same situation, when this history was written.—Aaron's rod, the pot of manna, and the copy of the law, were by, but not within, the ark. (Note, Heb. 9:1—5.)

V. 10—14. All the priests and Levites attended the removal of the ark, and sang solemn praises upon the occasion, with the sound of trumpets and instruments of music. (Notes, 2 Chr. 5:11—13.) But when the ark, as the symbol of JEHOVAH's presence, had taken possession of the temple, the cloud filled the whole of it, so that the priests could no longer continue in it. The "thick darkness" represented the comparative obscurity and terror of that dispensation, and the darkness, which in this world rests upon all our inquiries into the things of God and of eternity. "God indeed is LIGHT, and with him is no darkness at all:" but we sinners cannot approach or endure that light, except as seen in the person of Jesus Christ. (Marg. Ref. u. v

15 And he said, [b] Blessed be the LORD God of Israel, [c] which spake with his mouth unto David my father, and [d] hath with his hand fulfilled it, saying,

16 Since [e] the day that I brought forth my people Israel out of Egypt, [f] I chose no city out of all the tribes of Israel to build an house, that [g] my name might be therein; but [h] I chose David to be over my people Israel.

17 And [i] it was in the heart of David my father to build an house for the name of the LORD God of Israel.

18 And the LORD said unto David my father, [k] Whereas it was in thine heart to build an house unto my name, thou didst well that it was in thine heart.

19 Nevertheless [l] thou shalt not build the house; but thy son, that shall come forth out of thy loins, he shall build the house unto my name.

Notes, 2 Cor. 4:5,6. 1 Tim. 6:13—16. 1 John 1:5—7.) This thick darkness, whilst it terrified others, assured Solomon of the divine favor, and that the temple which he had built would be the residence of the ark, and the centre of the worship of Israel, for generations to come: and with these assurances he encouraged the people; he congratulated them on this renewed token of the Lord's former favors to Israel; and he pronounced a solemn and affectionate blessing on them. (Note, 2 Sam. 6:18,19.)—Similar evidences of the Lord's gracious presence, and of his awful glory, had been vouchsafed, when the tabernacle was erected: (Notes, Ex. 40:34,35. Lev. 16:2.) and it is not easy to distinguish with accuracy between the cloud, and the glory of God which filled the house. It may, however, be observed, that at the close of Solomon's prayer, the fire burst forth from the cloud and consumed the sacrifices on the altar. (Note, 2 Chr. 7:1—3.)

V. 15—21. In this introductory address, while Solomon adored and blessed God, with lively gratitude, for performing his promises; he also reminded the people of several particulars, which were well suited to affect their hearts, and prepare them to unite with understanding in the solemn services of that interesting occasion. The Lord had by Moses declared his purpose of selecting one place for his sanctuary, where he might "record his name," and meet and bless his worshippers: but hitherto no temple had been built, and the tabernacle and ark had been removed from one place to another. (Notes, Ex. 20:21—25. Deut. 12:5—7. 2 Sam. 7:5—16.)—David, his chosen king, was indeed accepted in his design of erecting a temple; yet he was not allowed to accomplish his purpose. But at length, according to the promise of God to him, his son had completed the temple, and had brought the ark into the most holy place.—The tables of the law are called the covenant, because the covenant with Israel at Sinai was grounded on them. (Note, Ex. 25:10—22.)

V. 22. A scaffold had been prepared in the court of the temple: and on this Solomon stood up to bless and instruct the people, and then he kneeled down upon it, to offer the following most copious and comprehensive prayer. (2 Chr. 6:13.) To this reverential posture he also added the spreading forth of his hands towards heaven, as expressive of the fervor of his heart, and the largeness of his expectations, in this act of worship. (Marg. Ref. q.)—The king of Israel never looked more glorious than on this occasion. Doubtless his personal performance of this service gave it a peculiar solemnity, and greatly affected the people: (Note, 2 Kings 23:2.) but he was also a type of Christ, who is at once our King and our Intercessor.—It is most probable, that he prayed from a full heart, without any precomposed form of words; but not without having seriously and fully considered the various blessings for which he should pray.

V. 23, 24. Solomon, in opening his prayer, addressed the Lord, with reference to his essential perfections, and relations to all his rational creatures; and, as the God of Israel, the sole object of their worship, the Author of their peculiar mercies, a God in covenant with them, and the eternal Portion of his believing obedient people. Other nations had their imagined deities, whom they worshipped and confided in; but they were not like the God of Israel, who had evidently performed all his covenant-engagements to his "servants, that walked before him

25 Therefore now, LORD God of Israel, [y] keep with thy servant David my father that thou promisedst him, saying, * There shall not fail thee a man in my sight to sit on the throne of Israel: † so that [z] thy children take heed to their way, that they walk before me as thou hast walked before me.

26 And now, [a] O God of Israel, [b] let thy word, I pray thee, be verified, which thou spakest unto thy servant David my father.

27 But [c] will God indeed dwell on the earth? Behold [d] the heaven and heaven of heavens cannot contain thee; how much less this house that I have builded.

28 Yet [e] have thou respect unto the prayer of thy servant, and to his supplication, O LORD my God, to [f] hearken unto the cry and to the prayer which thy servant prayeth before thee to-day;

V. 25, 26. As the Lord had thus far performed his promises to David, in placing his son on his throne, and in enabling him to build him a house; Solomon took occasion to plead for the accomplishment of the other promises, respecting the perpetuity of the succession in his posterity: but this was conditional; and his petition implied a prayer, that they might be directed and inclined to walk before God, as David had done, and in such a manner as might ensure that event. (Notes, 1 Chr. 28:7—9. 29:10—19. Ps. 89:19—37.)

V. 27. Solomon was deeply sensible, and he would have the people seriously consider, that the most magnificent temple was no meet habitation for the infinite God. The ark might abide in it, and the Lord might thence display his gracious presence with his worshippers; which, contrasting his majesty, purity, and justice, with their meanness, guilt, and pollution, was a condescension that could not be sufficiently admired: but "the heaven of heavens," the glorious mansion of angels and archangels, could not contain, or circumscribe, his essential presence. (Notes, Is. 57:15,16. 66:1,2. John 1:1—3,14. Acts 7:44—50. Eph. 2:19—22. Col. 2:8,9. Rev. 21:1—4.)

V. 28—30. The Lord was not essentially more present in the temple than elsewhere; and the full displays of his glory were made in heaven, his throne and his dwelling-place: yet he had "recorded his name" in the temple; and it was a peculiar type of the human nature of Christ, in whom the divine perfections are revealed, as harmonizing in the salvation of believers; and in whom "God is reconciling the world to himself," dwelling among men, and accepting the services and answering the prayers of all true believers.—The sacrifices continually offered, the incense burnt, and the whole service performed at the temple, were typical of the Redeemer's offices, oblation, and intercession. The temple therefore, must be continually adverted to in all their prayers.—Accordingly, the Israelites, when far distant from Jerusalem, were accustomed to turn their faces towards it, as expressive of their dependence on the services there performed by the priests, and of their communion with the worshippers of JEHOVAH: and when they were near it, they resorted thither to present their supplications. (Marg. Ref. g, h.—(Notes, Dan. 6:10,11. Jon. 2:3,4)—Thus Solomon besought God, that in answer to the prayer which he that day offered, he would in all future ages regard the temple with his peculiar favor, and hear the prayers of all who should present them towards it, wheresoever they were, or whatever were their distresses. (Luke 1:8—10.) Under one word, "forgive," he comprised all that he could ask in behalf of his people: for, as all misery springs from sin; forgiveness of sin must prepare the way for the removal of every evil, and the communication of every good; and without it, no deliverance can eventually prove a blessing. (Notes, Ps. 32:1,2. Rom. 4:6—8.)

V. 31, 32. In case a man should be accused of defrauding or robbing his neighbor, and decisive evidence being wanting to prove whether he were or were not guilty; an appeal should be made by oath, at or towards the altar, before the temple, to the heart-searching God, that he was innocent; or in any other case in which this solemn appeal was made; Solomon prayed, that the Lord would interpose, in some evident man-

V. 33, 34. The Israelites would not be "smitten down," or taken prisoners, by their enemies, except they sinned against God: and, notwithstanding their temple, altar, and sacrifices, they could not expect deliverance, or restoration from captivity or bondage, without repentance and turning to the Lord; without confessing their relations and obligations to him, and their sins against him; and without offering their supplications towards the temple, to him who dwelt upon a mercy-seat between the cherubim. (Notes, Josh. 7:10—18. Dan. 9:2—20.)

V. 35, 36. Marg. Ref.—Notes, 17:1. 18:36—40. Jer. 14:1—6.—That thou, &c. (36) In addition to all the teaching of the written word, and the instructions of the priests, Levites, and prophets, Solomon entreated the Lord himself to teach the people to profit by their advantages, and their chastisements: for this would make way for forgiveness, and consequently for returning plenty and prosperity.—The same words are rendered in Chronicles, "When thou hast taught them the good way in which they should walk." (2 Chr. 6:26,27.)—The divine teaching particularly respects this "good way in which we ought to walk," and not merely notions and speculations.

V. 37. Marg. Ref.

V. 38. The plague, &c.] That is, "His own sore, and his own grief." 2 Chr. 6:29. (Note, Prov. 14:10.) The former petitions particularly respected public judgments and distresses; but this passage related to private afflictions and trials, and whatever should fill the heart and conscience of any individual with anguish and dismay.—This interpretation doubtless includes, though it is not confined to, that meaning which is very frequently given to the expression, "the plague of his own heart;" namely, the prevalence of indwelling sin, which as a plague or pestilential disease, is the grief and sore of every true believer; and in connexion with the guilt which in consequence accumulates upon his conscience, brings him day by day, to offer his fervent prayers and supplications before the mercy-seat of a forgiving God.

V. 39. (Notes, John 2:23—25. Heb. 4:12,13. Rev. 2:20—23, v. 23.) The Lord, "who only knoweth the hearts of the children of men," could exactly distinguish betwixt the hypocrite, and the upright penitent believer: and would deal with each, according to the covenant of mercy and grace through the promised Savior, forgiving and doing all good to the one, and leaving the other under condemnation.

V. 40. As "there is no man that sinneth not," (46) so no man could worship a holy God, "if there were not forgiveness with him." (Notes, Gen. 22:11,12. Ps. 130:3,4.) Unless this was clearly revealed, that reverential fear, which unites with hope, and leads men to repent and seek the Lord, would be extinguished, when sinners became acquainted with their own character and state, and with the perfections and holy laws of God; and that slavish fear alone would remain, which unites with enmity and despair, and drives men further and further from God and his worship. (Note, Jam. 2:19,20.)—It is very instructive to compare the several parts of this prayer, with the preceding prophecies, and the subsequent history; which may in good measure be done by consulting the marginal references.

V. 41—43. Solomon was persuaded that the heathen nations would hear of the name, perfections, and wonderful works of JEHOVAH; and would come and worship him at this temple, as the God of Israel, who dwelt among his people by the ark of his strength, and was propitious to them through the sacrifices there offered. (Notes, John 12:20—22. Acts 8:26—31.) He therefore interceded for them also, that they might be accepted, and obtain the same blessings with the native Israelites: and he desired and hoped, that all the nations of the earth might know, fear, and worship the God of Israel. (Notes, 1 Sam. 17:45—47. 2 Kings 19:14—19, v. 19. Ps. 22:27, 28. Jer. 16:19—21. Matt. 6:13.) Accordingly there was a court built, called 'the court of the 'Gentiles,' which was appropriated to the use of those, who came from other nations to worship the God of Israel, but who were not circumcised, and did not observe the ceremonial law.—The prejudices of the Jews, in the days of Christ, against the admission of the Gentiles into the church, arose from ignorance of the Scriptures, connected with national prejudices, pharisaical pride, and bigotry; which being early imbibed, were not easily removed even from true believers.

V. 44, 45. (Marg. Ref.) Thou shalt send, &c. (44) That is, in any just and necessary war; for God did not send the Israelites, when they were actuated by selfishness to engage in oppressive and unrighteous wars; neither could they reasonably expect his assistance in them It does not indeed appear from their history, that they were much engaged in such wars: and many circumstances, arising from the tenure of their lands, and other judicial regulations, as well as their religious ordinances, tending to constitute Israel a nation of agriculturists, powerfully counteracted the pernicious natural pro[s] thine inheritance, [t] as thou spakest by the hand of Moses thy servant, when thou broughtest our fathers out of Egypt, O Lord GOD.

54 ¶ And it was so, that, [u] when Solomon had made an end of praying all this prayer and supplication unto the LORD, he arose from before the altar of the LORD, from [v] kneeling on his knees [w] with his hands spread up to heaven.

55 And he stood, and [x] blessed all the congregation of Israel with a loud voice, saying, 56 [y] Blessed be the LORD, that [z] hath given rest unto his people Israel, according to all that he promised: [a] there hath not * failed one word of all his good promise, which he promised by the hand of Moses his servant.

57 The [b] LORD our God be with us, as he was with our fathers: let him not leave us, nor forsake us:

58 That he may [c] incline our hearts unto him, to walk in all his ways, and to keep [d] his commandments, and his statutes, and his judgments, which he commanded our fathers.

59 And let these my words, wherewith I have made supplication before the LORD, be [e] nigh unto the LORD our God day and night, that he maintain the cause of his servant, and the cause of his people Israel † at all times, [f] as the matter shall require;

60 That [g] all the people of the earth may know that [h] the LORD is God, and that there is none else.

61 Let your heart therefore be [i] perfect with the LORD our God, to walk in his statutes, and to keep his commandments, as at this day.

62 ¶ And [j] the king, and all Israel with him, offered sacrifice before the LORD.

63 And Solomon offered [k] a sacrifice of peace-offerings, which he offered unto the LORD, two and twenty thousand oxen, and an hundred and twenty thousand sheep. So the king and all the children of Israel [l] dedicated the house of the LORD.

64 The same day did the king [m] hallow the middle of the court that was before the house of the LORD: for there he offered burnt-offerings, and meat-offerings, and the fat of the peace-offerings: because [n] the brazen altar that was before the LORD was too little to receive the burnt-offerings, and meat-offerings, and the fat of the peace-offerings.

pensity of fallen man, both rulers and people, to make war their favorite and most honorable employment.

V. 46—53. This concluding part of Solomon's intercession was evidently answered, in the restoration of the Jews after the Babylonish captivity. (Notes, Lev. 26:38—45. Deut. 4:29—31. Neh. 1:5—11. Jer. 29:11—14. Ez. 36:25—32.) Though the temple and city lay in ruins; yet when they bethought themselves, and repented, and prayed in the land of Chaldea, towards the land of Israel; the Lord heard, forgave, and restored them to their own land. (Notes, Dan. 9:1—19.) But it will hereafter receive another more remarkable answer, when the Jews shall be gathered from their present dispersion, become a part of the Christian church, and probably be reinstated in their own country.—All Solomon's arguments, in this plea for his people, were deduced from the Lord's choice of them, his separation of them from other nations to be his inheritance, and the favors which he had already conferred upon them: and all inseparably connecting their returning peace and prosperity, with their deep humiliation, true repentance, conversion, and fervent prayer. (Note, Zech. 12:9—14.)—It appears from Chronicles, that Solomon concluded with a passage taken from one of the Psalms. (Note, 2 Chr. 6:41,42.)—There is no man that sinneth not. (46) Notes, Ec. 7:19,20. Rom. 3:21—26. Jam. 3:1,2. 1 John 1:8—10. 3:4—6.

V. 55—61. (Notes, Josh. 21:43—45. 23:14—16.) Incline, &c. (58) No blessing can be expected, whilst men continue wilfully disobedient. No human heart is of itself inclined to obey the call to repentance, faith, and newness of life, walking in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord. The first benefit communicated to sinners, through the intercession of him whom Solomon typified, is "the inclining of the heart to this obedience." 'Lord have mercy 'upon us and incline our hearts to keep this law.' Communion service.—'As by thy special grace 'preventing us, thou dost put into our hearts 'good desires.' Col. for Easter Sunday.—'We 'have no power to do good works, pleasant and 'acceptable to God, without the grace of God by 'Christ preventing us, that we may have a good 'will, and working with us when we have that 'good will.' Art. x. This, therefore, we should beg of God for others, and for ourselves, when we perceive our need of it: for when this is granted all else will follow. Yet Solomon afterwards exhorted the people to be "perfect with the LORD, &c." (61): and this is the scriptural method, though to many it appears inconsistent: but the exhortation reminds men of their duty; and the prayer or promise shews how they may be enabled to do it. (Notes, Ps. 51:10. 110:3.

65 And at that time Solomon [o] held a feast, and all Israel with him, [p] a great congregation, [q] from the entering in of Hamath unto [r] the river of Egypt, before the LORD our God, [s] seven days and seven days, even fourteen days.

V. 63—65. (Num 7:) The sacrifices offered at the dedication of the tabernacle were very few, compared with the immense number here mentioned: but those were proportioned to the circumstances of the princes of Israel in the wilderness, these to the riches and power of king Solomon. (Marg. Ref. l.)—It is probable, that altars of earth, or of rough stone, were prepared all over the inner court. (Note, Ex. 20:21—25.) —All these sacrifices were not offered on the same day, but during the whole time of the solemnity: and the immense multitudes assembled feasted on the flesh of the peace-offerings.—The people separated on the twenty-third day of the seventh month, the day after the close of the feast of tabernacles; (2 Chr. 7:9,10.) so that the dedication of the temple must have preceded. And, as the great day of atonement was observed on the tenth day of the seventh month, it is not improbably conjectured, that the seven days of the feast of dedication preceded that solemnity; and that the people waited after it, to keep the feast of tabernacles also, before they returned home. V. 66. The people departed full of admiration of Solomon's piety, wisdom, magnificence, and liberality; as well as of gratitude to the Lord for all his goodness: and they prayed most fervently for the king, being much enlivened by the sacred ordinance. (Marg. Ref.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—9.

When those in authority heartily and scripturally promote the cause of true religion, increasing numbers will soon be engaged in the cause: thus, the pious designs, which were conceived in a single breast, may, by the blessing of God, be completed with the concurrence and to the benefit of thousands, nay perhaps millions! and what a blessed improvement is this of authority, influence, affluence, and wisdom! Numbers indeed will assist on such occasions, to please their superiors, or to acquire reputation, or from secular motives, who are not cordially attached to the cause, and who will not profit by it themselves; yet, even they may forward such measures as conduce to the good of others.—True wisdom is displayed as much in the well timing, as in the orderly conducting, of important undertakings; and in obtaining the voluntary concurrence of others, where folly would deem it sufficient to employ superior power and constraint.—But without the gracious presence of the Lord, every religious observance is an empty form: the written word, the preaching of the gospel, prayer, baptism, and the Lord's supper, orthodox creeds, professions, speculations, and external order, form but a well-proportioned lifeless carcass; a temple without the ark, and without the glory; unless we in these things hold communion with a reconciled God upon a mercy-seat, through the person and work of the Redeemer, and by the influences of his sanctifying Spirit. This is the life and soul of true godliness, which infuses efficacy into every truth, ordinance, or duty; and in all things it should be chiefly attended to. (Note, 2 Cor. 3:17, 18.) For, as far as this is attained, we, the believing servants of God on earth, hold fellowship with the church above; and, with all the company of angels and archangels, we worship the name of God our Savior, with acceptance, and to his glory.

V. 10—21.

When we wait upon the Lord in the ways of his appointment, we shall surely receive tokens of his special favor: yet his light is inaccessible to us; and the cloud, with which he veils his insufferable brightness, in his discoveries of himself to us, sometimes obstructs our view of his love, and causes us to tremble for fear of his judgments. The dark dispensations of Providence, the awful declarations of God's word, the apprehensions of his purity and justice, and the consciousness of guilt and pollution, often induce the awakened sinner to say, "Depart from me, for I am a sinful man, O Lord;" when such views should quicken him in fleeing for refuge to the hope of the gospel. (Note, Luke 5 1—11. P. O. 1—15, conclusion.) On these occasions, those who are stronger in faith, and more advanced in knowledge and experience, should encourage their weaker brethren, and explain such things to them, as needlessly alarm them: for the established believer can deduce comfort, and motives for thankful obedience, from that very darkness which dismays and confounds the inexperienced Christian. However, blessed be God, in the person of our Emmanuel, and in his complete redemption, "the thick darkness," in which JEHOVAH dwells, is greatly dispelled; the dark cloud is become bright to us; (Note, Matt. 17:5—8.) and though, compared with the beatific vision, we "see through a glass darkly;" yet, following him who "is the Light of the world," "we shall not abide in darkness, but shall have the light of life." Yet in the most spiritual frame of heart of the most eminent believers, sacred joy, gratitude, and love, will be mixed with deep humility and reverential fear; and conscious guilt and pollution will connect self-abhorrence and godly sorrow, with their most fervent praises and adorations.—We all are bound by the strongest obligations to use our utmost exertions for the honor of God: yet the most zealous believer will be conscious, that he has lost opportunities of service, through infirmity, temptation, and encumbrances. But when the Lord is not pleased to employ us in any work, which we sincerely design and vigorously attempt, he will notice and recompense the intention, even as much as if it had been accomplished. Let us then persevere in devising, and endeavoring to execute plans of usefulness, though we be often baffled and unsuccessful; for it shall at last be declared, that we "did well that it was in our heart:" and let sinners remember, that they also are accountable to God, and will be punished, for all the wickedness which was conceived in their hearts, though they were restrained in Providence, left destitute of the power, or deterred by the fear of man; and therefore did not actually commit it.—When the Lord's time arrives for any work to be done, all opposition will die away, all difficulties vanish, and all things concur in forwarding its completion: and whatever good work we have been employed in, and enabled to effect, we should consider it as a performance of his promises, and as an occasion afforded of celebrating his praises, to whom alone all the glory belongs.

V. 22—30.

The service of God is the highest honor of the greatest of men; and to lead others in prayer and praise, to animate and assist them in worshipping the Lord, forms the noblest employment on earth, and most resembles that of the angels in heaven. But indeed, the most exalted adorations of the noblest creatures are beneath the notice of his infinite majesty, and only accepted through his unspeakable condescension. With what internal awe, and external indications of reverence, should we, worthless sinners, prostrate ourselves before his glorious and holy majesty! How should we approach his mercy-seat with admiring, adoring gratitude, and humble expectation of his invaluable and much needed benefits! and how should faith and love exalt our souls above all external objects, and raise them to heaven, his dwelling place, where He displays his glory, who fills immensity, and "inhabiteth eternity!"—But behold, he dwells in human nature, as in his temple! there sinners may see his glory and live: and when we pray in his name, directing our faith towards that sacred residence of the Deity, he will assuredly hear, and forgive our sins, and save our souls. His "name is Emmanuel:" "God is in Christ reconciling the world unto himself."

V. 31—45.

It is a debt we owe to our brethren, neighbors, friends, and strangers, yea, to our enemies, to intercede for them as their cases may require. Having therefore such a multiplicity of persons, cases, and wants to spread before the Lord, our hearts should frequently be enlarged to pray copiously, as well as fervently: and we shall not be condemned for long prayers, if they be not formal, and rendered tedious by vain, unmeaning repetitions.—It is also a comfort to the believer to reflect, how many prayers of parents, ministers, and pious friends, are laid up before God on his behalf; and how many are now praying for him in one place or other. All these shall, in due time, be answered in blessings unnumbered: nay, even whole nations, through successive generations, have reaped the benefits of the fervent supplications of a single true believer. Such intercessors form the unseen strength and bulwark of kingdoms: may the Lord increase their numbers, and may we be found among them!—Yet the prayers of all the subjects would be unavailing, did not the King, our Prince of Peace, the Builder of the Spiritual Temple, intercede for them. His pleading is always prevalent, and gives efficacy to all the rest: yet, neither the prayers of godly friends, nor even the Savior's intercession, will benefit those who are never brought to pray earnestly for themselves. For he intercedes for those alone, who eventually are led to "believe in his name," and "who come to God by him:" and the prayers of his people, for such as continue impenitent and unbelieving, return into their own bosom. (Note, John 17:6—10,20,21.)

V. 46—66.

We are alas! all sinners, and sin is the cause of all calamities public and personal; and unless forsaken and forgiven, it must terminate in final misery. But when the vilest transgressor bethinks himself, and examines his heart and life; when he is humbled before God, and penitently confesses that he has sinned, has done perversely, and committed wickedness; when he returns to the Lord with his whole heart, and prays unto him, in the Savior's name: then he has begun to receive the benefit of his intercession, and the Father will hear in heaven his supplication, and maintain his cause. Then, whatever be his grief, his burden and terror, and "the plague of his own heart," the guilt of his conscience, the depravity of his nature, his evil habits, the force of temptation, or the pressure of affliction, he will bring it, and spread it in secret before a heart searching and merciful God: thus he will obtain pardon and peace, and learn to love and fear the Lord all his days. In this manner the Israel of God is established and sanctified, and the backslider is recovered and healed; the stranger is brought nigh, and the mourner comforted; the name of God is glorified, and numbers are added to the church of such as shall be saved. Often did offending Israel in this way prove the mercy of God, when they sought him under their distresses; and there failed not one good word of all that he had promised them. But at length they wearied out his patience, and all his threatenings were accomplished: yet, even in their present dispersion, they will at length bethink themselves, and turn to God, as dwelling in his true Temple, and then they shall be numbered among his people. Oh, may they speedily be restored, that their conversion may be "as life from the dead" to all nations, "that all the people of the earth may know," and worship our God and Savior! "May the Lord our God be again with them, as he was with their fathers, ... and incline their hearts unto him to walk in all his ways!"—By the example of Israel other nations should be warned and instructed: no war ought to be engaged in, which cannot be conducted in a spirit of faith and prayer: princes and nobles should set the example in the worship of God, and act accordingly: public calamities should excite to national repentance, reformation, and prayer: and these things would best secure public peace and prosperity. The same should be the conduct of churches, families, and individuals.—May "the Lord then incline our hearts unto him, that we may walk in all his ways, and keep his commandments and statutes;" may we abound in his work, and stir up others to do the same: may we love the Lord, and do good to and pray for one another, and rejoice together for all the goodness, that the Lord has done for us and for

2 That the LORD appeared to Solomon the second time, [d] as he had appeared unto him at Gibeon.

3 And the LORD said unto him, [e] I have heard thy prayer and thy supplication, that thou hast made before me: [f] I have hallowed this house, which thou hast built, [g] to put my name there for ever: and [h] mine eyes and mine heart shall be there perpetually.

4 And [i] if thou wilt walk before me, as David thy father walked, in integrity of heart, and in uprightness, to do according to all that I have commanded thee, and wilt keep my statutes and my judgments:

5 Then [k] I will establish the throne of thy kingdom upon Israel for ever, as I promised to David thy father, saying, There shall not fail thee a man upon the throne of Israel.

9 And they shall answer, [s] Because they forsook the LORD their God, who brought forth their fathers out of the land of Egypt, and have taken hold upon other gods, and have worshipped them, and served them: therefore hath the LORD brought upon them all this evil.

NOTES.

CHAP. IX. V. 1, 2. Solomon did not finish his other buildings, till above twelve years after the dedication of the temple; (10. Note, 7:1.) and it is exceedingly improbable, that this gracious appearance of God to him was delayed so long. Some expositors therefore render these verses, "And it was, that thus Solomon finished," &c.—"And the LORD appeared," &c.—The two subjects are kept entirely distinct in Chronicles. (2 Chr. 7:11,12.)—The encouragement given Solomon, while building the temple, (Note, 6:11—13.) was either sent by a prophet, or given in an answer by the high-priest; for this was only the second appearance of God to him. (Note, 3:5—14.)

V. 3. The Lord favorably accepted the temple, which Solomon had built and consecrated to him; and set it apart as holy, for the residence of his ark, the centre of his worship, the place of his altar and sacrifices, and the visible pledge of his gracious presence with Israel, so long as they adhered to his ordinances and commandments. (Notes, Deut. 12:2—7.) And he promised, "that his eyes and his heart should be there perpetually:" (Notes, Deut. 11:12. Ps. 34:15—17. Jer. 15:1.) that is, he would regard it with peculiar attention and favor, and delight in doing good to those, who worshipped at, or towards, that holy place. (2 Chr. 7:12—16.) And had not the national sins of Israel forfeited the blessing, this would uninterruptedly have been the case until the coming of Christ.

V. 4—6. Solomon and his posterity, and Israel in that and future ages, were alike concerned in these promises and warnings. The obedience intended in all such declarations, is the unreserved, though imperfect, obedience of a penitent believer; by which he evidences his cordial acceptance of unmerited mercies, and aims to glorify the God of his salvation. (Notes, Matt. 7:24—27. John 14:21—24. Rom. 2:7—11.)—The words "if ye shall at all turn," &c. certainly mean, "if ye altogether turn," &c. (2 Chr. 7:19.) and indeed not every sin, but national idolatry or apostacy, sanctioned by the example of the prince, or rulers, or tolerated by them, was intended: for this especially violated the national covenant, and forfeited all the covenanted blessings.

V. 7—9. These denunciations were remarka-

V. 11—14. Hiram had furnished Solomon with timber, not only for building the temple, but also for his own house, and his many other magnificent works: and he likewise "had sent him a hundred and twenty talents of gold;" for that seems to be the proper construction of the fourteenth verse. Solomon therefore was indebted to Hiram, beyond the corn and wine and oil agreed upon: (Note, 5:11.) and he gave him twenty cities in Galilee as a compensation. They seem to have been small towns in the vicinity of Tyre, beyond the boundaries of the land, as divided by Joshua, and lately taken from the ancient inhabitants. Probably they lay in ruins.—Hiram, however, was not satisfied with them, and "called them the land of Cabul." (Marg.)—Perhaps, being accustomed to magnificence, and to acquire wealth by commerce, he had not the turn of mind for cultivating land: and finding the roads bad, the houses mean, and the country depopulated, he was not aware of the advantage which might be made of them. Solomon afterwards rebuilt them, and the Israelites dwelt in them; and probably Hiram was satisfied with some equivalent.

V. 15. The reason, &c.] That is, the occasion which there was for the levy, in order to accomplish so many great and magnificent works: or, the method in which it was raised. (Note, 5:13—18.)

V. 16, 17. The Canaanites kept possession of Gezer, a city in the lot of Ephraim, in the time of Joshua and the judges; but the inhabitants paid tribute to Israel. (Judg. 1:29. Note, Josh. 16:10.) It seems that they had continued in this state, till Pharaoh destroyed them, and burned the city: but on what account this was done, we know not. And he gave the site of the city, and the suburbs, to his daughter: some think, at the time of her marriage to Solomon. Solomon, however, rebuilt the city, with several others, which probably were in a ruinous condition.

V. 18. Tadmor in the wilderness.] This is supposed to have been the same with the city Palmyra, the magnificent ruins of which, in the midst of widely extended plains of barren sands, attract the attention, and excite the admiration, of modern travellers and antiquarians. But the architecture of these ruins, being evidently Grecian, does not allow us to suppose that they are the remains of buildings erected by Solomon; for they must be of much later date.

V. 19. (Marg. Ref.—Note, 4:26.) Perhaps the levy of service raised for the building of these cities, gave occasion to the complaint of the people after his death. (Note, 12:4.)

V. 20—22. It is probable, that these remains of the Amorites, and the other devoted nations, had submitted to Israel, and renounced idolatry; and so were spared on terms, not dissimilar from those formerly granted to the Gibeonites. (Notes, Josh. 7:2. 9:3—5,7,19—27.)—They and their posterity seem to have been afterwards called "Solomon's servants," and thus to have been distinguished from the Nethinim. (Note, Ezra 2:55—58.)—By employing them in these laborious services, Solomon was enabled to exempt the native Israelites from all but the more honorable employments. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 23. Notes, 5:13—18. 2 Chr. 8:10.

V. 24. Marg. Ref.—Note, 2 Chr. 8:11.

27 And Hiram sent in the navy [g] his servants, shipmen that had knowledge of the sea, with the servants of Solomon.

V. 25. Solomon observed the three great festivals with peculiar solemnity: yet he sacrificed at other times also; and "burned incense," not personally, but by the priests. (Note, 2 Chr. 26: 16—23.)

V. 26—28. Solomon, possessing Ezion-geber, a seaport upon the Red sea, (Marg. Ref. e.) which communicates with the Indian ocean; united with Hiram, whose subjects were skilled in navigation and commerce, and probably traded to some part of the East Indies: and this is perhaps as ancient and authentic an account of the East India trade, as any that is extant. (Note, 10:22.) Ophir is by many supposed to have been the island now called Ceylon: though various other opinions are advanced concerning it. (Marg. Ref. h.)—Four hundred and fifty talents are mentioned in Chronicles: but perhaps thirty talents were divided among the officers and seamen; so that only four hundred and twenty were paid into the treasury.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—9.

The Lord is ever ready to hear the prayers which we make before him, and to manifest his acceptance of our upright services: and when we present ourselves, in body and soul, to be consecrated as the temples of the Holy Spirit, to his glory, he will hallow and sanctify us by his grace, and render us meet to be a holy habitation for himself; though before we were altogether polluted. (Note, Eph. 2:19—22.) In and through Jesus Christ, his eyes and his heart are always upon every true believer, to watch over him, and to rejoice in doing him good; yet it is only at intervals, that he manifests his presence, and lifts up the light of his countenance upon him: but in heaven we shall always behold his face, and be filled with unalloyed, uninterrupted felicity.—After all the services which we can perform, we stand upon the same terms with the Lord as before: nothing can purchase for us an exemption from obedience, or a dispensation to sin, in any case whatever: nor would the true believer desire such a license. Rather, in the integrity and uprightness of his heart, he longs for the entire mortification of every lust, and the increase of grace in his soul: and in his calmest moments would rather choose to be severely rebuked and "chastened of the Lord;" and thus kept from sin, or recalled from his wanderings, than be allowed to transgress with impunity and prosperity. As for those, who merely call themselves Christians, of every sect and creed, who make their forms and notions an excuse for breaking God's commandments, they will ere long be exposed to universal and everlasting contempt. For none will be so despised and miserable, either in this world or the next, as those who have continued wicked under the means of grace, who have apostatized from a religious profession, or who have made the truths and ordinances of God the cloke or the occasion of their iniquitous practices.—The conduct of individuals, of churches, and nations, who are exposed to great calamities, when carefully considered, will always sufficiently answer the inquiry, "Why hath the LORD done this unto them?" Nay, even infidels and profligates frequently justify God in the punishment of unrighteous professors of religion, though not without casting unwarrantable scoffs and insults upon them.—Parents, who set their children good examples and give them good instructions, are warranted to hope, that their prayers for them will be answered, and the blessings of the covenant entailed upon them. (Note, Gen. 18:18,19.) But the examples of those, whose sins are recorded in their punishment, may be equally instructive.—The present dispersed and despised state of the Jews is both a demonstration of the truth of the Scriptures, and a daily instruction and warning to us, not to trust in outward privileges, not to trifle with the commandments of God, and not to neglect the salvation of the gospel. We have indeed a better covenant, founded on better promises, than that made with the nation of Israel: but let us see to it, that it is really made with us; and that the law of God is written in our hearts, as the proof that our iniquities are forgiven. If this be the case, our persevering obedience, as well as our faith in the Savior, is provided for; and the Lord "will put his fear into our hearts that we may never depart from him." (Note, Jer. 32:38—41.)

V. 10—28.

In the world, and in the church, we all have need of each other, and should endeavor, according to our ability, to equal or to exceed the kindness of others to us: but we should not be surprised or discouraged, if our attempts be not acceptable even to our brethren. For men are, and will be, of different judgments and dispositions; and they may be allowed to differ in all temporal matters, and in some things which pertain to the worship of God: but as all believers come to the mercy-seat of their reconciled Father, by Christ the living Way, and through his propitiation, and intercession; and as they all choose and delight in the same spiritual excellency of heavenly things; in these respects, they must and will be of one mind and of one judgment. —High stations furnish abundant employment for men's hands and hearts; and it is wonderful, if those who fill them are not "careful and troubled about many things," to the neglect of "the one thing needful:" yet at last, all their magnificence and splendid achievements are vanity and vexation of spirit. Nothing is truly valuable, but in proportion as it is useful: and that is most valuable which promotes the salvation of souls. They however, who begin with the service of God, regulate their worldly employments according to the precepts of his word, and still adhere to his worship and ordinances, take the best measures for obtaining all desirable success in their undertakings. Their activity and ingenuity may be beneficial to others, and they may perhaps escape material harm themselves; yet it is hard to persevere in such a course: few can resist the fascinating temptations of great prosperity; it gradually fosters pride and sensual indulgence, and eats out the life and power of godliness: and most of those, who have risen to great honor and affluence, after having given satisfactory evidence of real godliness, have evidently shewn that their souls were losers in proportion. Let the rich and prosperous, then, "rejoice with trembling," and take heed lest they forget the Lord; and let the poor and obscure be thankful for their safer condition! (P. O. Deut. 8: latter part. Notes, 1 Tim. 6:6—10,17—19. Jam. 1:9—11.)

NOTES.

CHAP. X. V. 1, 2. Cush, the son of Ham, had a descendant called Seba, and it is probable, that he settled in Africa, to the south of Egypt. (Note, Gen. 10:6,7.) Eber also had a descendant called Sheba; and Abraham, a grandson by Keturah, called by the same name. (Gen. 10:28. 25:1—3.) On these and other accounts, it has been controverted, whether the queen of Sheba came from some part of Ethiopia in Africa, or from the most remote region of Arabia, near the Indian ocean, in Asia.—Tradition favors the former opinion, but then it is blended with manifest falsehoods. Our Lord says, "The queen of the south, came from the uttermost part of the earth, to hear the wisdom of Solomon:" and Ethiopia is more distant from Jerusalem than any part of Arabia; but at the same time it does not so well answer the description, "the uttermost part of the earth." (Matt. 12:42.) Learned men are therefore now generally of opinion, that Sheba lay in the most southern part of Arabia Felix, between the Red sea and the Indian ocean; that the queen of Sheba was descended from Abraham by Keturah, and retained some traditional fragments of true religion; and that she had heard the fame of Solomon from the mariners of the fleet to Ophir, which had put into some of her ports: and indeed the more general connexion, in which the name Sheba is used, in the subsequent part of Scripture, powerfully confirms this conclusion. (Marg. Ref. b.)—Our Lord's testimony, to the motives which influenced the queen of Sheba, sufficiently refutes the disadvantageous surmises which have often been entertained and advanced. She "had heard of the fame of Solomon, concerning the name of the LORD," and she came "to hear his wisdom." The report of his knowledge in the truth and precepts of religion, of his piety and zeal in the worship of JEHOVAH, and of the wisdom given him, peculiarly attracted her attention: and she came to propose many questions to him, which perplexed her mind, upon those important subjects; she could meet with no one, who could clear them up to her; and she desired "to prove him," whether he could or not. This shews that she was used to reflect seriously upon religion; but for want of proper instruction, was not able to obtain satisfactory solutions of her difficulties: and considering her sex and rank, and the magnificence and indulgence in which she might have lived at home; her long journey, undertaken for these purposes, formed a strong proof of a pious and ingenuous mind, which knew the value of true wisdom, and was willing "to buy the truth" at any price. (Notes, Prov. 23:23. Acts 8:26—31.)—Her train and attendance were suited to her high rank; and many think, that the treasures, which she brought, serve also to mark out the region whence she came.—Hard questions. (1) חידות: (from חור ænigma loqui vel proponere:) translated a riddle; Judg. 14:12—18. dark saying, Ps. 49:4.—The plural, dark sayings, Ps. 78:2. Prov. 1:6.—Notes, Ps. 78:2. Prov. 1:6.

V. 3. With the books of holy Scripture, then extant, and the wise and understanding heart which the Lord had given him, Solomon readily answered those questions, that were most difficult to the queen of Sheba. He had prayed, that "all the people of the earth might know the name of the LORD, to fear him;" (8:43.) and he doubtless instructed her fully in those truths, which relate to the being and perfections, the authority, law, and worship of the one living and true God; in the nature, and meaning of the temple, altar, priests, and sacrifices, at Jerusalem; and in every other subject, which was essential to the acceptable worship of JEHOVAH. Her language also indicates that she profited by his instructions; and probably carried home with her the sacred Scriptures, and a large accession of profitable knowledge concerning true religion, for the benefit of her subjects. (Notes, Acts 8:36—40.)

V. 4, 5. Marg. Ref.—His ascent, &c. (5) Some understand these words, of a magnificent commu

9 [r] Blessed be the LORD thy God, which [s]delighted in thee, to set thee on the throne of Israel: [t] because the LORD loved Israel for ever, therefore made he thee king, [u] to do judgment and justice.

10 And [v] she gave the king an hundred and twenty talents of gold, and of [x]spices very great store, [y] and precious stones: there came no more such abundance of spices as these which the queen of Sheba gave to king Solomon.

11 And the navy also of Hiram that brought gold from [z] Ophir, brought in from Ophir great plenty of [a] almug-trees, and precious stones.

12 And the king made of the almug-trees §pillars for the house of the LORD, and for the king's house, [b] harps also and psalteries for singers: there came no such almug-trees, nor were seen unto this day.

13 And king Solomon gave unto the queen of Sheba [c] all her desire whatsoever she asked, beside that ‖which Solomon gave her of his royal bounty. So she turned and went to her own country, she and her servants.

nication, which Solomon had prepared, between his palace and the courts of the temple, by which he and all his attendants regularly went up to worship the Lord. (Notes, 2 Kings 16:17,18. Ez. 44:1—3. 46:1—3.) Others suppose that they mean the sacrifices which he offered upon the altar: while others explain them of the cheerful and fervent solemnity with which he worshipped, shewing that his heart was much engaged in the sacred service. The first indeed seems the true meaning: but however that may be, Solomon's wisdom and wealth, his magnificence, and his regular and prudent management of his numerous concerns, united with his exemplary piety, overpowered the queen's mind with astonishment; so that she was altogether overcome by it.—This event probably took place about the middle of Solomon's reign, at least before he began to turn aside to idolatry.

V. 6—9. Solomon's wisdom made a deeper impression upon the mind of the queen of Sheba, than all his prosperity and grandeur. She congratulated, and almost seemed to envy, the felicity of his servants. She had derived such benefit from her occasional conversation with him; that she considered those persons peculiarly favored, though far her inferiors in rank, who continually enjoyed the advantage of his instructive discourse and wise counsels. She also very fervently praised God, for his love to Solomon and to Israel, in endowing him with such extraordinary wisdom, in raising him to the throne, and in blessing him with peace and prosperity, that he might rule over his people "in justice, and in judgment." These sentiments concerning the sovereignty and providence of God, the Giver of all wisdom and prosperity; his free and unfailing love to his people; the duty of kings; and the happiness of those nations who are favored with those that do their duty; together with her praising God for his love to his people, in which she cordially rejoiced, prove an understanding and pious mind, and must convince the reflecting reader that she returned home much benefited by her journey.

V. 11, 12. It is not known what kind of wood is intended by the words almug-trees, or algum-trees: but the specimen brought from Sheba would remain to posterity in the pillars, or rails, and the musical instruments, made of it. (2 Chr. 2:8. 9:10, 11.)

V. 13. (Marg. Ref.) Besides the munificent presents, which Solomon, no doubt, unsolicited, conferred on the queen of Sheba; he also gave her all those things, which she particularly requested: being, probably, such productions of Judah and the adjacent regions, as she had not seen in her own country. These would keep in her remembrance, when she arrived in her own kingdom, what she had seen and heard at Jerusalem.

V. 14, 15. Perhaps the kings of Arabia were induced, by the queen of Sheba's report and example, to pay court to Solomon and send him presents.

V. 18—20. Ivory is not mentioned in Scripture till the time of Solomon, who doubtless imported it from India.—It cannot be supposed, that the ivory was entirely covered with gold; but rather inlaid with it, so as to add to its beauty.—The lions seem to have been intended not only for ornament, but as emblems of the courage and resolution, requisite in the impartial administration of justice; and they denoted that magistrates should be a terror to evil-doers, and the protectors of those who peaceably submit to their authority. Judah was compared by Jacob to a young lion; and our Lord is called "the Lion of the tribe of Judah." (Notes, Gen. 49:8,9. Rev. 5:5—7.)

V. 22. Many learned men have endeavored to shew that Tharshish was a city in Spain, called Tartessus; and some think that this navy, which Solomon had with the navy of Hiram, was distinct from that which traded to Ophir, and was fitted out from some port on the Mediterranean: and they account for the length of time taken up in each voyage, by supposing that a great part of it was employed in selling and buying, or bartering, the several articles of commerce.—But, whatever gold might be, ivory, apes, and peacocks, (or parrots, as some render the word,) do not seem to have been articles of trade in any of the countries bordering on the Mediterranean.—"Jehoshaphat made ships of Tharshish to go to Ophir for gold: but they went not; for the ships were broken at Ezion-gaber."—"He joined himself with Ahaziah to make ships to go to Tharshish, and they made the ships in Ezion-gaber. ... And the ships were broken, that they were not able to go to Tharshish." (Note, 22:48,49. 2 Chr. 20:35—37.) These passages, being decisive proofs that the ships of Tharshish, ships to go to Tharshish, were built at Ezion-gaber on the Red sea, the learned Bishop Lowth, (having adopted the opinion, that Tharshish was Tartessus in Spain,) says, 'Tharshish is 'celebrated in Scripture for the trade, which Sol-'omon carried on thither in conjunction with the 'Tyrians. Jehoshaphat attempted afterward to 'renew that trade; and from the account given 'of that attempt, it appears, that this fleet was to 'sail from Ezion-gaber on the Red sea, and must 'therefore have designed to sail round Africa, as 'Solomon's fleet probably had done before: for it 'was a three years' voyage; and they brought gold 'from Ophir, probably from the coast of Arabia, 'silver from Tartessus, and ivory, apes, and pea-'cocks, from Africa.—It is certain, that under 'Pharaoh-necho, about two hundred years after 'this voyage was made by the Egyptians,' &c Bp. Lowth on Is. 2:13—16.—But, with all deference to so eminent a writer, it must be allowed extremely improbable, that in regular voyages for commerce, (not discovery, for which Pharaoh-necho's extraordinary expedition doubtless was undertaken,) such a circuitous course should be chosen; when, as far as we can learn, it was not then known that Africa was a peninsula! To fit out one navy at Ezion-gaber, for Ophir, whether in Arabia, or the East Indies, which might coast some parts of Africa; and to fit out another navy to Spain from some Mediterranean port, would be an obvious and compendious measure: but that the same ships should attempt the whole, and after taking in the far richest part of their freight, comparatively near home; should with it attempt to sail round Africa, in order to add silver, and some other articles of inferior value, at Tartessus, must strike every reflecting person as a most unparalleled proceeding.—To sail round Africa at that time, would be immensely more formidable, than a voyage round the world at present: and a single glance at a map must convince any person, acquainted with commerce, that no man of common prudence would ever think of such a voyage for lucrative purposes.—Tharshish seems indeed, in some places, to mean Tartessus, or Tarsus, or some place connected with the Mediterranean: for Jonah embarked for Tharshish at Joppa; and Joppa is situated on the Mediterranean. Ships of Tharshish seem also sometimes to mean any large ships fitted out for long voyages. But in this place, and some others referred to, if the text be not corrupted, (which there is not the least reason to suppose,) Tharshish must mean some place in the East Indies, or bordering on the Indian Ocean. (Note, 2 Chr. 9:13—21, v. 21.)

V. 24—27. (Notes, 3:5—14. 4:26—34.) These particulars were recorded, to shew the faithfulness of God, to the promises which he had made to David and to Solomon, whose reign typified the kingdom of the Messiah, in its peace and prosperity, and in the submission and willing services of princes and nations.—But Solomon was doubtless culpable in several respects, and his mind was gradually corrupted from its simplicity to excessive luxury and ostentation, which prepared the way for the awful departure from God recorded in the ensuing chapter. (Note, 2 Sam. 11:1—5.)

V. 28, 29. Solomon and Pharaoh seem to have traded together, by their merchants, to the exclusion of other persons. The price of the linen yarn, according to its quality, was fixed by contract. The price of a good chariot-horse also was fixed at about nineteen pounds sterling, and that of a chariot at seventy-five: and, in a contract, there is no absurdity in supposing that, the quality being described, a certain sum should be given for each, one with another. Besides those, which were brought for the king's use, numbers were sold again, at a great profit doubtless, to the neighboring princes: for Pharaoh reserved to his son-in-law the exclusive advantage of this lucrative trade. Some indeed suppose the stipulated sums to have been an exorbitant tax, laid by Pharaoh on all chariots, or horses, which were exported: but the other seems the more probable way of explaining the passage. (Marg. Ref. t, u. Notes, Deut. 17:16. Is. 31:1—3.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—5.

Wisdom and piety are exceedingly valuable, and render men truly honorable: and those, who form a due estimate of their worth, will think no expense or labor too great to obtain them.—When we first attend seriously to religion, we shall meet with many "hard questions," which we cannot resolve, and which will often perplex and distress our minds, especially if at a distance from proper instructions. But "then shall we know, if we follow on to know the Lord." By waiting and prayer, by practising what we have learned, by diligently searching the Scriptures, and by consulting wise and experienced Christians, we shall be delivered from our difficulties, and a clearer light will shine upon our path. (Notes, Prov. 4:18,19. Is. 42:13—17. Hos. 6:1—3. John 7:14—17.)—Those who possess wisdom and knowledge, ought to be courteous and accessible, and glad to communicate them for the good of others; even as the rich should be to impart their wealth.—Great wisdom and piety, in the midst of singular prosperity and grandeur, are very uncommon, and therefore excite the higher admiration. A good understanding will also be displayed, in the orderly and prudent regulation of domestic and secular concerns; so that propriety, and consistency with a man's station and circumstances, will be visible to the attentive spectator; but our greatest diligence, constancy, seriousness, and cheerfulness, should be manifested, in attending on the ordinances of God; that our example may influence others to "serve him in reverence and godly fear." This gives a lustre to wisdom, learning, wealth, or greatness: but alas! how few are ambitious of this honor that cometh from God! how little of this is seen in our princes, and nobles, and great men!

V. 6—13.

The reports which we hear concerning the achievements and excellences of our fellow-creatures, or concerning any earthly glory, are seldom verified when we become acquainted with them. But there is a spiritual excellency in heavenly things, and in consistent Christians, to which no reports can do justice: and the better they are known, the more they will be esteemed and relished.—Those who delight in the company of wise men will become wise: and they are highly favored, who have continual opportunity of conversing with persons of this character: yet frequently, such as have occasional interviews with them get more benefit, than those do who are always with them.—All our comforts and prospects spring from the Lord's love to us: he delights in the fruits of his own Spirit; and he communicates many good gifts to magistrates, ministers, and private Christians, out of love to his people, that they may be serviceable to them; and happy are they, who are governed and instructed by those, "in whom the Lord delighteth." This indeed has hitherto been a very uncommon case; and many are ready to conclude that it never can become general: but the scriptures assure us, that at length it shall be the privilege and felicity of every nation under heaven.—Whatever our station and endowments be, they are connected with correspondent duties: and we should take it kindly to be reminded of them, and excited to perform them with diligence and fidelity.—Reciprocal kindnesses cement friendship; and the wealthy should not willingly be outdone in generosity: but neither the company of God's people, nor the ordinances of his house, should detain us from our proper place and employments, but should send us to them, prepared and disposed to discharge them with greater wisdom and conscientiousness.—Thus the awakened sinner, oppressed with perplexing difficulties, discouraging objections, and distressing fears, hears the report of the Savior's acts and wisdom, of his unsearchable riches and unfathomable love; but can scarcely believe the report. With trouble, self-denial, and the forsaking of many earthly things, he resorts by faith and prayer unto him, and is graciously encouraged, and entertained: the Lord's effectual teaching dispels his darkness and distress; he shews him his glory and grace, he satisfies him with the provisions of his house, and enriches him from his treasures of "wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, and redemption." The rejoicing believer no longer glories in himself, and his own attainments: nor is he terrified, though humbled, with the consciousness of his own guilt and pollution. The person, the character, the love, of Jesus attract and engross his admiring attention, while they confirm his

CHAP. XI.

Solomon, having taken very many wives and concubines, even strange women, is in his old age seduced by them into idolatry, 1—8. The Lord threatens to rend the greater part of the kingdom from his family, 9—13. Solomon finds an adversary in Hadad the Edomite, who had been entertained in Egypt, 14—22: and in Rezon, who reigned in Damascus, 23—25: and in Jeroboam, to whom Ahijah foretold that he should reign over ten tribes, and whom Solomon in vain attempts to kill, 26—40. Solomon dies and is buried, and Rehoboam succeeds him, 41—43.

BUT king Solomon [a] loved many strange women, * together with the daughter of Pharaoh, women of the Moabites, Ammonites, Edomites, Zidonians, and Hittites:

lively hopes of salvation: and he finds by experience, that the half was not told him of his excellency and preciousness. He now congratulates the felicity of the meanest servant of the Redeemer, but especially that of those above, who always behold his face and do his will.—He blesses the Lord for his love to Israel, in giving them such a Prince and Savior, and yields up himself both to be ruled and saved by him: and though Jesus needs not, and is not enriched by, all that he can render to him; yet he devotes his riches and talents to his service, and they are graciously accepted, and recompensed with all that he can desire: yea, of his royal bounty, our Prince of Peace gives more than any petitioner is able to "ask or think." The believer, who has thus been with Jesus, will return to his station in society, to discharge his duty, with new alacrity, from purer motives, and to nobler purposes: yet, he will still look forward to the day, when, being "absent from the body, he shall be present with the Lord;" and when his transient glimpses of the Savior's glory, which overpower him with admiration, shall be exchanged for uninterrupted vision, with faculties enlarged, and strengthened to endure and delight in that ineffable refulgency. But who can express or conceive aright of that state of felicity? Every enraptured spirit will then confess, that the thousandth part of what is there enjoyed never reached his ear, nor was thought of in his most delightsome moments upon earth.—Oh, may the writer, and every reader of these observations, aspire after that unutterable felicity, and at length rejoice in it together! "Behold a greater than Solomon is here." Even upon earth he is present in his word, his ordinances, and on his throne of grace; and will be found of all who seek him uprightly.—But "the queen of the south will rise up in judgment with the men of this generation" also. "She came from the uttermost parts of the earth to hear the wisdom of Solomon;" but they will not arise from their beds, or go out of their houses, or even open their Bibles, to learn the wisdom of the Son of God! they will not put themselves to the least inconvenience to receive his instructions, and seek his salvation! (Note, Matt. 12:41,42.) Yea verily, this example shames every one of us; for we are all guilty of undervaluing our mercies, and of slackness in attending on the means of grace. Let then the careless and the infidel take warning, for evil is before them: let the negligent "strive to enter in at the strait gate," lest he should be found without when the door is shut: let the drooping inquirer be encouraged, for poor sinners of the Gentiles are welcome to Christ: and let us all sit at his feet, hear his word, and wait for his salvation; and, by reporting his praises, and doing his will, let us endeavor to recommend him to our fellow-sinners on every side.

V. 14—29.

They have the most comfort in worldly things, (though seldom the largest share of them,) who expect least from them, and decidedly prefer wisdom and grace, and who devote the best of all which they have to the Lord: for his largest promises, general and particular, shall surely be performed to those who trust and serve him. But alas! what are worldly wealth and prosperity? They can only procure luxuries, embellishments, and curiosities, which add nothing to the real enjoyment of life: abundance creates satiety, and what is had in plenty is nothing accounted of. Such possessions always multiply cares and temptations: and they generally undermine humility and heavenly-mindedness; and eat out the life of religion, by leading to sensual indulgence, avarice, ostentation, or the pride of life. But the spiritual peace, riches, and abundance of the Redeemer's kingdom, are of another nature: they satisfy, but never satiate; while they sanctify the soul, and strengthen it to resist temptation, and to mortify every fleshly lust.

NOTES.

CHAP. XI. V. 1—8. We have not a more melancholy and astonishing instance of human depravity, in the sacred Scriptures, than that recorded in these verses. He, who was named "Jedidiah," Beloved of the LORD, and who early in life is declared to have "loved the LORD:" (Notes, 3:2,3. 2 Sam. 12:24,25.)—he, who had been favored with such special tokens of God's favor, and had received such answers to his prayers:—he, who had been honored to build the temple, and was so enlarged in supplication when it was dedicated:—he, who was renowned throughout the earth for his wisdom and piety, as well as his wealth and prosperity:—he, who was employed as an inspired writer, whose name is affixed to a part of the oracles of God; who had given such excellent counsels and warnings to others, and was so illustrious a type of Christ:—even he apostatized, and became a public and shameful worshipper of abominable idols, to the disgrace of his understanding, as well as the scandal of his profession!—It is probable, that his declension was gradual: he was perhaps elated with spiritual pride, as well as induced by his prosperity to indulge in luxury and ostentation: or perhaps, he deemed it unnecessary for one of his wisdom and ability, and of his rank and authority, to restrict himself by those rules, which were needful or salutary to inferior persons, as if he were secure from those evils which they were intended to prevent! He first multiplied horses, and caused the people to go down into Egypt for that purpose; then he greatly multiplied gold and silver, contrary to the law of Moses; (Notes, 10:24—29. Deut. 17:16,17.) not as his father had done, for the service of the sanctuary, but for the increase of his own splendor. Thus, the barrier was broken through, and the fervor of his piety abated.—After the example of his father, he married several women, and added one to another, more and more rapidly, till he had got together an immense number of wives and concubines. And he doubtless might argue, that if it was lawful to have two wives, why not many? and in his case, who could maintain them all, they might not be inexpedient, and would add to his magnificence and royal dignity. Probably, Pharaoh's daughter, whom he first married, was a real convert; (for we find no temples built to the gods of Egypt;) and this might induce him to take more wives of the heathens, flattering himself, that his wisdom and example would prevail with them also to embrace the worship of JEHOVAH. Thus he proceeded, till perhaps persons were employed to collect from every part of his kingdom, but especially from the subjected nations, every beautiful woman whom they found, without regard to her religion. Those of superior rank seem to have been numbered among his wives, and styled princesses; while the inferiors were his concubines, with inferior privileges. (Note, Gen. 25:5,6.) Towards the close of his life, when he was above fifty years of age, he grew more addicted to his women than before: and, spending much time in their company, he doubtless in a degree neglected both the worship of God, and the affairs of his kingdom: and perhaps the enormous expense, which their extravagance occasioned, rendered those burdens requisite, of which the people afterwards complained. (Note, 12:4.) But the evil did not stop here: for his women gained still greater ascendency over him, and gradually prevailed with him to connive at their idolatries, to oblige them by building idolatrous temples, and at length to join with them in their abominable worship! When one had been thus gratified, there could be no peace, unless the others were obliged in the same manner; and therefore he did thus for all his strange wives.—Those who have noted in history, or in society, the effects of the influence of inveigling women over the greatest and wisest of men, will readily perceive that matters were speedily in a train; and that it was almost impossible, without an immediate divine interposition, that Solomon should stop short of this extreme folly and wickedness, when he had once suffered himself to be entangled in the fatal net. (Notes, Judg. 16:4—21.) The inspired historian, therefore, quotes the prohibition of marrying strange women, with the annexed consequence, "Surely they will turn away your heart after their gods:" to shew that no eminency of wisdom, or firmness of resolution, will secure any man; when in a careless or self-confident spirit he presumes to violate God's commandments, and thus to run into temptation. Of this, Solomon formed a most striking proof. (Marg. Ref. b, c.—Notes, Ex. 34:11—17. Josh. 23:11—13. Neh. 13:23—30.)—David had committed several heinous sins, but he had repented, and humbled himself for them: and he had still adhered to the worship of JEHOVAH, and never in the smallest instance set the people an example of idolatry, or given any connivance to that greatest of all abominations, that open treason against the King of heaven, and violation of the national covenant with Israel. But Solomon's heart was not thus "perfect with the LORD his God;" and "he went not fully after the LORD!" (Marg. Ref. h.)

V. 9 11. The Lord had twice appeared unto Solomon, in the most condescending and encouraging manner: and on the last occasion he had solemnly warned him of the consequences of disobedience, especially of idolatry. (Notes, 3:5—14. 6:11—13. 9:3—9.) This aggravated his offence: and it is probable, that God sent this awful message by a prophet; as refusing to appear again thy son [b] for David my servant's sake, and [c] for Jerusalem's sake which I have chosen.

14 ¶ And [d] the LORD stirred up [e] an adversary unto Solomon, Hadad the Edomite: he was of the king's seed in Edom.

B. C. 1040. 15 For it came to pass, [f] when David was in Edom, and Joab the captain of the host was gone up to bury the slain, [g] after he had smitten [h] every male in Edom;

16 (For six months did Joab remain there with all Israel, until he had cut off every male in Edom;)

17 That Hadad fled, he and certain Edomites of his father's servants with him, to go into Egypt; [i] Hadad being yet a little child.

18 And they arose out of [k] Midian, and came to [l] Paran; and they took men with them out of Paran, and they came to Egypt, unto Pharaoh king of Egypt; which gave him an house, and appointed him victuals, and gave him land.

19 And Hadad [m] found great favor in the sight of Pharaoh, so that he gave him to wife the sister of his own wife, the sister of [n] Tahpenes the queen.

20 And the sister of Tahpenes bare him Genubath his son, whom Tahpenes [o] weaned in Pharaoh's house: and Genubath was in Pharaoh's household among the sons of Pharaoh.

21 And when Hadad [p] heard in Egypt that David slept with his fathers, and that Joab the captain of the host was dead, Hadad said to Pharaoh, * Let me depart, that I may go to mine own country.

B. C. 1055.

22 Then Pharaoh said unto him, [q] But what hast thou lacked with me, that, behold thou seekest to go to thine own country? And he answered, † Nothing: howbeit [r] let me go in any wise.

23 ¶ And [s] God stirred him up another adversary, Rezon the son of Eliadah, which fled from his lord [t] Hadadezer king of Zobah:

24 And he gathered men unto him, and became captain over a band, when David slew them of Zobah; and they went to [u] Damascus, and dwelt therein, and reigned in Damascus.

25 And he was an adversary to Israel [x] all the days of Solomon, beside the mischief that Hadad did: and he [y] abhorred Israel, and reigned over Syria.

to him, after his ingratitude for his former gracious appearance to him.

V. 12, 13. The sentence, however, should not be executed during his life, but immediately after his death. (Note, 21:27—29.) Benjamin was so connected with Judah, that together they were but as one tribe, and therefore it is not here particularly mentioned. As a punishment of Solomon's sin, the other ten tribes would be rent from his son: (Notes, 29—32. 12:19,20. 1 Sam. 15:27, 28.) but in performance of the promises made to David, and in a gracious recompense for his obedience; and to maintain the worship of JEHOVAH at Jerusalem, which he had chosen, God would continue the tribe of Judah under the government of Solomon's posterity.—Even the mitigations of the sentence were suited to humble and afflict Solomon. Nothing was done for his sake, but all for his father's. (Notes, Gen. 19:27—29. 1 Sam. 2:30.) It is very probable, that this message brought him to himself, and led him to repentance. 'This 'was enough to astonish any man, to hear that all 'his splendor should be so soon eclipsed, if he were 'not perfectly stupified, and it is likely it did make 'him reflect on his folly; and, as many think, moved 'him to write the book of Ecclesiastes.' Bp. Patrick.

V. 14. As the opposition which Hadad made to Solomon accorded to the Lord's secret design of punishing him, and was over-ruled for that purpose, he is said to have "stirred him up;" though it is evident Hadad was instigated by his own ambition and resentment. (Notes, 1 Sam. 26:17—19. 2 Sam. 24:1,2. Jam. 1:13—15.)

V. 15, 16. These particulars are not recorded in the preceding history. (Marg. Ref. f.)—As the Edomites afterwards continued a people, either some particular district only was treated with this severity, or numbers escaped from Joab and his men.—Unless some very peculiar cause required it, this military execution cannot be justified.—To bury the slain. (15) The Israelites, who had been slain in the contest, as many think.

V. 17—22. (Marg. Ref.) After the death of David and Joab, Hadad returned to Idumea, in hopes to excite disturbances before Solomon's authority was established: but he seems to have been disappointed and restrained, till after Solomon's idolatry; when he perhaps attempted to seize the kingdom of Edom, and molested Solomon all the rest of his reign.

V. 23—25. When David had defeated Hadadezer, Rezon collected a company, over whom he became a captain; and it is probable, that for a long time they lived by plunder: for "David put garrisons in Syria of Damascus:" (Notes, 2 Sam. 8:3—8.) but at length Rezon found an opportunity of seizing Damascus, and usurping the kingdom of Syria.—He had indeed abhorred Israel from the first; but probably he did not openly appear as Solomon's adversary, or do him any injury, till Solomon had provoked the Lord by his idolatries. (Note, Prov. 16:7.)

V. 26—28. (9:15,24. Notes, Judg. 9:16—20, v. 20. 2 Sam. 5:9.) Jeroboam, having been employed in superintending the builders at Jerusalem, so distinguished himself by capacity and industry, that Solomon preferred him to a post of considerable authority and influence. He either placed him over the tribute collected from the tribes of Ephraim and Manasseh, or made him superintendent of the levy sent from them by courses to assist in his works. (Note, 5:13—18.)—This advancement, probably from a low situation, opened vast prospects to his ambitious mind: and he seems to have excited and encouraged the discontent of the people, on account of the burdens laid on them. Perhaps he was plotting an open revolt; at least he joined the disaffected party: and thus he might be said to "lift up his hand against the king;" though his designs were not carried into effect till after Solomon's death.

V. 29—32. (Marg. Ref.—Note, Acts 21:7—14.) The meaning of the emblematical action, here recorded, seems to imply, that "the new garment" belonged to the prophet, not to Jeroboam; though many expositors suppose the contrary. The division of the kingdom took nothing from Jeroboam, but gave the dominion over ten tribes to him. (Note, 12,13.)—Some think that the rending of the garment, into twelve pieces, represented also the subsequent divisions and distractions which prevailed in Israel.

V. 33. Induced by Solomon's example, and to obtain his favor, it seems that the people had generally joined in his idolatry; and the punishment inflicted on him and his posterity involved them in manifold and heavy calamities.

V. 34—36. (Notes, 12,13. Gen. 18:18,19. 26:2—5.) 'This was an admonition to Jeroboam not 'to molest Solomon in his life-time, by raising re-'bellion against him; and also to walk in God's 'way, as David did, and not to fall into idolatry.' Bp. Patrick.

A light, &c. (36) It was the purpose of God that David's family should still continue illustrious; and be the instruments of preserving the light of true religion in Jerusalem; as well as types of Christ "the Light of the world." (Notes, 15:4,5. Ps. 89:19—37. 132:17. Is. 9:6,7.)

V. 37. Thy soul desireth.] It is probable, from this expression, that Jeroboam secretly aspired to the kingdom. But neither the designs of God nor this declaration by the prophet excused his ambition and rebellion. David, long after he had been anointed to the kingdom, was faithful to Saul, and was not driven by persecution to attempt ought against him: nor would he even seize the vacant throne, till called to it by the voice of a sure house, as I built for David, and will give Israel unto thee.

39 And I will for this [c] afflict the seed of David, but [d] not for ever.

40 Solomon [e] sought therefore to kill Jeroboam; and Jeroboam arose, and fled into Egypt, unto [f] Shishak king of Egypt, and was in Egypt until the death of Solomon.

V. 38. And build thee, &c.] Notes, 2 Sam. 7:8—16. Distrusting this express conditional promise, Jeroboam endeavored to establish his authority by disobedience; and thus he forfeited the kingdom as to his posterity, and brought ruin upon them, and incalculable mischiefs on Israel. (Notes, 12:26—31. 14:5—16. 2 Chr. 13:4—12.)

V. 39. Three alleviations of the denounced judgments are mentioned. They would not happen in Solomon's days; therefore Jeroboam ought by no means to have attempted any thing against him: the whole kingdom was not to be taken from Solomon's posterity; therefore Jeroboam must not expect to subject Judah and Benjamin: and the affliction was not to be for ever; which seems especially to refer to Christ and his everlasting kingdom.

V. 40. There is nothing in the original for therefore; it is simply "And Solomon sought to kill Jeroboam." It does not appear that he did this because of Ahijah's prophecy, which would have been an instance of most infatuated rebellion against God, and utterly inconsistent with repentance; but because of Jeroboam's subsequent misconduct, who perhaps divulged and boasted of the promise, and "lifted up his hand against Solomon;" which implies an attempt to raise rebellion in his life-time. (26)—It is probable that Shishak was the successor of Pharaoh, whose daughter Solomon had married: but perhaps of another family and interest. He is the only king of Egypt hitherto called by his proper name; all before him being known by the general title of Pharaoh. He is also thought to have been the Sesostris of pagan history. (Notes, 14:25—28. 2 Chr. 12:2—11.)

V. 41. In the book, &c.] Some annals, or records, of Solomon's life and reign, more copious than the account here given; from which such extracts were made, as were needful for edification. (Preface to 1 Kings. Notes, 14:19. 1 Chr. 29:29,30.)

V. 42, 43. Solomon was the only king, who reigned so long as forty years over all Israel: yet he was not above sixty years of age when he died, and perhaps he had injured his constitution by indulgence.—We are not here informed, whether he repented before his death, or not: and this silence is a warning to every one of us, not to yield to temptations, lest we should leave the world in uncertainty, and be condemned as hypocrites in the consciences of God's people. But this silence in the book of Kings no more proves that Solomon did not repent, than the silence of the book of Chronicles proves that he did not commit idolatry. I would not indeed decide upon so controverted a point with unhesitating confidence: yet the book of Ecclesiastes seems fully to shew, that he repented, and publicly declared that repentance before his death, (Note, Ec. 7:23—28.) We are not however much interested in the solution, as some suppose: for the doctrines of Christianity must be proved by "the sure testimony of God," and not by particular examples: for we are not sufficiently acquainted, either with the real character of men, or with their final doom; to decide on this ground. If Solomon did not repent, he doubtless perished, notwithstanding all his previous zeal, important services, and eminent endowments: for no part of scripture gives reason to suppose that any who die in unrepented wickedness are saved. Many indeed think that this supposition would prove all his profession of religion to have been hypocritical; and this conclusion does not well accord to his name Jedidiah, and the testimony of the Holy Spirit, that he "loved the LORD." (Notes, Ez. 3:20,21. Heb. 10:35—39

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.
V. 1—8.

We are repeatedly reminded, by the examples of the most eminent men, that no abilities or endowments; that no illustrious services, fervent affections, or vigorous resolutions; that nothing inherent in man, forms in itself any security against the deceitfulness and desperate wickedness of his heart, or may be depended on as sufficient to preserve him from the commission of the most atrocious crimes.—Men of superior understanding find it far easier to lay down excellent rules for the conduct of others, than to reduce them to practice in the constant tenor of their own lives. (Notes, Prov. 1:—9:) For alas! they often fall into the same pit, and are caught in the same snare, against which they have repeatedly warned others; and sometimes are guilty of things as absurd and foolish as they are wicked. Nay, old age itself will not eradicate from the heart any evil propensity. The habit of indulgence in fleshly lusts will more than counterbalance the effect of nature's decay: and if our sinful passions be not crucified and mortified by the grace of God, they will never die of themselves, but will subsist and rage when every opportunity of gratification shall be taken away. —Thus we are taught to "cease from man," and to watch and be sober: for ours is a dangerous warfare in an enemy's country, while the worst of our foes are the traitors which occupy our own hearts.—We all naturally desire prosperity and pre-eminence; yet in general these operate as fatal poisons to the soul. And when we allow of one inordinate or inexpedient indulgence, we give energy to all our passions, and to every temptation of Satan. Not only will the same inclination grow more importunate; but others also, like humored children, will expect to be gratified in their turn: while self-government, even the authority of reason and conscience over the inferior faculties, is weakened by every concession. Our safety and comfort therefore consist in resolutely requiring them all to obey, and, though we cannot extinguish our passions, in rigorously confining them within the bounds of what is lawful and expedient.—Indulged luxury, or the pride of life, generally introduces greater licentiousness, where a man's affluence is equal to his inclinations. But the history of he world and of the church demonstrates, that the love of women is one of the most dangerous passions of the human heart. When once the divine original appointment concerning marriage is violated, the unbridled propensity will know no bounds: nor can the wisest or the most determined say to it, "Thus far shalt thou go, and no further:" but, like a descending weight, the progress is from bad to worse with accelerated rapidity. The designing objects of a sensual and roving affection will employ, by turns, all the arts of persuasion, dalliance, flattery, or upbraidings, to prevail over a man's resolution, and to induce his compliance with the most unreasonable and pernicious requests: till shame and conscience are surmounted, reputation and interest sacrificed, every barrier is broken down, and a perfect infatuation takes place. (P. O. Judg. 16:)—Parents, and those who are in reputation for piety, should be peculiarly careful what practices they sanction by their examples: for such as do not imitate them in their best actions, will be encouraged to copy and to exceed them in their mistakes and misconduct. Those who have made the boldest profession of godliness, and have been most serviceable to its interests, may expect to be assaulted by the strongest temptations from the great enemy of souls; and should always entertain a jealous fear, lest, being overcome in an unguarded hour, they should after all become a scandal to religion, a stumbling block to the prejudiced, an encouragement to hypocrites and infidels, or a snare and evil precedent to the unstable and injudicious. They should therefore be peculiarly watchful against the incursions of spiritual pride; or the fatal persuasion, that they are superior to those rules and cautions, which are needful for weaker persons. They should always meditate with seriousness on their danger of falling, and the wide spreading fatal effects of their misconduct; and prefer any affliction, or even death, to thus dishonoring God and his truth.—The fond hope, which numbers indulge, who marry with ungodly persons, of being instrumental to their salvation, stands exposed throughout the Scripture, but especially in this chapter: the wisest and best of men are more likely to be corrupted by the converse of a beloved ungodly companion, than to bring such a one to a sense of serious religion. Considering the state of human nature, the case is as desperate, as that of a healthy person associating with those that have got the plague, who is far more likely to be infected himself, than to recover them: and the Lord's prohibition of such marriages declares them to be means, which he does not allow of, and will seldom use, for that purpose.—The slaves of fleshly lusts are meet worshippers of abominable idols; but not of the God of Israel, who is holy, and whose worshippers must be holy too.—Those who connive at the wickedness which they ought to punish, will soon join in committing it, and in inducing others to do the same: but all this proceeds from the heart not being fully devoted to the Lord; for when the love of him occupies the affections, and the soul is satisfied with the earnests and hopes of his favor, all inferior desires, however lawful, will be moderated, regulated, and subordinated; and all unlawful inclinations will be hated and crucified.

V. 9—25.

The Lord is very angry even with the objects of his special love, when their hearts are for a season, or in a measure, turned from him; and the peculiar tokens of his favor, his answers to their prayers, and their comfortable communion with him in times past, will aggravate their guilt and increase his displeasure: nor can there be any peace, or assurance of acceptance, without an unreserved persevering obedience to his commandments. Yet, in punishing transgressors, he will not dishonor his own faithful promises, desert the cause of true religion, or fail to honor the memories of those who have uprightly walked in his ways: and for the sake of Jesus, and his people whom he hath chosen, he will not suffer his whole displeasure to arise. It is grievous indeed to leave heavy judgments for our sins to our posterity; yet it is a mercy to have peace and truth in our days. But when the Lord is become an Adversary, he will give power, courage, and capacity to other adversaries, and thus render those formidable, who before appeared contemptible: and we should always observe his righteous hand, even in those sufferings which come upon us from the wickedness of others.—Unnecessary severity excites resentments, which may long after create us or ours disturbance and grief: and it is best, as far as we can, to exercise lenity to all men, and "to overcome evil with good."—But, if the abundance and pleasure of a court, and the friendship of a king, could not detain Hadad from his own desolate and subjected country; what earthly prosperity should take off a believer's affections from his glorious inheritance in heaven, or make him reluctant to remove thither?—Many abhor the Israel of God, who are not permitted to hurt them: nay, when they seem to succeed in their malice, they are only the instruments of salutary chastisement to them.

V. 26—43.

We often find our worst enemies among those whom we have most befriended; especially when ingenuity, industry, and resolution, rather than piety, have recommended them to our notice. These qualifications make way for a man's preferment, and every advance enlarges the ambition of a proud, unsanctified mind: and when men of this character come within the attraction of supreme authority, and dare to hope for that dangerous pre-eminence; to "reign according to the desire of their hearts" forms the grand object, and to it every tie of gratitude or duty must be sacrificed.—Providential dispensations to this day, as well as prophetic declarations of old, try men's spirits, whether they will grasp at advantages at all events; or whether they will wait patiently, and use only lawful means of obtaining them, according to the will of God.—Many so believe some parts of God's word, as perversely to take encouragement from them to commit iniquity; instead of so believing the whole, as to expect the blessings proposed in the way of conscientious obedience there prescribed. They are shewn, and seem to understand, that others have forfeited their most valuable interests by sin; and yet they will seek to seize or to secure their own by similar transgressions! so inconsistent is human nature!—The Lord will not afflict for ever the people of his covenant: but when they grievously offend, he will eclipse all their honor; he will leave obscurity and reproach upon their characters; and perhaps bring them down to the grave in disgrace, discomfort, and uncertainty; distressed concerning the state of their own souls, and about the consequences of their conduct, to their families, to the church, and to the world. May God help us to walk circumspectly; to pass

CHAP. XII.

The Israelites, assembled at Shechem to make Rehoboam king, with Jeroboam now returned from Egypt, demand redress of their grievances, 1—5. Rehoboam, rejecting the counsel of the old men, and following that of the young, answers them roughly, 6—15. Ten tribes revolt, stone Adoram, and make Jeroboam king, 16—20. Rehoboam raises an army to subdue them; but is forbidden by the prophet Shemaiah, 21—24. Jeroboam builds Shechem and Penuel, 25: and to establish his kingdom, he sets up the worship of the golden calves in Bethel and Dan, 26—33.

AND [a] Rehoboam went to [b] Shechem: for all Israel were come to Shechem to make him king.

2 And it came to pass, when [c] Jeroboam the son of Nebat, who was yet in Egypt, heard of it, (for he was fled from the presence of king Solomon, and Jeroboam dwelt in Egypt;)

3 That they sent and called him: and Jeroboam and all the congregation of Israel came, and spake unto Rehoboam, saying,

4 Thy father made [d] our yoke grievous: now therefore make thou the grievous service of thy father, and his heavy yoke which he put upon us, lighter, and we will serve thee.

5 And he said unto them, Depart yet for three days: then come again to me. And the people departed.

NOTES.

CHAP. XII. V. 1. We read of no son of Solomon except Rehoboam, and his mother was an Ammonitess. (Notes, 14:21. Deut. 23:3—5.)—He had also two daughters. (4:11,15.) That he should have no more children, may be considered as a providential rebuke, for his multiplying wives in so unprecedented a manner.—Solomon seems to have been sensible, that his son was not likely to prove a wise man, or to carry on his designs for the good of Israel, and the establishment of his family; and he appears to have greatly regretted it. (Note, Ec. 2:18—23.) As Rehoboam was the unrivalled heir of so flourishing a kingdom, his natural imprudence and rashness would doubtless be increased by the flattery of the young men, with whom he was brought up. The people in general, upon Solomon's death, appeared disposed to recognise his succession, and convened at Shechem for that purpose. (Marg. Ref. b. Note, 25.) Yet, it is probable, that this city, which belonged to Ephraim, was chosen, rather than Jerusalem or Hebron, that the tribe of Judah might not have too great influence in the transaction; and Rehoboam was impolitic in consenting to that appointment, if he could have prevented it.

V. 2, 3. Jeroboam, hearing of the death of Solomon, was not inclined to delay to return into the land of Israel, and wait his opportunity of seizing upon the prize, which had been set before his ambition. He was not disposed to wait the Lord's direction to proceed, as David had done when Saul died. (Note, 2 Sam. 2:1—4.)—The elders of the people also, by sending for him, indicated that they meant to impose strict limitations on Rehoboam.

V. 4. When the scriptural account of Solomon's reign, and the peace, affluence, and prosperity which Israel then enjoyed, are considered, we cannot doubt, but that this charge was either false or greatly exaggerated. (Notes, 9:19. 11:1—8.) Solomon had never oppressed the people with heavy taxes, or exercised cruelty towards them: and though some hardships might have been experienced in the latter end of his reign, compared with the former years; yet they were not "grievous services," or heavy burdens: but, in fact, "Jeshurun waxed fat and kicked."—While they complained of their own grievances and demanded redress, they were silent as to Solomon's idolatry, in which indeed many of them had concurred, and about the more complete re-establishment of the worship of God among them. (Notes, 11:33. 1 Sam. 8:1—5.)

V. 5. This delay of Rehoboam shewed a reluctancy to comply with the demands of the people, and afforded the malecontents time to tamper with the elders of Israel, and to render them evil-affected. It would have been a far more prudent measure to have immediately assured them of a redress of all real grievances; and then to have waited till particulars were inquired into, when the unreasonableness of exorbitant claims would have been detected.

V. 6, 7. The persons, whom Rehoboam first consulted, were the friends and counsellors of Solomon, firmly attached to the interests of his family, and capable of giving safe and prudent advice. Accordingly, they advised him to make all needful concessions to the assembly, to speak fair to them, and to shew a readiness to pay regard to their interests and inclinations: this would have quieted the minds of the well-disposed, and broken all the measures of the malecontents; and when matters were settled, the people in general would have quietly rendered all proper submission to the unto them, [l] My little finger shall be thicker than my father's loins.

11 And now, whereas my father did lade you with a heavy yoke, [m] I will add to your yoke: my father hath chastised you with whips, but I will chastise you with [n] scorpions.

12 So Jeroboam and all the people came to Rehoboam the third day, as the king had appointed, saying, [o] Come to me again the third day.

13 And the king [p] answered the people [*] roughly, and forsook the old men's counsel that they gave him;

14 And spake to them after [q] the counsel of the young men, saying, [r] My father made your yoke heavy, and I will add to your yoke: my father also chastised you with whips, but I will chastise you with scorpions.

15 Wherefore the king hearkened not unto the people; for [s] the cause was from the LORD, [t] that he might perform his saying, which the LORD spake by Ahijah the Shilonite unto Jeroboam the son of Nebat.

16 So when all Israel saw that the king hearkened not unto them, the people answered the king, saying, [u] What portion have we in David? neither have we inheritance in the son of Jesse: [v] to your tents, O Israel: [x] now see to thine own house, David. [y] So Israel departed unto their tents.

17 But as for [z] the children of Israel which dwelt in the cities of Judah, Rehoboam reigned over them.

18 Then king Rehoboam sent [a] Adoram, who was over the tribute; and [b] all Israel stoned him with stones, that he died. Therefore king Rehoboam [†] made speed to get him up to his chariot, to [c] flee to Jerusalem.

prince of the house of David. (Notes, Judg. 8:1—3. Prov. 15:1. 25:15.)

V. 8—15. The wise counsel of the old men did not suit the rash, insolent, and domineering spirit of Rehoboam; and he opposed to it the advice of the companions of his youthful pleasures, who would be sure to accommodate themselves to his inclinations. It 'is a frequent fault of new 'kings, who, to shew their power, presently change 'their counsellors, and put in new officers, to grat-'ify all their dependents; not considering who are 'wisest, but who have been their companions.' Bp. Patrick. They counselled him therefore to speak with authority, and to damp the spirits of the assembly by resolute language, that they might no longer presume to dictate to him. The expressions which they suggested, allowed to the utmost, and even aggravated, the injurious charge brought against Solomon; and yet avowed a resolution of greater oppression and severity! The king was advised to menace them, that "his little finger should be thicker than his father's loins:" that is, that, as he was much more powerful than Solomon was at the beginning of his reign; so he would certainly let them feel the weight of that power, if they dared to oppose him. Perhaps he thought thus because he came to the throne at a more mature age, than Solomon had done; and had not any brothers to rival him in it. He also declared that he would "add to their yoke," by demanding heavier services and taxes of them: and, if they hesitated to obey, he would chastise them with scorpions, severe punishments as terrible as the sting of a scorpion; or, as some think, a terrible scourge thus called.—Such language as this was not very wise in Pharaoh to the poor enslaved Israelites, but it was not at all likely that it should be endured by a rich, numerous, and free people. (Notes, Ex. 5:4—14.) Nothing can be conceived more foolish and exasperating, than such an address in so critical a juncture: but it was adopted, because it coincided with the self-importance and tyrannical temper of Rehoboam; and we may cease to wonder at his extreme infatuation, when we are told, that "the cause was from the LORD, that he might perform his word." (Notes, 11:29—33. 2 Sam. 17:7—14. 2 Chr. 25:14—16. Prov. 21:30. Is. 19:11—14.)

V. 16. Though Rehoboam had acted very foolishly and wickedly; yet perhaps he might have been brought to a better temper, by proper arguments and expostulations.—The Lord had indeed promised ten tribes to Jeroboam: but he had not commanded the people to revolt from the family of David; nor had he commissioned Jeroboam to wrench these tribes from Rehoboam. His purposes and declarations were not the motive of their conduct, and therefore formed no excuse for it. Their contempt of the memory of David, and ingratitude to him and his son, who had done so very much towards advancing them to their present prosperity, were very criminal: but their language concerning his house, as if the entail of the kingdom to his family, though confirmed to him by the faithful oath and covenant of God himself, would now come to nothing, was extremely profane, and discovered the infidelity of their hearts. (Notes, 2 Sam. 7:12—16. Ps. 89:19—37.) They indeed determined to have nothing more to do with the house of David, and he could not see to it himself: but the Lord would take care to fulfil his engagements; and David's family could not be destroyed, though it would be corrected or weakened; for the Messiah was to descend from him. (Notes, 11:12,13,36. 1 Sam. 22:9,10. 2 Sam. 20:1,2.)—Indeed the ten tribes themselves were by far the greater losers by the revolt.

V. 17. A considerable part of the priests and Levites, together with the tribe of Benjamin, and many of the Simeonites, dwelt in Judah; (Note, Josh. 19:1—9.) and many others soon after joined them. (Note, 2 Chr. 11:13—17.)

V. 18. It is not certain, whether Rehoboam sent Adoram to demand the taxes of the people, 19 So [d] Israel * rebelled against the house of David [e] unto this day.

20 And it came to pass, when all Israel heard that Jeroboam was come again, that they sent and called him unto the congregation, [f] and made him king over all Israel: there was [g] none that followed the house of David, but the tribe of Judah only.

[Practical Observations.]

21 ¶ And [h] when Rehoboam was come to Jerusalem, he assembled all the house of Judah, with the tribe of Benjamin, [i] an hundred and fourscore thousand chosen men, which were warriors, to fight against the house of Israel, to bring the kingdom again to Rehoboam the son of Solomon.

22 But the word of God came unto [j] Shemaiah, [k] the man of God, saying,

23 Speak unto Rehoboam the son of Solomon king of Judah, and unto all the house of Judah and Benjamin, and to the remnant of the people, saying,

24 Thus saith the LORD, [l] Ye shall not go up, nor fight against your brethren the children of Israel: return every man to his house; [m] for this thing is from me. [n] They hearkened therefore to the word of the LORD, and returned to depart, according to the word of the LORD.

25 Then Jeroboam [o] built [p] Shechem in mount Ephraim, and dwelt therein; and went out from thence, and built [q] Penuel.

26 And Jeroboam [r] said in his heart, [s] Now shall the kingdom return to the house of David:

27 If this people [t] go up to do sacrifice in the house of the LORD at Jerusalem, then shall the heart of this people turn again unto their lord, even unto Rehoboam king of Judah, [u] and they shall kill me, and go again to Rehoboam king of Judah.

28 Whereupon the king [x] took counsel, and made [y] two calves of gold, and said unto them, [z] It is too much for you to go up to Jerusalem: [a] behold thy gods, O Israel, which brought thee up out of the land of Egypt.

29 And he set the one in [b] Beth-el, and the other put he in [c] Dan.

after their dispersion, as a feeble attempt to enforce his imprudent threats; or whether, previously to their departure from Shechem, he sent him to pacify them with proposals for an accommodation. But, whatever his age, experience, and influence might have been, his office alone rendered him a very improper person for this embassy: (4:6.—Note, 2 Sam. 20:24.) for the discontents of the people were excited by the tributes or levies over which he presided. Accordingly he lost his life in a popular tumult, and Rehoboam hastily fled to Jerusalem. (Marg.) All these measures seem to have been exceedingly impolitic; the result of passion, not of judgment.—This is the first time that we read of a king of Israel riding in a chariot; though no doubt Solomon had generally done so. (Cant. 3:9,10.)

V. 19, 20. The defection of Israel from Rehoboam is called rebellion against the house of David; as no misconduct of either Solomon or Rehoboam was sufficient to justify or even excuse it; and neither the people nor Jeroboam intended to obey God, though they accomplished his purposes, by pursuing their own schemes. They made Jeroboam king, 'without any condition, that we can 'find: though it is likely, he promised to ease them 'of all their burden.' Bp. Patrick.—No whole tribe, except Judah, and little Benjamin as united to it, adhered to Rehoboam. (Note, 11:12,13.)

V. 21—24. The Lord would not allow Rehoboam to recover the ten tribes, nor was it his will that he should lose Judah: and therefore he mercifully prohibited the war, and thus prevented much bloodshed, though both parties deserved punishment for their sins. It was commendable in Rehoboam, that he submitted to the message of God by his prophet, when his loss had been so great, and his preparations were so formidable.—It is probable his more prudent counsellors opposed the war.

Shemaiah, the man of God. (22) One who had been before known and approved as a prophet of the Lord; and not one newly raised up, whom Rehoboam and the people would have been less disposed to regard.

V. 25. (Marg. Ref.) Jeroboam repaired and fortified Shechem and Penuel; and perhaps erected palaces, and other public buildings in them, that they might be the seats of his government, on each side of Jordan. (Note, 2 Chr. 11:5—12.)

V. 26—29. The Lord had promised Jeroboam, that he would give ten tribes to him, and confirm the kingdom over them to his posterity, in case he obeyed his commandments: but he either forgot or despised the word of the Lord; and, leaning to his own understanding, he concluded, that he never could secure the obedience of the people, if they went up to Jerusalem to worship. (Notes, 11:37, 38.) For in case Rehoboam permitted them to come and return in safety, (as it is probable he would have done,) their friendly intercourse with their brethren, their social worship, and mutua kindness, would induce them to return to thei submission to David's family, and to purchase Rehoboam's favor by killing his competitor. This might indeed seem natural and reasonable, but it contradicted the truth of God; and Jeroboam's wicked policy violated his commandments. To cover his secret intentions, he pretended, that it was too much trouble for the people to go to Jerusalem to worship; and that they might as acceptably serve God nearer home. (Notes, Judg. 8:27.

17:5.) He therefore made two golden calves, in imitation no doubt of the idolatries which he had witnessed in Egypt, and according to the idolatry of Israel in the wilderness: (Note, Ex. 32:2—6.) and he placed them at the southern and northern extremities of his kingdom; at Beth-el, afterward called on that account "Beth-aven," or the house of vanity: and at Dan, where the Danites had formerly established idolatry. These were also reputed sacred places: the one, for Jacob's vision and vow; and the other, for the customary idolatry which had there prevailed. (Notes, Gen. 28:12—22. Judg. 18:30,31.) Thus he "made Israel to sin," and introduced the worship of the golden calves, which was perpetuated in the kingdom of Israel, without interruption, till the Assyrian captivity: and the bulk of the people readily concurred in his measures, as suited to their conveniency and inclinations; though the priests, Levites, and many Israelites were honorable exceptions. (Note, 2 Chr. 11:13—17.)—It is evident, that Jeroboam meant this worship for JEHOVAH the God of Israel, "who brought them out of the land of Egypt:" though it was directly contrary to the law of God, and infinitely dishonorable to his glorious majesty, to be thus represented. Perhaps the people would be less shocked at worshipping the God of Israel, under the similitude of the golden calf, than if they had been at once invited to worship Baal: but it made way for that species of idolatry also. Thus the worship of images of Christ, and similar superstitions, in the ancient Romish church, soon introduced the worship of saints and angels. (Notes, Ex. 20:4—6.)

V. 30. (Marg Ref. d. Notes, 14:9—16.)—Even unto Dan.] The people readily resorted to sacrifice to the appointed places; though sometimes, that might occasion them longer journeys, than if they had gone to Jerusalem. Perhaps they often went from the southern part of the land, even to Dan, to maintain communion with those who worshipped there, who probably would not be backward in repaying their civility.

V. 31. Temples, on high places, were erected for the worship of the calves, at Beth-el and Dan; which were intended to serve the purpose to the religion of the ten tribes, that the temple did to Judah. Some think there were several chapels and altars erected, for the conveniency of the worshippers: and perhaps others were added in different parts of the land. For these he appointed and consecrated priests of the poorest of the people, who would on that account be the more obsequious to him for their own interest. Or rather, as others explain the words, he made priests from every extremity of the land, or from every tribe and family without exception.—Thus he exempted the people from paying tithes to the Levites, whom he drove out of his kingdom, because they would not concur in his idolatry: (Note, 2 Chr. 11:13—17.) and he paid court to the other tribes, by admitting them to the priesthood, of which many were ambitious: (Notes, Num. 16:1—4,8—11.) and in both respects he, no doubt, thought himself, and was considered by others, a consummate politician. (Notes, 2 Sam. 15:31. 2 Chr. 13:4—22. Job 12:13—25. Prov. 21:30. 1 Cor. 1:20—25.)

V. 32, 33. This feast in the eighth month was intended as an imitation of the feast of tabernacles, which was kept in the seventh month, and perhaps it lasted as many days. (Note, Lev. 23:31—36,39—43.) But Jeroboam affected the credit of devising an entirely new system; and perhaps he hoped to draw in those who still went up to Jerusalem, by having his feast at a different time.—He seems himself to have acted as priest, in offering sacrifice and burning incense. (Note, 13:1.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—20.

Many wise and pious men have had the severe affliction of foolish and wicked children: and as the "Lord alone giveth wisdom" even good instructions will not ensure their prudent and proper conduct. But bad examples generally defeat the effect of wise counsels: and those who are likely to inherit great dignity are commonly so flattered and indulged, that it is almost a miracle, if they are not intoxicated with pride and sensual lusts.—Man is a discontented being; and while one desire remains ungratified, and one inconvenience unremoved, he is naturally more disposed to murmur, than to be thankful either to God or man, for the multiplied unmerited blessings with which he is surrounded. It is true, that rulers are often oppressive, and "make their yoke grievous;" and the people possess liberties and privileges, which they have a right in a regular manner to defend: but it is also true, that the people often complain without cause, and in an improper manner; that they do not make proper allowances for human infirmity, and the arduousness of government; that they expect all the advantages of it, while they grudge the necessary expenses; and are more anxious about their own interests, than about general equity, or the cause of truth and righteousness. Of these unreasonable dissatisfactions, ambitious men are ready to take the advantage, and put themselves in the way to head any formidable opposition to "the powers that be," when it can subserve their own purposes. (Notes, 1 Sam. 8:6—9. 2 Sam. 15:1—6. 20:1,2. P. O. 2 Sam. 15:1—12.) It requires great wisdom to prevent or defeat these pernicious machinations: and if those, who have not prudence or experience adequate to such emergencies, would follow the counsel of their real friends who are older or wiser than themselves, much mischief would be prevented. But weak men are commonly the most obstinate, and

CHAP. XIII.

A man of God sent from Judah prophesies to Jeroboam, while burning incense, that Josiah of David's race should defile the altar at Beth-el; and he gives him a sign, 1—3. Jeroboam's hand, stretched forth against him, withers; and the altar is rent, 4, 5. Jeroboam's hand is restored at the prophet's prayer, 6. He refuses entertainment and a reward, and leaves Beth-el, 7—10. He is seduced, and brought back, by the lie of an old prophet, who afterwards denounces the judgment of God against him for his disobedience, 11—22. A lion kills him on his way home, 23—25. The old prophet fetches his body, buries it with lamentations, and confirms his prophecy, 26—32. Jeroboam persists in his evil ways, 33, 34.

AND, behold, there came [a] a man of God out of Judah, [b] by the word of the LORD, unto Beth-el: and [c] Jeroboam stood by the altar to * burn incense.

relish no counsel but what flatters their silly pride, and humors their unreasonable prejudices: and when the companions of a prince's pleasures are his select counsellors; his inclinations, however mischievous, will be preferred to the important interests of the whole kingdom. (Notes, 2 Chr. 24:17,18. Esth. 2:1—4. Dan. 6:12—17.) Yet experience decides that, in general, men best mount by first stooping, prevail by yielding, and rule by becoming serviceable and giving good words: and when this consists with duty, it is in most cases our wisdom and interest. To the haughty indeed it appears degrading and mean: they delight to exert their authority, and shew their courage, by boasting and threatening; without considering whether they have power and abilities, to bear them out against the enraged opposition, which such language and behavior must excite. By attempting in this manner to domineer, men expose themselves to the contempt of the wise: their enemies are rejoiced, and their friends are grieved by it; and they who have power to resist, will scorn to fear those, who are above seeking to be loved. Thus, fatal contests are excited, and all parties are hurried on to commit many crimes: yet the Lord overrules the whole to accomplish his own righteous purpose and holy word.—We need not wonder that those persons who forget the mercies of God, and oppose his appointments with ingratitude and contempt, should recompense their earthly benefactors with reproaches, insults, or injuries: but the Lord will take care of the characters, families, and interests of his faithful servants; and they may safely leave their cause in his hand, though they cannot see to it themselves.—But when men are left to their own infatuated counsels, they add one mistake to another: they perceive their folly in some instances, when it is too late; yet in attempting to rectify their errors, they the more entangle themselves, and expose their friends: and those who were most rash and daring, when danger was out of sight, are generally the most cowardly when it seems to approach.

V. 21—33.

It is in vain to attempt to disannul the Lord's counsel: when his revealed will is contrary to our pursuits, they should be relinquished, however great our apparent loss may be; and it is his will, and should be the desire of all in authority, as much as possible to prevent the effusion of human blood.—Unbelieving men judge by appearances, and often conclude, that safety and prosperity can be obtained by those measures alone, which the word of God condemns. They engage in enterprises, in which they must either succeed or be ruined: success in this case appears the grand object; and the necessity, they suppose, will excuse or justify their deviations from general rules: and thus they regard not what wickedness they commit, nor what numbers they involve in the same guilt and condemnation. But faith waits upon God in the path of duty, for the performance of his own promises, whatever difficulties may seem to impede it: and it perceives and aims at nobler objects, than the success of any temporal project, or even the preservation of life itself.—The duplicity of politicians often consists, in concealing their selfish purposes, under plausible ostensible pretences: but men frequently conjecture aright in such matters; and God sees and will expose the thought of their hearts, notwithstanding all their disguises.—The benefit of the public is often the plea; personal impunity for their crimes, the retaining of their dignity, or the increase of their own authority, are the real motives of their conduct. The people, however, are generally willing to gratify their rulers in matters of religion, provided it be easy, cheap, pompous, or sensual: and if a few scruples intervene, the revival of some old superstition, some plea of antiquity, or of liberality of sentiment, or of agreement in the main with more scrupulous persons, though expedient alterations are adopted, will generally conciliate the minds of the majority to any religion, which suits their convenience, agrees with their interests, and does not disquiet their consciences, or disturb them in gratifying their inclinations.—When persons in authority aim to render religion conducive to their secular purposes, they generally love to bring every thing under their own management. The ceremonies must be of their own devising, and the ministers of their own selecting: and indeed a hireling, ignorant priesthood well suits with an idolatrous or superstitious worship, an usurping tyrannical prince, or a rebellious, apostate people. But the pride, arrogance, and enmity of the human heart, never appears more atrocious and odious, than when it presumptuously dares to change the divine appointments, for those "which a man hath devised of his own heart," and to mould the worship of God into contrariety to his will; when ministers, so called, can be found shameless enough to countenance this arrogance; and when whole nations of professing worshippers quietly submit to it. Indeed nothing in such a case, but a torrent of ungodliness, and most awful judgments, can be expected.—But alas! how soon all earthly prosperity is clouded! every remarkable prevalence of true religion on earth, has hitherto been succeeded by lamentable declensions, apostacies, or divisions. May the Lord hasten that time, when our "Prince of Peace" shall set up his kingdom of truth and of righteousness all over the earth, and when his cause shall finally and universally prevail! (Notes, Rev. 20:1—6.)

NOTES.

CHAP. XIII. V. 1. To burn incense.] (Notes, 3: 2,3. 12:32,33. 2 Chr. 26:16—23.) Jeroboam seems on this occasion to have officiated himself; and to have burned incense at the same altar, on which the sacrifices had been offered. As the shall he offer the priests of the high places that burn incense upon thee, and men's bones shall be burnt upon thee.

3 And [f] he gave a sign the same day, saying, This is the sign which the LORD hath spoken; Behold, the altar shall be rent, and the ashes that are upon it shall be poured out.

4 And it came to pass, when king Jeroboam heard the saying of the man of God, which had cried against the altar in Beth-el, that he put forth his hand from the altar, saying, [g] Lay hold on him. And [h] his hand, which he put forth against him, dried up, so that he could not pull it in again to him.

5 The altar also was rent, and the ashes poured out from the altar, [i] according to the sign which the man of God hath given by the word of the LORD.

6 And the king answered and said unto the man of God, [k] Entreat now the face of the LORD thy God, and pray for me, that my hand may be restored me again. [l] And the man of God besought the [*] LORD, and the king's hand was restored him again, and became as it was before.

7 And the king said unto the man of God, Come home with me, and [m] refresh thyself, [n] and I will give thee a reward.

8 And the man of God said unto the king, [o] If thou wilt give me half thine house, [p] I will not go in with thee, neither will I eat bread nor drink water in this place:

9 For [q] so was it charged me by the word of the LORD, saying, [r] Eat no bread, nor drink water, nor turn again by the same way that thou camest.

10 So he went another way, and returned not by the way that he came to Beth-el. [Practical Observations.]

11 ¶ Now there dwelt [s] an old prophet in Beth-el; and his [†] sons [t] came and told him all the works, that the man of God had done that day in Beth-el: the words which he had spoken unto the king, them they told also to their father.

typical meaning of these institutions was not at all understood, and as the divine appointment was entirely disregarded, every kind of innovation was made without scruple.

V. 2. We are not informed of this prophet's name; but he came from Judah, in the name of JEHOVAH, whose worship at the temple Jeroboam and Israel had forsaken: (1) and he predicted the prevalency of the house of David, whose authority they had rejected. With holy boldness and great earnestness he cried against the altar, while Jeroboam and his attendants were performing their religious rites. As the destruction of this newly instituted worship was to be expressly foretold, and the stupidity of the idolaters themselves to be severely reproved, he addressed himself to the altar, and not to the worshippers. (Marg. Ref. d.)—This prediction was delivered considerably more than three hundred years before Josiah was born; yet during all those years no one of the house of David gave his son this name, or attempted to fulfil the prophecy, until the appointed time was arrived; and then Amon, a wicked prince, named his son Josiah. (Note, 2 Kings 23:15—20.)—This extraordinary prophecy was a plain declaration, that the family of David would continue, and be honored as the supporters of true religion, when the kingdom of the ten tribes should be incapable of resisting them.—The burning of men's bones upon the altar was the greatest contempt of it imaginable: and the offering of the priests themselves upon it, the greatest mark of God's abhorrence of their crimes. (Marg. Ref. c.)

V 3—6. The judgment immediately inflicted upon Jeroboam, and the rending of the altar as it had been foretold, intimidated him, so that he did not venture to attempt any thing further against "the man of God," whose message was thus divinely attested. In this emergency he had no confidence in his idols, his newly constituted priests, or his self-invented sacrifices; but he expected help from the prayers of the prophet. He therefore begged him to entreat the face (or the favor) of the Lord his God for him: but he neither acknowledged his guilt, nor desired instructions from the prophet, nor sought forgiveness of his sins, nor desisted from his idolatry. He merely desired the removal of the divine judgment, which the prophet readily prayed for and obtained. (Notes, Ex. 9:30. Acts 8: 18—24.)

V. 7—10. Jeroboam neither repented, nor returned thanks to God for the restoration of his withered hand: but he was willing to entertain and reward the prophet for it; perhaps supposing that he was ready to do any thing for hire, like his own priests. (Notes, 21:8—14. 1 Sam. 9:6—10. 2 Kings 5:20—25. Is. 56:9—12. Am. 7:12, 13.) But the Lord had prescribed to his servant a different conduct. As a solemn protestation against the idolatry of Beth-el, he was forbidden to eat or drink in that city, whatever hardship he might endure. God would not accept their most costly sacrifices: nor would he allow his servant to accept of any entertainment from its inhabitants; or to do any thing which had the appearance of having fellowship with the men, whose works of darkness he was sent to reprove. Nay, the more fully to express his abhorrence of 15 Then he said unto him, Come home with me and eat bread.

16 And he said, [z] I may not return with thee, nor go in with thee; neither will I eat bread nor drink water with thee in this place:

17 For [*] it was said to me [a] by the word of the LORD, Thou shalt eat no bread nor drink water there, nor turn again to go by the way that thou camest.

18 He said unto him, I am a prophet also as thou art; and [b] an angel spake unto me by the word of the LORD, saying, Bring him back with thee into thine house, that he may eat bread, and drink water. [c] But he lied unto him.

their apostacy, and his determination not to make himself in any way familiar with them, or ought belonging to them, he was ordered to return by another road. And when solicited by the king himself, and promised a royal recompense; (though probably he was poor, as well as hungry and weary;) he thus far obediently observed his instructions.

V. 11—19. This old prophet continued to reside at Beth-el, after the priests and Levites had been driven away, and after idolatry was publicly established there: yet he entered no protest against it; and his sons were present at the idolatrous sacrifice, and made no secret of it. One old prophet: (Heb.) if any others had lived there, they had ere this left the place. These circumstances, joined to his conduct on this occasion, are convincing proofs, that though called a prophet he was not a really godly man. Perhaps he had been educated in the schools of the prophets, and had been favored with the Spirit of prophecy. (Note, Num. 22:5.) This had acquired him the reputation of a prophet, and he had maintained it in the days of Solomon when religion was respected. But when the change took place under Jeroboam, being a carnal man, he preferred ease and interest to his religion, and made no direct opposition to the prevailing party: perhaps satisfying his conscience with holding his own sentiments privately, and not actually joining in the idolatry. Yet he was still desirous of the reputation of a prophet, as far as he could safely retain it: and this appears to have been his leading motive, in enticing the prophet of Judah back again; and not, as has been conjectured, either real kindness to him, or malice against him. Many would doubtless applaud the resolution and disinterestedness of the man of God, who at last was not injured by Jeroboam: and perhaps this old prophet was afraid of being censured for his cowardice, connivance, and selfishness. (Note, Acts 5:1—11.) He might hope to avert this disgrace by shewing kindness to the man of God; and he found he could do it, without incurring Jeroboam's displeasure. He therefore followed him, and found him sitting under a tree, weary and in need of refreshment, which would add much energy to his temptation: and when he perceived that he was decided against eating bread at Beth-el; he assured him that he also was a prophet, and came by commandment from God to bring him back; thus imposing upon him by speaking lies in the name of the Lord! (Notes, Gen. 3:1—6. Is. 9:13—17. Matt. 4:1—4.) And the man of God perhaps supposed that he might refresh himself at the house of a prophet in Beth-el, though not in the house of an idolater. But as the commandment of God to him had been immediate and express; and he had only this man's own word for it, that he was a prophet, or that the Lord had spoken to him by an angel; his conduct was very criminal, and calculated to weaken the effect of his message upon the consciences of Jeroboam, and his other auditors; and doubtless his judgment was on this occasion bribed by his inclinations.

V. 20—22. As the Lord inspired Balaam, contrary to his intentions, to pronounce blessings, and to utter, though doubtless with the greatest reluctance, prophecies concerning Israel: (Num. 23:7,8. 24:1—13.) so was this prophet constrained to pronounce sentence against the man of God, whom he had seduced into disobedience; and thus to publish the shame of his own most impious imposture, which also implied against himself a far more dreadful doom, except he repented.—The sentence was direct, that the prophet of Judah should not die in peace at home, or be buried in his own sepulchre: but the time and circumstances of his death were not specified.

V. 23—32. The old prophet did not accompany the prophet of Judah, perhaps apprehensive of some divine judgment overtaking him: but some think, that he supplied him with the ass on which he rode, and that he had come on foot. The lion, commissioned by God, slew the prophet, but did not devour his body; and he neither hurt nor frighted away the ass: nay, he behaved so tame-ly, that travellers ventured past him, perhaps at a distance! And even the old prophet ventured, and was allowed without molestation, to take away his body for burial! 'Here is a cluster of miracles; that the lion, contrary to his nature, did not eat the carcass, nor kill the ass, nor meddle with the travellers that passed by, nor with the old prophet and his ass: and that the ass stood so quietly, and was not frighted at the sight of the lion, and betake itself to flight. And more than this, the lion stood by the carcass a long time, till this strange news was carried into the city; ... which made the miracle the more illustrious, and plainly shewed that this did not happen by chance.' Bp. Patrick. All these miraculous circumstances marked the death of the man of God as a divine rebuke for his disobedience, in eating bread at idolatrous Beth-el; and with counteracted the conclusion, which Jeroboam might have been tempted to draw from his oath against the truth of his message, and form a solemn proof, how God abhorred, and would have all his people abhor, this newly instituted worship.—Thus, for one offence, a faithful servant of God was punished with immediate death, being "chastened of the Lord, that he should not be condemned with the world:" whilst the lying prophet, and the idolatrous king, escaped with impunity, being reserved to the punishments of a future state; which were in this instance loudly proclaimed. The old prophet indeed paid respect to the man of God, and expressed his conviction that his predictions would be verified, and a concern about his own bones. But he seems to have shewn no humiliation for his enormous crimes, no tokens of true repentance, no care about his soul: he neither left Beth-el, nor entered a public protest against Jeroboam's idolatry; nor did any thing, which many a hypocrite has not equalled or exceeded, in attempting to buoy up his own presumption, or to impose upon others. Nay, he appears to have been desirous of gratifying his own vanity, and his claim to be considered as a prophet, when he buried the man of God in his own sepulchre, and lamented over him, "Alas, my brother!" He was, however, instrumental in accomplishing the Lord's word: and the prophet of Judah being buried at Beth-el, with a monumental inscription, would tend to keep his prediction in remembrance, and be an abiding protest against the worship of the golden calves.—The man of God from Judah appears to have spoken more prophecies, than are mentioned in the beginning of the chapter: and though the city Samaria was not yet built, the historian calls the cities in that neighborhood, "The cities of Samaria;" in some of which Jeroboam had built high places.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—10.

The Lord often meets sinners in the midst of their crimes, with alarming indications of his displeasure, to shew that "their way is perverse before him."—It requires great fortitude to deliver faithfully the messages of God, especially to those in authority: for a full and plain declaration of his word will certainly exasperate the proud and ungodly of every description, whether profane, superstitious, or hypocritical. But the Lord will bear those out whom he sends, and who simply trust and obey him: and faith in him is sufficient to overcome the fear of man. They who are employed in services of this kind should speak and act decidedly, as men in earnest, calling upon the very inanimate creation to testify, as it were, against the crimes of presumptuous offenders, who will not regard the word of God; in order that a deeper impression may be left upon the minds of their hearers.—The Lord is peculiarly offended with those, who attempt any thing against such intrepid reprovers of sin; and they, who have most insulted his servants, are often brought by affliction to pay court to them, and to desire their prayers. Nor ought this ever to be refused: for by returning good for evil, their severity against men's crimes is proved to be connected with compassionate love for their persons; and in answer to prayer, God often bestows temporal mercies upon impenitent sinners; though, continuing such, they cannot escape the damnation of hell.—Carnal men frequently betray their impenitency under convictions, even by their concessions: they acknowledge the true believer to be the servant of God, but they do not imitate him: they feel the vanity of their own superstitions or worldly idols, but they do not renounce them: they desire the removal of their afflictions, rather than the forgiveness of their sins, or the mortification of their lusts: and they shew kindness or offer presents to the minister who prays for them, while they requite the Lord with base ingratitude.—When persons are living in open sins, and causing others to sin by their influence and authority, the "men of God" should manifest their abhorrence of their crimes, by refusing to accept of any favors from them, and by separating from all intercourse with them. And when those who are in low circumstances act in this manner, with firmness and meekness, and plainly assign the reasons of their conduct; it will be one of the most alarming and convincing warnings, which can possibly be given. Ministers and Christians must often go among ungodly people, but they ought never to make themselves familiar with them; and should shew that they are so uneasy in their company, that none of their temporal good things can bribe them, needlessly to prolong or repeat their visits. In order to this, they must be superior to the love of worldly pleasure and interest, inured to hardship and self-denial, and well acquainted with the commandments of God.—In the mystery of Providence, false religion is permitted to be planted, and to prevail to the deceiving of great multitudes: but the Lord keeps the times and seasons in his own power; he foresees and determines those events, which are most distant and appear most contingent; and he will in his appointed time destroy every species of irreligion or superstition, by one of the house of David, of far nobler name and greater excellency than Josiah.—But the tokens of his displeasure, on the instruments of iniquity, proclaim his awful vengeance upon the sinners themselves: and none will become sacrifices to his justice with deeper detestation and contempt, than hireling ministers, who for filthy lucre have countenanced false religion, to the destruction of the souls of those who blindly followed such blind guides.

V. 11—19.

The cause of God admits of no neutrality. (Note, Matt. 12:29,30.) In times of general apostacy, or increasing infidelity and ungodliness, we are especially called to bear our testimony, without yielding to fear or shame: and if any professed Christian will not confess Christ in this world, Christ will not own him in the day of judgment. But if a reputed prophet, an old prophet, who appeared zealous for the truth, while credit and advantage accrued from it, purchase security by conniving at prevailing abominations, he may justly be suspected of hypocrisy. These are indeed "dumb dogs that cannot bark," when the Lord is robbed of his worship and honor; and are not fit persons to be employed by him, or countenanced by his faithful people. In some cases they are even worse than the active instruments of deception: because they sin against greater light; they more frequently stumble unestablished persons, and bring deeper disgrace upon the truths which they have professed. Such time-servers, however, are often willing to be thought the servants of God by religious people, though ashamed of him among his enemies: and for that purpose, they covertly seek the acquaintance of those ministers who are in reputation for faithfulness, and shew them kindness. But they are the most dangerous, because the most plausible and unsuspected, of all tempters to real Christians, whose candor makes them willing to hope the best of them, to credit their professions, and to return their civilities. Having learned to be silent, when called to defend the truth, they soon learn to forge lies in the name of God, when it can answer their purpose; and, by various specious pretences, they obtain the esteem of the unwary, and abuse their confidence by inveigling them into disobedience: so that tempters of this description often prevail, when the terrors of persecution, and the allurements of preferment, have been resolutely withstood. 'Surely, says the tempted believer, such good men would never propose 'an ill thing! they brought the word of God for it! 'they were so very kind, and could have no interest in it!' But for our own sakes, and for the credit of the gospel, let us all with one consent withdraw from worldly professors of religion, and be upon our guard against them: let them decidedly serve God, or Baal, that we may know what they are; or let us refuse to have any acquaintance with them.

V. 20—34.

Nothing can excuse any act of wilful disobedience: the tempter "hath the greater sin," but the tempted is deeply criminal; and the offences of those who are much honored and employed of God, are of all the most dishonorable to him, as they rivet the prejudices and embolden the blasphemies of his enemies. Such offenders therefore shall by no means escape correction in this world: and perhaps their very tempter shall be employed to denounce, or inflict, the chastisements of the Lord upon them; or in other respects they shall be made very severe and alarming: while the wicked frequently escape, in this life, being "reserved unto the day of judgment to be punished."—The exact obedience of the irrational creatures to their Maker, forms a reproach of man's rebellion: for he can restrain or change the very nature of every creature, to render it subservient to his wise and righteous purposes.—Happy are they, who are habitually ready for death: even if the Lord shall call them hence by some awful rebuke for an incidental transgression; while they are made useful warnings to others, they will be found safe and happy themselves. NOTES.

CHAP. XIV. V. 1—4. In the remainder of the books of the Kings, we have the history of Judah and Israel carried on together, or with continual transitions from one to the other. But the latter part of the second book of Chronicles more fully relates the history of the kings of Judah, and drops that of the kings of Israel, except as connected with the other.—Jeroboam had taken no notice of Ahijah, either while taking possession of the kingdom, or when establishing his idolatrous worship at Dan and Beth-el; being conscious that the prophet would have opposed and condemned his whole conduct. But when his son Abijah was dangerously ill, he wished to know from the prophet, whether he would recover or not: for he was convinced, that more dependence might be placed on his word, than on that of all his priests. But he did not inquire, 'Wherefore the Lord corrected him,' or, 'How he might 'avert his displeasure.' He did not request the prophet's instructions or prayers; or even his directions what to do in order to his son's recovery: he only wished to be relieved from his anxiety, by being informed whether he would or would not recover. (Notes, 2 Kings 1:2. 8:7,8.) Not choosing himself to go to the prophet, fearing his severe reproofs and warnings; and perhaps being unwilling that the people should discover his own private judgment concerning his calves, and their priests; he would not confide the business to any servant, but sent his wife: yet, she must go in disguise, as the wife of a husbandman, with a present suitable to one in that station, to inquire about her son, without informing the prophet of her rank!—Alas! what ideas must he have had of the infinite and omniscient God, that he should expect him to reveal to his prophet, whether the son of this unknown person would recover; without revealing who it was that came to inquire of him!—Ahijah was infirm, and blind with age; and, not being fitted as formerly for active service, he lived retired, and probably much respected, at Shiloh; lamenting doubtless, though he could not prevent, the sin and misery of his people.

Cracknels. (3) נְקֻדִּים : from נָקוֹד punctatus a kind of cake, marked with spots, probably reckoned a delicacy.

V. 5, 6. The Lord previously informed his servant of the whole device, by immediate revelation, and instructed him what message to deliver. The wife of Jeroboam came to the prophet; yet, as he was commissioned to declare to her the purpose of God, he told her, that he "was sent to her with heavy tidings:" and, as she came with dissimulation, and in an assumed garb and character, in order to impose upon him; and as Jerowere before thee: for [r] thou hast gone and made thee other gods, and molten images, [s] to provoke me to anger, and hast [t] cast me behind thy back:

10 Therefore, behold, [u] I will bring evil upon the house of Jeroboam, and will cut off from Jeroboam [x] him that pisseth against the wall, and [y] him that is shut up and left in Israel, and will take away the remnant of the house of Jeroboam, [z] as a man taketh away dung, till it be all gone.

11 Him [a] that dieth of Jeroboam in the city shall the dogs eat; and him that dieth in the field shall the fowls of the air eat: for the LORD hath spoken it.

12 Arise thou therefore, get thee to thine own house: and [b] when thy feet enter into the city, the child shall die.

13 And all Israel [c] shall mourn for him, and bury him: for he only of Jeroboam shall come to the grave, because in him [d] there is found some good thing toward the LORD God of Israel, in the house of Jeroboam.

14 Moreover [e] the LORD shall raise him up a king over Israel, who shall cut off the house of Jeroboam that day: [f] but what? even now.

15 For [g] the LORD shall smite Israel, [h] as a reed is shaken in the water; and he shall [i] root up Israel out of [k] this good land which he gave to their fathers, and [l] shall scatter them beyond the river; [m] because they have made their groves, [n] provoking the LORD to anger.

16 And [o] he shall give Israel up because of the sins of Jeroboam, [p] who did sin, and who made Israel to sin.

boam had apostatized to idolatry; he shewed no manner of respect to her rank, or to that of her husband. (Notes, 21:20. Dan. 5:17.)

V. 7—11. (Notes, 11:29—38.)—Jeroboam intended that his calves, at Dan and Beth-el, should represent the God of Israel, who brought the nation out of the land of Egypt; and would have his subjects to think, that they were worshipping the God of their fathers. (Note, 12:26—29.) But the Lord called them, "other gods, and molten images;" for as he cannot be represented by any similitude, so he abhors all image-worship as the grossest idolatry. The case is precisely the same, as to the worship of images in the church of Rome. (Note, 2 Chr. 11:13—17.) None of the rulers or Judges of Israel had acted so wickedly: Saul, who had been rejected for his rebellion, had not committed open idolatry; much less had he used his authority to promote it. Even Solomon, for whose apostacy the ten tribes had been rent from his son, had not established idolatry by a law, as Jeroboam had done: nor had any thing so atrocious been attempted by Israel, since it became a nation. Such judgments therefore were denounced against Jeroboam's house, as had never before been inflicted: and some of the terms used here occur for the first time. (Marg. Ref. x, y.—Note, 1 Sam. 25:21,22, v. 22.) —By "him that is shut up and left in Israel," may be meant, 'every one who has taken refuge 'in the most fortified cities, and every one that has 'escaped from the more general devastations:' or, in general, all without exception, however secure they might suppose themselves to be; even these would be pursued and cut off. Or, an allusion may be made to those peculiar treasures, which are shut up for security in the safest repositories, and are reserved to the last when all else is spent; and yet they must be parted with, or will be searched out and seized upon. Indeed the house of Jeroboam was become as offensive to the Lord, as dung would be in a man's habitation; and should therefore be taken away till there was none left. Nor should any of his family, save Abijah, be buried, but their dead bodies should be left above ground, till the dogs or the fowls of the air devoured them, to their deeper disgrace and abhorrence. (Notes, 21:21—26. 2 Kings 9:30—37. Jer. 8:1—3.)

Hast cast me, &c. (9) 'Neglecting me and 'my service. For those things we cast be-'hind our backs, which are nothing worth; and 'for which we have no regard, or concern what 'becomes of them.' Bp. Patrick.

V. 12, 13. Abijah was the only person of all the house of Jeroboam, who was well disposed to the worship and service of JEHOVAH: and it is probable, that he had expressed strong disapprobation of his father's idolatry, and a purpose of suppressing it, if he should ever have it in his power. His removal was therefore a heavy judgment upon Israel, who were unworthy of so pious a prince to reign over them: and it was the earnest of the entire destruction of Jeroboam's family, and a sort of preparation for it.—It seems, that Israel, though generally apostate, had some sense of Abijah's worth, and of their loss by his death, and sincerely mourned for him. (18. Note, 2 Chr. 35:25—27.)

V. 14. (Notes, Ex. 9:13—16.)—But what? even now.] That is, 'Do not think that these judgments 'are distant events; but prepare for them, and 'consider what will be the consequence if they 'should come immediately; for they are even now 'at hand.' In two years after Jeroboam's death Baasha utterly extirpated his family. (15:25—30.)—Some, however, interpret the clause to mean, that the desolation of Jeroboam's house should merely be an introduction to still greater calamities on Israel.

V. 15, 16. These verses emphatically predict the enfeebled, distracted state of Israel, by continual usurpations, massacres, and civil wars and the further idolatries into which they were led by their wicked princes, until they were given up finally at the Assyrian captivity.—They were punished for "willingly walking after the commandment" of Jeroboam, to worship the

(19) These chronicles, or words of days, or journals, were the public records of the kingdom, from whence extracts seem to have been made by the inspired writers, with such additions as were suited for instruction. If any one wished further to gratify his curiosity, he was referred to the original records: but these have now long since been buried in oblivion. The same may be said of "The book of the chronicles of the kings of Judah," (29) which were the records of that kingdom, and not that part of holy writ, which we call the Books of Chronicles. (Marg. Ref.—Notes, 11:41. 1 Chr. 29:29,30.)

V. 21. Rehoboam was born one year before David's death: for Solomon reigned only forty years: and having had his education in the best part of his father's reign, he had abundant opportunity of becoming a wiser man than he proved to be. Naamah is supposed to have been the daughter of Shobi, the Ammonite, who was kind to David in Absalom's rebellion; (Note, 2 Sam. 17:27—29.) and Shobi having been proselyted to the religion of Israel, David took his daughter to be the wife of his son Solomon, perhaps out of gratitude for his kindness. David had himself married the daughter of Talmai the king of Geshur; but the character of Absalom, his son by her, should have cautioned him against such marriages. (Notes, 2 Sam. 3:2—5. 13:37—39. 15:—17:) It is very doubtful whether Naamah ever cordially embraced true religion: and as Solomon worshipped the gods of Ammon among the rest, it has been thought, that she at last became one of his seducers. (Note, 3:1. 11:1—8.)

V. 22—24. It was a most extraordinary circumstance, that, after the priests and Levites, and pious persons from Israel, had settled in Judah, (Note, 2 Chr. 11:13—17. 12:1.) Rehoboam and his subjects in general should become more gross idolaters, than the Israelites were. Yet this was actually the case: for they worshipped false gods even more directly than the Israelites; and the groves seem to have been temples erected in shady places, where the most abominable lewdness was practised in honor of their filthy idols. (Marg. Ref.—Notes, 9—11. 12:26—29. Lev. 18:21—30.) Thus they far surpassed all their progenitors in abominable idolatries, and emulated the abominations of the devoted Canaanites.

V. 25—28. It is probable that Shishak was excited by Jeroboam, as well as allured by the prospect of an immense booty, in thus making war against Rehoboam. (Note, 11:40.) If, as some learned men suppose, Shishak was the Sesostris of pagan historians, he was a most powerful and formidable conqueror: and Rehoboam, perhaps intimidated by seeing the hand of God so speedily lifted up against him, seems to have tamely surrendered. (Notes, 2 Chr. 12:1—11.) Thus in less than five years from Solomon's death, the temple was plundered, as well as his royal palaces; and Shishak having seized the booty, appears to have relinquished his conquests in Judah.—Rehoboam replaced the golden shields with others made of brass: and the use which he made of these shews for what purposes those of gold had been designed; and intimates, that he still on some occasions attended the worship of God at his temple. (Notes, 7:2. 10:16,17.)

V. 29. Marg. Ref.—Note, 19.

V. 30. Rehoboam was not allowed to attack Jeroboam, in the beginning of his reign, and we read of no great battles fought between them: yet by mutual incursions, they molested and weakened each other all their days. (Notes, 12:21—24. 15:6,7.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—20.

Parents often suffer and are corrected in the affliction of their children: and on such occasions they should examine their lives, repent of their sins, humble themselves before God, submit to his will, seek help from him, and especially pray that the affliction may be sanctified for the good of their souls. But sinners are more anxious to know the secret purposes of God, than to understand his revealed will and their own duty: and they are often conscious, that their forms are not to be depended on; but are afraid that others should perceive their convictions, and despise them. They secretly reverence the faithful servants of God: and, having found the truth of some of their words, they have an inward persuasion, that the rest also will be verified; except as they flatter themselves with hopes of escaping the miseries denounced against them. They form, indeed, very erroneous judgments both of God and of his servants; yet they would be glad of help or information in times of trouble, did they not fear rebukes and warnings. They therefore, either keep at a distance, or attempt to impose upon faithful ministers, by disguising their real characters, and pretending kindness to them. Indeed the wisest of men may thus be deceived; but God searches every heart, and often unmasks the hypocrite before the world: he more frequently enables his servants to see through their disguises, and to address them in their real, not their assumed characters; and at last he will expose them to universal shame and contempt before the assembled world. 'What then doth it 'avail thee, thou deceiver, to attempt imposing 'upon men? "Why feignest thou thyself to be 'another" person? In vain dost thou expect an 'answer of peace, while thou continuest in sin. 'The ministers of Christ are all sent to thee with 'heavy tidings: thine attempt to impose on them, 'or to bribe them by presents, does but increase 'thy guilt: they will not thus be diverted from giv-'ing thee faithful reproofs and awful warnings; 'and the event will shortly inform thee of the pur-'pose of God concerning thee; the foreknowledge 'of which, would only augment thy misery, ex-'cept thou repent of all thy wickedness, and turn 'to the Lord in uprightness of heart.'—Every providential favor demands a return of grateful obedience, and aggravates future transgression; and thus prosperous sinners accumulate guilt and wrath, with a rapidity proportioned to their abused mercies. (Note, Rom. 2:4—6.)—When men have witnessed, and have even gained by, the wrath of God against the sins of other men, and yet imitate and exceed them in iniquity; they may expect to be visited with more tremendous vengeance: and as they dishonor him by their crimes, he will disgrace them in their punishment.—A man is not indeed affected by the indignity shewn to his dead body, or even by the miseries of his posterity; yet the prospect may torment his mind while he lives: such judgments form a proper emblem of the punishment of the wicked after death; and they strongly express the abhorrence and indignation of God for a warning to others.—Instruments will readily be found, among the depraved sons of men, for the most bloody and savage acts of inhumanity: but the circumstance of their being advanced to power by the providence of God, who over-rules their crimes to the accomplishment of his own righteous purposes, forms no excuse for their ambition and cruelty.—Impenitent sinners often flatter themselves, that threatened judgments are very distant, when they are even at the door; and excuse themselves, because they were persuaded or frighted into compliance.—Awful indeed will be the doom of those who employ their abilities and authority to make others sin; for thousands will for ever execrate some of them, as the causes of their eternal perdition. They however, who yield to temptation, follow bad examples, and obey sinful commands, will provoke the Lord to give them up, and cast them off, unless they deeply repent of their iniquity.—The Lord deals with men according to their habitual character: and he will not mention against the upright believer, who has cordially followed him, those incidental sins of which he has repented, and for which he has patiently borne correction.—To shew the power and sovereignty of his grace, he frequently reserves an individual or two out of the worst of families, in whom there is "some good thing toward the LORD God of Israel." The fruits of his grace he peculiarly delights in, when they flourish from the hearts of the young and the affluent, and of those who are surrounded with contagious examples and instructions. When such young persons are spared, they prove blessings to their families and connexions: but their premature death forebodes awful judgments, and may well be mourned over as a public calamity. But they "are taken away from the evil to come," and their death can never be a loss to themselves.

V. 21—31.

No wonder that they, who live at a distance from the ordinances of God, are hardened in iniquity; when such as are most favored provoke him to jealousy by their crimes, and are uninfluenced by his judgments, mercies, warnings, and promises.—The perpetration of the worst crimes, of the worst of the heathen, in Jerusalem, the city that the Lord had chosen for his temple and worship; and at present in this favored land and city; de monstrates, that nothing can render the heart of fallen man holy, but the special sanctifying grace of the Holy Spirit: on this alone may we depend; for this may we daily pray, in behalf of ourselves and of all around us!—But sin quickly enfeebles, impoverishes, and disgraces the most prosperous nations: and when holiness, the real glory of a religious profession, is gone, all external splendor will follow it, or become worthless. Yet many, who live in gross wickedness, keep up a formal attendance upon divine ordinances, and are pleased with an ostentatious imitation of the usages of better times; which have lost all their intrinsic value, and retain nothing, except the external glitter that amuses weak and carnal minds.—Death still marches his solemn round, and conveys monarchs from their thrones, as well as peasants from their cottages. Happy are they, and they alone, who possess the "lively hope of an incorruptible inheritance," in that world, "where the wicked cease from troubling, and where the weary are at rest!"

NOTES.

CHAP. XV. V. 1—3. (Marg. Ref. a, b. Note, 9.) There is no sufficient ground for the opinion, that Maachah was the daughter of Absalom the son of David. (Marg. Ref. c, d.) She is called "Michaiah the daughter of Uriel," in Chronicles. —His heart was not perfect, &c. (3) Marg. Ref. f. Note, 14.—As Abijam, though a wicked man, was a professed worshipper of JEHOVAH, he is called "the LORD his God." (Note, 2 Chr. 28:5.)

V. 4. Notwithstanding the wickedness of Abijam, and others of David's race; they were for his sake continued as "a lamp in Jerusalem:" (Notes, 11:12,13,34—36, v. 36.) and they were made highly useful, both to establish the civil state of that city, and to maintain the true worship of God in it; when the light of divine truth was extinguished in almost all other places of the earth.

V. 5. Save only, &c.] Many other parts of David's conduct were evidently faulty: but in this instance alone he acted so inconsistently with his profession, in all respects, as otherwise it could scarcely have been conceived, that a truly pious man could have done. (Notes, 2 Sam. 11:) —Those who know the human heart, and the state of a believer in this world of conflict and temptation, will never expect to see in mere man a character and conduct free from blemish and criminality; though they observe many preserved from falling, or from continuing long, under the power of notorious evils. David, however, deeply repented of this part of his conduct; and to the close of his life he shewed himself to be the upright and devoted servant and worshipper of the Lord, and in no instance turned aside to idolatry, or countenanced it in his subjects. (Notes, 11:1—8, conclusion. 1 Chr. 28: 29: Ps. 51:)

V. 6, 7. God vouchsafed to continue the royal authority over Judah in the family of David: yet, instead of ruling over Israel also, as David and Solomon had done, both Rehoboam and Abijam were harassed by perpetual wars with Jeroboam the king of Israel. Rehoboam left this unnatural war, after it had lasted all his days, to his son Abijam, who obtained a most decisive victory over Jeroboam, but died soon after. (Notes, 14:30. 2 Chr. 13:3—22.)

V. 9. Abijam began to reign during the eighteenth year of Jeroboam; he reigned through his nineteenth year, and he died before the close of his twentieth, when Asa succeeded him. Thus Abijam is said, according to the Hebrew idiom, to have reigned "three years," in the same manner as Christ is said to have risen after "three days." Thus also Nadab began to reign in the second year of Asa, and reigned two years: yet Baasha succeeded him in the third year of Asa. (28) This is the way, in which the computation of the years between the two kingdoms may be made to coincide: for, in the numerous successions in the kingdom of Israel, the same year is frequently twice reckoned; both to him who reigned in its commencement, and to him who succeeded before the close of it.

V. 10—13. Maachah was Asa's grandmother, but probably his own mother was dead, and Maachah had brought him up: (Notes, 1—3. 2 Chr. 11:18—23.) he however deprived her of authority, and removed her from court, for her idolatry, which he entirely suppressed.—The words translated, "from being queen," may be rendered, from the queen, namely, lest Maachah should seduce Asa's queen also into idolatry.—Idols. (12) גִּלּוּלִים. *Dungy gods. V. 14. Was perfect, &c.] This may be opposed to the external good behavior, and the insincere and divided heart, of hypocrites; and may signify, that Asa was cordially devoted to the service and worship of God all his days; and that his sins arose from infirmity, not from presumptuous, deliberate wickedness. (Notes, 5,17—24. 2 Chr. 16: Ps. 19:12—14.) But some explain it to mean no more, than that he never turned aside from the worship of God to idolatry, as Solomon had done.—He had not, however, zeal and resolution enough to suppress the high places, on which the people sacrificed to the Lord, instead of coming to the temple; though he destroyed the idols out of the land. (Notes, 3:2—4.)

V. 15. It seems that Abijam, in his war with Jeroboam, had made some vow of dedicating the spoil to God, which he did not live to perform. But Asa fulfilled it, as well as a similar vow of his own. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Lev. 27:28,29. 2 Chr. 14:9—15.)

V. 16—22. (25—31.) The conduct of Asa evidently arose from unbelief, and was very criminal in itself. It was wholly wrong to tempt Ben-hadad to "break his league" with the king of Israel; and still worse to hire him to it with the consecrated treasures of the temple: and the calamities and miseries brought by Ben-hadad's invasions on the inhabitants of the cities in the northern part of the land, were very great. This occurred in the latter years of Asa's reign.—Baasha's policy was not unlike the impious devices of Jeroboam: (Note, 12:26—29.) but God could have turned it into foolishness, without Asa opposing it by a policy not more justifiable. (Notes, 2 Chr. 16:1—10.)

(16:3,4. 21:22—24.) Baasha, however, only sought to secure himself in the kingdom by this cruelty, and therefore he imitated Jeroboam in his idolatry and other impieties. (34. Notes, 16:2—7.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—15.

Even a superficial acquaintance with the divine law may enable us to perceive evident defects in the conduct of eminent believers; and man's natural enmity to God and his servants disposes him to delight in severely animadverting on them: yet if the habitual conduct of the righteous, towards God and man, be impartially contrasted with that of unbelievers, the difference is very visible, and they appear to be of another spirit, and far more excellent than their neighbors. But when the secret desires and good works of the righteous, and the secret evils of the hearts and lives of ungodly men, shall be made manifest at the day of judgment; the glory of the divine justice and mercy will be displayed to the whole world, in the allotment of their everlasting portion of happiness or misery. (Note, Mal. 3:13—18.) The general conduct of the Lord's servants may therefore be held forth as an example for imitation: and numbers are blessed on their account, both while they live, and after they are gone to their rest. But alas! even children, who have been favored and spared for their parents' sake, often forsake their righteous ways, and but few, especially in superior stations, or among kings and rulers, have hitherto served God in uprightness of heart. He has, however, still taken care of his cause; while those, who ought to have been serviceable to it, have perished in their sins: and the Son of David will continue a Light to his church, to establish it in truth and righteousness, to the end of time, and for ever. (Note, Rev. 21:22—27.)—It is happy for nations, when wicked rulers are speedily removed; and when the righteous come in their stead, and are long preserved, "to do that which is right in the eyes of the LORD."—Those who would please him, and promote reformation, must prefer his glory to the reputation of every friend or relative: nay, they must oppose the crimes even of their own parents, though this may seem a reflection upon the memory of the deceased, or a slight put upon the characters of the living. Nor may any age, sex, or relative tie, induce such as are intrusted with authority, to allow those to possess power or influence, who abuse it to the dishonor of God, and to promote idolatry, superstition, or ungodliness; and in every situation our duty to him must have the precedency over all other duties. (Notes, Matt. 10:37—39. Luke 14:25—27.) How absurd then is it, to be satisfied with a religion, merely because our fathers professed it! for indeed that reason, if allowed to be valid, would generally prove that men ought to continue in idolatry, superstition, and immorality. (Note and P. O. 1 Pet. 1:17—21.)—Every reformation upon earth has hitherto been defective: the utmost attainment of fallen man has been an upright and persevering endeavor to glorify God; and this meets with his merciful acceptance, by faith in Jesus Christ.

CHAP. XVI.

Jehu the prophet predicts the ruin of Baasha's family, 1—4. Baasha dies, and is succeeded by his son Elah, 5—7. Zimri slays Elah, succeeds him, and fulfils Jehu's prophecy, 8—14. Omri usurps the kingdom, and besieges Zimri in Tirzah, who burns himself in the palace, 15—20. Tibni opposes Omri, who prevails against him, 21, 22. Omri builds Samaria, reigns very wickedly, dies, and is succeeded by Ahab, 23—28. Ahab's excessive wickedness and idolatry, as instigated by his wife Jezebel, 29—33. Joshua's curse on him that should rebuild Jericho, is fulfilled on Hiel, 34.

THEN the word of the LORD came to [a] Jehu the son of [b] Hanani against Baasha, saying,

2 Forasmuch as [c] I exalted thee out of the dust, and made thee prince over my people Israel, and [d] thou hast walked in the way of Jeroboam, and [e] hast made my people Israel to sin, to provoke me to anger with their sins;

3 Behold, I will take away the posterity of Baasha, and the posterity of his house; and [f] will make thy house like the house of Jeroboam the son of Nebat.

4 Him that dieth of Baasha in the city [g] shall the dogs eat; and him that dieth of his in the field shall the fowls of the air eat.

5 Now [h] the rest of the acts of Baasha, and what he did, and his might, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Israel?

6 So [i] Baasha slept with his fathers, and was buried in Tirzah: and [j] Elah his son reigned in his stead.

7 And also by [k] the hand of the prophet Jehu the son of Hanani came the word of the LORD against Baasha, and against his house, even for all the evil that he did in the sight of the LORD, in provoking him to anger [l] with the work of his hands, in being like the house of Jeroboam; and [m] because he killed him.

8 ¶ In the twenty and sixth year of Asa king of Judah, began Elah the son of Baasha to reign over Israel in Tirzah, two years.

9 And his servant Zimri, captain of half his chariots, [n] conspired against him, as he was in Tirzah, [o] drinking himself drunk in the house of Arza, * steward of his house in Tirzah.

V. 16—34.

Even true believers find it very difficult in times of urgent danger, "to trust in the LORD with all their heart, and not to lean to their own understanding:" and unbelief proportionably makes way for carnal policy. This has often induced Christians to call in the help of the enemies of God, in their contests with their brethren; to spend that time and substance to obtain their favor, which ought to have been devoted to the Lord's service; and to tempt others to behave deceitfully or cruelly. Such evils have frequently disgraced religious disputes: the victories thus acquired have weakened the common cause, and ended in shame and bitterness: and some, who once shone bright in the meridian of the church, have been thus covered with a dark cloud toward the close of their days. May God help us "to follow after peace, and those things, wherewith one may edify another;" that our "path may shine more and more bright unto the perfect day!"—But after all, how much happier are those who are connected with godly people, than such as have their lot cast among the profane and wicked! (Note, 16:21,22.)—Wretched is it for others, but most so for themselves, when children inherit the vices, with the estates, of their wicked parents: their temporal calamities may arise from the sins of their fathers; but "the wrath to come" will be the recompense of their own crimes.—Ungodly men execute the just judgment of God upon each other, whilst gratifying their own ambition, avarice, or revenge; and at the same time they ripen for severer vengeance, by imitating the sins of those whom they have supplanted.—Many suffer, and many are induced to commit iniquity, by such rulers and usurpers. But in the midst of all these enormities, and this apparent confusion, the Lord is carrying on his universal plan: and when it shall be fully completed, all rational and holy creatures, and all the company of redeemed sinners, will perceive, admire, and adore the glorious justice, wisdom, truth, and mercy, displayed in every part of it, through all the ages of eternity.

NOTES.

CHAP. XVI. V. 1. Hanani, the father of Jehu, was a prophet, as well as his son. (Note, 2 Chr. 16:7—10.) Jehu was a young man at this time, and he continued for many years employed by the Lord, and useful to his people. (Notes, 2 Chr. 19:2. 20:31—34.)—Thus a succession of prophets was raised up in the nation of Israel, through every generation, till the advent of Christ approached. (Preface to Malachi.)

V. 2. The conduct of Baasha, in conspiring against Nadab, and murdering him and Jeroboam's family, was highly criminal. But the success of his conspiracy, and his advancement from a very low condition, to the throne of Israel, were from the Lord; whose benefits aggravated the guilt of his subsequent idolatry and wickedness. (Note, 2 Sam. 12:8.)—God acknowledged Israel as his people, notwithstanding their apostacy, because they professed themselves his worshippers: because there were many believers in the land; and because he intended to maintain religion among them, and not utterly to cast them off. This also was an aggravation of Baasha's sin: that being, by Providence, made prince over the Lord's people, he employed his authority in causing them to sin against him.

V. 3—6. (Notes, 14:5—14.) Baasha was not slain, but died and was buried; Jeroboam also died: but the threatenings were executed on his whole family and posterity.

I will take away. (3) מבעיר: I will consume as by fire.

V. 7. It is likely, that Jehu was sent from Judah, of which kingdom he seems to have been,

12 Thus did Zimri destroy all the house of Baasha, [t] according to the word of the LORD, which he spake against Baasha [†] by Jehu the prophet;

God had not commanded him to do this, though he had predicted that it should be done. Baasha was actuated by his own ambition and other selfish passions; and therefore deserved punishment, though he fulfilled the righteous purposes of God. (Notes, 2 Kings 10: 29—31. Is. 10:5—15. Hos. 1:4,5. Acts 2:22—24.)

V. 8—14. Baasha began to reign in the third year of Asa; and he reigned twenty-four years; yet he died, and was succeeded by Elah, in the twenty-sixth year of Asa. Thus, it is evident, that a part of the third year of Asa, after Baasha came to the throne, is calculated as a whole year. (Note, 15:9.) In like manner Elah, who began to reign in the twenty-sixth year of Asa, and was killed in the twenty-seventh, is said to have reigned two years, that is, a part of two years.—The sentence, denounced against the house of Baasha greatly resembles that denounced against Jeroboam and his family: and both Jeroboam and Baasha died in peace; while Nadab and Elah, their sons, were slain within two years, and the posterity of each of them was entirely and ignominiously extirpated! But Baasha's friends likewise were involved in the same ruin: and Zimri executed the sentence of the prophet with great rapidity; though he meant not so.—Drunk. (9) Marg. Ref. o.

V. 15. The death of Nadab had before prevented the prosecution of the siege of Gibbethon: (15:27,28.) and it was the second time interrupted by the murder of Elah, who staid at home to indulge himself while his army was besieging that city.—Gibbethon lay in the lot of Dan, but it was given to the Levites. (Josh. 19:44. 21:23.) The Philistines, however, had got possession of it, during the distractions which prevailed in Israel.

V. 17—19. The army, which besieged Gibbethon, having made their commander Omri king, by a military election; and Omri having left the siege of Gibbethon, to make war against Zimri in Tirzah; Zimri, finding his cause desperate, afraid of falling alive into the hands of his enemies, and perhaps envying his competitor the possession of that palace and those riches which he had coveted, burnt himself, with the palace and all its treasures. He was driven to this extremity, and left to this desperation, by the righteous judgment of God, for his sins: as in the space of seven days he had murdered all the posterity and relations of Baasha; and had manifested his determination to support the worship of the golden calves. (Note, 2 Kings 9:30—37.)

V. 21, 22. The army, encamped before Gibbethon, chose Omri, their commander, king: but it seems either that some of them were afterwards disgusted by him; or, that the principal persons, who were absent, disapproved of this measure, and set up Tibni against him.—As the war lasted six years, (Note, 23.) numbers no doubt were cut off on both sides, before the contest ended with the death of Tibni.

So Tibni, &c. (22) How much is contained in this concise sentence! and similar contests con tinually terminate in the same manner. It is an epitome especially of the history of civil wars.

V. 23. Twelve, &c.] Twelve years elapsed between the death of Zimri and that of Omri; namely from the beginning of the twenty-seventh, to the end of the thirty-eighth year of Asa's reign. But probably, half that time had been spent in civil wars, between Omri and Tibni; and the thirty-first year of Asa was nearly concluded, when Omri obtained the undisputed possession of the throne; from which time he reigned six complete years.—Thus, whilst Israel was torn to pieces by intestine commotions, conspiracies, massacres; and the succession of one usurper to another, who were all monsters of iniquity, and all destroyed the families, friends, and adherents of the murdered king; Judah was quietly governed by one pious prince, who began to reign in the days of Jeroboam, survived Nadab, Baasha, Elah, Zimri, and Omri, and lived till the fourth year of Ahab. The revolt of Israel therefore proved to be mainly their own loss. (Note, 12:16.)

V. 24. It is probable, that the burning of the palace at Tirzah, by Zimri, induced Omri to this measure.—It is conjectured that Shemer sold this estate at a low price, upon condition of having the city, to be built on it, called by his name. From this city the whole surrounding country was called Samaria, or Shomeron: and sometimes the whole kingdom of the ten tribes is thus called, after Samaria became the capital city. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 30—33. Omri had done worse than all that had been before him, and probably had enforced the worship of the golden calves with greater strictness and severity: (25,26.) but it seemed a light thing to Ahab to tread in his steps, or in those of Jeroboam; (Note, Ez. 16:44—47.) for, without any political inducement, he proceeded to still grosser idolatries. He had a rooted enmity to the worship of JEHOVAH, and to every thing which related to it; and he married Jezebel, a zealous and furious worshipper of Baal, on purpose, as it seems, to have her counsel and assistance in supplanting the worship of the Lord, and even of the golden calves; and in establishing that of Baal throughout the land.

Ethbaal, &c. (31) 'Called in profane writers 'Ithobalus.' Bp. Patrick. His name was taken from the idol, which he worshipped.

An altar for Baal, &c. (32) Jeroboam and his successors professed to consider the golden calves, as representatives of the God of Israel. (Note, 12:26—29.) But Ahab more directly and expressly worshipped other gods. (Notes, 2 Kings 10:18—28.)—A grove. (33) Marg. Ref. y. Notes, 2 Kings 17:16. 21:3.

V. 34. (Note, Josh. 6:26.) Four hundred and forty years had passed, since this word had been spoken; and the exact accomplishment of it, after so long a period, was a solemn warning to the people, to expect the fulfilment of all the curses denounced against them, in case of their idolatry, by Moses and Joshua. (Notes, Deut. 4:25—28 Josh. 23:13—16.)—This account illustrates the daring spirit of rebellion against God, which prevailed in those wretched times. Hiel, inured to idolatry at Beth-el, set the curse of God at defiance: and, though his eldest son died when he laid the foundation of Jericho, he scorned to be intimidated, or to desist from his undertaking; till, when he completed the work, his youngest son died also; and the rest of his children, as it is supposed, in the intermediate space of time.

CHAP. XVII.

Elijah foretels to Ahab a long and excessive drought; and is sent by God to the brook Cherith, and fed by ravens, 1—7. He is afterwards sent to Zarephath, and sustained by a widow woman, whose barrel of meal and cruse of oil do not fail, 8—16. Her son dies, but is restored to life in answer to Elijah's prayer, whom she fully believes to be sent by God, 17—24.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—14.

We do not well understand the rules, and plans of wisdom, justice, truth, and mercy, by which God governs nations and individuals; (Note, Ps. 97:2.) yet we may draw general instructive conclusions from this history. Frequently the Lord warns before he punishes: and they, who are not induced to repentance, are rendered more inexcusable in their wickedness. By whatever means men are advanced to authority; their exaltation is from the Lord, they are bound to use it in his service, and are liable to severe punishment for the abuse of it: yet they must also give an account to God, for the crimes committed in order to obtain the dangerous pre-eminence. The same observations hold good in respect of wealth, and every other temporal distinction.—God is greatly displeased with those who in any way tempt others to commit iniquity: but he is especially provoked by those, who seduce his professing people to apostacy, or true believers to conceal or disgrace their profession: persecutors, therefore, will be answerable for all the sins, to which they tempt men by the dread of punishment, as well as for all the injustice which they commit, and the blood which they shed.—Those who follow the examples of such as have been awfully punished for their sins, may expect to be overtaken with similar vengeance: and many very wicked men have been men of might and renown, have built cities, and perpetuated their memories in the annals of history; but they have no name in the book of life, and stand condemned in the word of God.—The impunity of the principal culprits, while their children, relatives, or helpers suffer for their crimes, loudly declares the approaching day of judgment, and the more exact discrimination of characters, and distribution of rewards and punishments, which shall then take place.—No crime more degrades and exposes a man than drunkenness: and they who sit down with the intention of "drinking themselves drunk," or are persuaded to do so, should recollect how easily they may be murdered in such a state; in how many ways they may be hurried before the tribunal of God; and what an awful thing it would be, to meet their Judge in such a situation. And when rulers and great men spend their time in intemperate indulgence, instead of attending to the duties of their station, it bodes ill to the public and to themselves. (Notes, Esth. 3:12—15. Prov. 31:4—7. Ec. 10:16—19.)

V. 15—34.

Wicked men accomplish the purposes of God without intending it; and their injustice and cruelty towards each other display his righteousness, while they illustrate the desperate wickedness of the heart of man.—When they are hurried on by their vile passions, and have got the power into their hands, they often perpetrate much wickedness in a little time: and thus they speedily fill up their measure, and hasten the vengeance of God upon themselves. Whether they destroy themselves, or are murdered by others, the ruin is brought upon them by sinning against the Lord: even in death they frequently shew the predominancy of their pride, envy, and malice; and thus are driven away into the eternal world, not only under condemnation as sinners, but under the domineering power of most diabolical dispositions, being "vessels of wrath fitted for destruction." From such a death, good Lord, deliver us!—In all cases the triumphing of the ungodly is short; and for the wickedness of nations many are their princes. When tyrants hastily succeed one another, with massacres, conspiracies, and civil wars; and when every one is worse than all that went before him; we may be sure that the Lord has a controversy with the people for their sins: and they are loudly called to repentance and reformation. Indeed, those who forsake God, will generally be left to plague one another: they, who seek not rest in his service, will always be unsettled and uneasy; and when his professed people quarrel with each other, their enemies will always be gainers.—Intermarriages with daring offenders greatly embolden men's minds in wickedness, and hurry them on to the greatest excesses.—The progress of iniquity must be from bad to worse; it seems a light thing to notorious sinners to walk in the steps of their predecessors; and they are often ambitious of distinguishing themselves, and of expressing their enmity and contempt of God, in ways before unheard of. Hence so many newly invented oaths, blasphemies, superstitions, and species of false religion; as well as new refinements in licentiousness and immorality.—When princes set the example of rebellion against God, their subjects will often ambitiously emulate them, and thus ungodliness becomes a test of loyalty, and a kind of fashionable accomplishment: nor will any warnings daunt the stout spirits of presumptuous sinners, till wrath come upon them to the uttermost. But they, who despise the denunciations of God's word, will certainly know his truth in them by their own dreadful experience.

NOTES.

CHAP. XVII. V. 1. The most illustrious prophet Elijah was raised up, in the reign of the most wicked among the kings of Israel: and he is brought to our notice in a very abrupt manner. Nothing is recorded either of his parentage, education, or previous manner of life. He is called "the Tishbite:" but it is not agreed, whether this title was taken from the place where he lived; or given him because he was the reformer of Israel: for the word may signify a converter. He was of the inhabitants of Gilead, beyond Jordan; but we know not of which tribe. His name signifies, The LORD my God is He. This might imply that JEHOVAH, the true God, would stand by him in the perilous services to which he was called, in opposing the worship of false gods.—It may be supposed, that Elijah had previously warned Ahab to forsake his idolatry, and that he had treated his message with contempt: at length therefore, he declared, and confirmed it with a solemn oath by the LORD God of Israel, before whom he stood, (as his servant acting by his authority,) that there should be neither rain nor dew for years, but according to his word; that is, until he came again, and foretold its coming, and prayed for it. The expression, "As the LORD God of Israel liveth,"

3 Get thee hence, and turn thee eastward, and [e] hide thyself by the brook Cherith, that is before Jordan.

4 And it shall be, that thou shalt drink of the brook; and [f] I have commanded the ravens to feed thee there.

5 So he went and [g] did according unto the word of the LORD: for he went and dwelt by the brook Cherith, that is before Jordan.

6 And [h] the ravens brought him bread and flesh in the morning, and bread and flesh in the evening; and he drank of the brook.

7 And it came to pass, * after a while, that [i] the brook dried up, because there had been no rain in the land.

[Practical Observations.]

8 ¶ And [k] the word of the LORD came unto him, saying,

9 Arise, get thee to [l] Zarephath, [m] which belongeth to Zidon, and dwell there: behold, I have commanded a [n] widow-woman there to sustain thee.

10 So he arose, and went to Zarephath: and when he came to the gate of the city, behold, the widow-woman was there gathering of sticks: and he called to her, and said, [o] Fetch me, I pray thee, a little water in a vessel, that I may drink.

intimated that the idols of the heathen were lifeless stocks, and could not help their worshippers.—The duration of this drought was three years and a half; and the effects must have been inexpressibly calamitous. (Marg. Ref. c.) One whole year, without rain or dew, would afflict this land, more terribly than it can be conceived: but in much less than three years and a half nearly all the cattle must be destroyed, and most of the inhabitants would be either dead or migrated into other countries. Yet the bulk of Israel continued mad upon their idols, throughout this most tremendous calamity! It was sent in answer to the prophet's prayer, which probably he offered in Ahab's hearing: and the judgment was intended to be a demonstration, that Baal could not defend his worshippers against the indignation of JEHOVAH. The glory of God and the interests of true religion were therefore so greatly concerned in this decision, which was needful in order to prevent the utter apostacy and rejection of Israel, that the prophet might present this petition in wise zeal, and true benevolence; and doubtless he was immediately instructed by the Lord to do so. The benefit of the calamity would abundantly outweigh the miseries: for though many were hardened, yet doubtless numbers were eventually brought to repentance, and made to embrace and continue stedfast in the service of the true God. (Note, Jam. 5:16—18.)

V. 2, 3. Elijah was commanded to conceal himself, not only to avoid the persecuting rage of Ahab instigated by Jezebel, but as an additional judgment upon the Israelites. The Lord did not intend to shorten the term of the calamity, and he would not have his servant pray for it and be denied. (Notes, Jer. 14:10—12. 15:1.) He was pleased therefore to send him out of the way, that he might not be solicited and refuse: and all this time the people were deprived of the benefit of Elijah's example and instructions. Thus he was excluded from society and usefulness: but he doubtless was engaged in heavenly contemplation and communion with God; and in prayers for the reformation of his people, and for their being turned unto the Lord, though not for the present removal of the famine.—The brook Cherith ran into the river Jordan; (5) but it seems the place was so retired, and the prophet kept so close, that neither friends nor foes knew where he was. (Note, 18:10.)

V. 4—6. Elijah was a very extraordinary person, and every circumstance relating to him was rendered equally extraordinary, in order to excite the attention of a thoughtless and hardened generation. Ravens, being birds of prey, were far more likely to take away the food of those who had any, than to bring bread and flesh to the prophet in his destitute situation: but the command, or miraculous power of God, suspended their natural instinct, and made them act directly contrary to it. (Note, 1 Sam. 6:10—16.) It is useless and presumptuous to inquire whence they procured the bread and flesh, or how the food was prepared? He, who commanded them to feed his servant, had ten thousand ways of enabling them to fulfil his word. Thus Elijah was sufficiently provided for, when numbers were starving: and the consolations of the Lord would render him contented with his solitude and sustenance.—Some have objected that ravens, being unclean birds, would pollute the food which they brought: but this arises from a mistake. The flesh of unclean animals might not be eaten; but the touch of them when living, communicated no ceremonial uncleanness, either to food, or any other thing: for asses and camels were also unclean; yet in constant use, for carrying provisions, as well as for other purposes. (Note, Lev. 11:31.)

V. 7. Elijah seems to have continued in this situation about a year: the natural supply of water which came by common Providence failed because of the dry weather; but the miraculous supply of food, which was ensured to him by promise, failed not. (Note, 10—16.)

V. 9. (Marg. Ref. l.) This woman was of Gentile extraction, a Zidonian, of the same nation with Jezebel the patroness of the worship of Baal: (16:31.) yet she had become acquainted with the God of Israel, and probably was a spiritual worshipper of him, when the nation of Israel was in general lapsed to idolatry. (Note, Matt. 15:21—24.) That ravens first, and then a poor widow-woman, a Gentile, should be employed to feed God's prophet, in preference to any of the Israelites, was a severe reflection upon that people: and Elijah's being sent to Zarephath, rather than to any other city, or any poor distressed widows, of Israel, was an illustration of God's sovereignty, and a pre-intimation of the calling of the Gentiles. (Note, Luke 4:23—30.)—As the Lord commands his creatures, according to their natures, and capacities; perhaps this poor widow had received some pre-intimation of Elijah's coming, and a command to entertain him, nothing doubting.

he called to her, and said, Bring me, I pray thee, [q] a morsel of bread in thine hand.

12 And she said, [r] As the LORD thy God liveth, I have not a cake, [s] but an handful of meal in a barrel, and a little oil in a cruse: and, behold, I am gathering two sticks, that I may go in and dress it for me and my son, [t] that we may eat it and die.

13 And Elijah said unto her, [u] Fear not; go and do as thou hast said: but [v] make me thereof a little cake [x] first, and bring it unto me, and after make for thee and for thy son.

14 For [y] thus saith the LORD God of Israel, [z] The barrel of meal shall not waste, neither shall the cruse of oil fail, until the day that the LORD * sendeth rain upon the earth.

15 And she went and [a] did according to the saying of Elijah: and she, and he, and her house, did eat † many days.

16 And [b] the barrel of meal wasted not, neither did the cruse of oil fail, [c] according to the word of the LORD, which he spake ‡ by Elijah.

[Practical Observations.]

17 ¶ And it came to pass after these things, that [d] the son of the woman, the mistress of the house, fell sick: and his sickness was so sore, [e] that there was no breath left in him.

18 And she said unto Elijah, [f] What have I to do with thee, [g] O thou man of God? [h] art thou come unto me to call my sin to remembrance, and to slay my son?

19 And he said unto her, Give me thy son. And he took him out of her bosom, and carried him up [i] into a loft, where he abode, and laid him upon his own bed.

V. 10—16. The effects of the famine, in the and of Israel, were severely felt at Zidon also, nd probably in all the adjacent countries; Judah perhaps being excepted. The poor woman vas gathering sticks for fuel, when addressed by he prophet, who probably knew by a divine inimation that she was the person appointed to ntertain him. Notwithstanding her distress, nd the scarcity that prevailed, she readily comlied with the request of a stranger to fetch him little water. But when he craved a morsel of read also, she called "the LORD his God" to witness, that she had none, but was going to preare her very last provision; and then had nothng to look for, but death by hunger, for herself nd her son. It must be supposed, that she knew Elijah to be an Israelite by his appearance and ttire: (Note, Num. 15:38—40.) and he had perhaps declared himself the servant of JEHOVAH, nd asked her for bread and water in his name; nd, for his sake, she would have been ready to elp him, if it had been in her power. Moreover, he doubtless perceived something venerable in is aspect, which prepossessed her in his favor: o that when he required her, "in the name of he LORD," to make him a cake first, (which, in er circumstances, was surely one of the hardest ommands that ever was given!) promising her hat her scanty supply should not fail; her faith urmounted all difficulties and silenced all objeons: she believed his words, and did as she was irected, and so "became heir of the righteousess that is by faith." (Note, Heb. 11:7.) Thus aving "entertained a prophet, in the name of a rophet, she received a prophet's reward." Note, Matt. 10:40—42.) For above two years he and her son, as well as Elijah, were fed miaculously with sufficient provision; and she lived y faith, in temporal as well as in spiritual things! For though the margin renders the words "many days," a full year; it is evident from the continuance of the famine, that Elijah abode with her a much longer time.

V. 17. Perhaps the woman's son died suddenly, before the prophet had opportunity to pray for his recovery; because the Lord intended a greater display of his own glory, and a more distinguishing favor to the woman, than the sparing of his life: or, he was left to die without any miraculous interposition, to try her faith. (Notes, Mark 5:35—43. John 11:1—10.)

V. 18. This woman had doubtless heard, that the drought had come upon Israel in answer to Elijah's prayer; and perhaps she supposed that her affliction had come upon her in the same way. She seems to have venerated his sanctity, and to have had a trembling consciousness of her own sinfulness. Perhaps the death of her son brought her former worship of Baal to remembrance; or she thought she was not worthy of the company of the prophet, or had not duly profited by it. But her mind was much agitated; and her words imply a mixture of unbelief and impatience, as well as self-abasement and a sense of guilt. And she seems to have thought the presence of the man of God was dangerous, and hastened divine judgments upon her. (Luke 5:8. Notes, 1 Sam. 16:4. 2 Sam. 6:8,9.) Yet by her own account the prophet's presence had prolonged her son's life, and her own also. (12) 'Their sins are said to be "called to re-'membrance" by God, when he punishes them.' Bp. Patrick. (Note, Ez. 21:23.)

V. 20. Elijah himself could not understand the mystery of this dispensation; but greatly wondered that the Lord should bring evil on the woman, who entertained him for his sake, as well as on those who rejected both God and his prophet; and he expostulated with God on the occasion.

V. 21, 22. The external conduct of Elijah denoted the earnestness of his desires, and the greatness of his expectations, of the child's restoration to life. He would, if possible, have communicated of his own life to him, or have concurred, if any thing had been in his power, to his revival.—The expression, "Let this child's soul come into him again," not only intimates the prophet's certainty that he was really dead; but it marks the distinction between the rational soul and the earthly body to be as real, as that between the house and its inhabitant: for both the prophet and the historian, "speaking as they were moved by the Holy Ghost," used proper language. No one had yet, as far as we know, been raised from the dead, and perhaps no prayer to this effect had ever before been offered. (Notes, Gen. 22:5,6. John 9:27—34. Rom. 4:18—22. Heb. 11:17—19.) Elijah's petition was no doubt directed by immediate inspiration.

V. 24. The woman had been strongly tempted to unbelief: but she had now got the victory, and was more confirmed and assured in faith and hope than ever. She had doubted, but now she knew, that Elijah was the servant of God, and she fully expected the performance of all his declarations.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—7.

The Lord will have witnesses to his truth in the worst of times: and as he does not immediately cast off his professing people, when they renounce his service; he employs various methods to convince them of their sin, and to bring them to repentance.—Great intrepidity and resolution are necessary for those, who are employed to stop the torrent of prevailing iniquity, or to declare the message of God before persecuting tyrants: but he who sends them, will qualify them, and bear them out in these arduous and perilous services.—Impenitent sinners have eventually the prayers even of the most benevolent ministers of God against them: because, if they go on in sin, his glory requires their destruction; and every servant of the Lord seeks His glory, in preference to every other consideration. But, if the severest temporal judgments be made effectual to bring men to serve God, they will have great cause to bless him for sending them.—Fruitful seasons, and abundance of provisions for the body, are valuable mercies; and famine is a most tremendous evil: yet the liberty and opportunity of attending on divine ordinances are more valuable advantages; and a famine of the word of God is above all to be dreaded and deprecated. (Note, Am. 8:11—14.)—The Lord will provide for those who serve him faithfully: and he will teach them to be satisfied with their provisions though mean, and their situation though outwardly uncomfortable. Indeed, if we consider how much better we are dealt with than we deserve, and how many are destitute of the necessaries of life; we shall see abundant reason to be contented with food and raiment, of the meanest and coarsest kind: nor ought we ever to desire luxuries or superfluities.—It is the greatest trial to the faithful and zealous minister, to be taken off from his work and usefulness, and excluded from the society of pious persons: yet, if thus circumstanced, he should submit to it as his trial, wait the Lord's time to be employed again, seek his comfort from communion with him, and diligently prepare for future service. And if the trying dispensation did not arise from his own misconduct, the loss will not eventually be his, but that of those from whom he is banished; being frequently a judgment upon them for not profiting by former advantages, while they enjoy them.—All nature shall sooner change its course, than one of God's promises fail. We do not indeed now expect literally to be fed by ravens: but the Lord often employs selfish men, contrary to their nature and general character, to support his indigent people, or to maintain his cause by their property. The thanks, in this case, are due to the Lord, who sends the provisions by such instruments: but we should pray, that, as he has counteracted their natural disposition in this instance, he would be pleased also to change them by his renewing grace.

V. 8—16.

The Lord does not generally provide long together for his people in the same way, or by the same means; lest they should rest in them, and expect help from them. But he permits one resource to fail: and when he has left them nothing but his own promise to trust to, he unexpectedly opens another resource; that they may admire the manifold riches of his wisdom, as well as adore his power, truth, and love. Frequently he raises supplies from those, who themselves need relief: "the abundance of their joy, and their deep poverty, abound unto the riches of their liberality:" (Notes, 2 Cor. 8:1—5. 9:8—11.) and he supplies their wants, whilst they are encouraged to communicate of their pittance to others still more destitute. Indeed our faith must be proved by various trials in providence, as well as by our obedience to the commandments of God; and must also grow strong by exercise. But when it is genuine, it "worketh by love" of him and of his people: and the desire of doing good to others for his sake, united to a firm expectation that his promises will be performed, produces obedience even to hard commands, notwithstanding all the

CHAP. XVIII.

Elijah is sent to meet Ahab, 1, 2. Ahab and pious Obadiah go different ways, to search the land for pasture, 3—6. Elijah meets Obadiah and sends him to call Ahab, 7—16. Ahab, at Elijah's word, convenes Israel, with the prophets of Baal, at Carmel, 17—20. Elijah proposes to decide, whether JEHOVAH or Baal be God, by proving which would answer by fire, 21—24. Baal's prophets invoke him in vain, 25—29. Elijah prepares a sacrifice, causes much water to be poured upon it, and calls on JEHOVAH, who answers by fire consuming the altar with the sacrifice; the people are convinced that JEHOVAH is God; and at Elijah's word they slay Baal's prophets, 30—40. Elijah gives Ahab notice of abundant rain, which he obtains by prayer; and then he runs before Ahab's chariot to Jezreel, 41—46.

reluctancy and objections of our distrustful, selfish hearts.—They, who come unto God and walk with him, must simply trust him, nay, venture their lives and souls upon his word, and at his command renounce every present interest, in expectation of future and more enduring advantages. Genuine faith encourages men to do this; while unbelief dislikes the security, holds fast things present, and for the perishing pleasures and interests of this world foregoes the blessings of eternal salvation. But none can be losers in the event by giving up secular advantages, at the Lord's command; and what is expended upon his people, for his sake, shall be recompensed as if given to himself: so that the self-denial and liberality of faith, are the best means of excluding the fear of future want, of providing for our families, and of placing out our substance at the highest interest, and upon the most unexceptionable security. In these funds the poor may obtain property, as well as the rich; for a morsel of bread, or a cup of water, will go as far, when it is all that we can give, as thousands of gold and silver when they can be spared. (Notes, Prov. 19:17. Mark 2:41—44. Luke 6:27—36. 2 Cor. 8:10—15.)

V. 17—24.

Neither faith nor obedience, however exemplary, can exclude afflictions and death: and under severe and unexpected trials it is extremely difficult to avoid impatience, and to exercise unshaken confidence and unreserved submission. But the Lord bears with our infirmities and compassionates our sorrows: and we should pity and readily help each other, thus bearing one another's burdens, according to the example and command of Christ. (Note, Gal. 6:1—5.) Though we cannot work miracles for the relief of the afflicted, we may afford much assistance to them; and in all cases we may pray in faith, that the Lord would sanctify and make up every loss, by the influences and consolations of his Spirit.—The Lord by afflictions "calls our sins to remembrance;" and this should quiet our spirits, and lead us to self-examination and repentance, that we may obtain forgiveness from him: and thus all shall issue in fresh increase of faith, assurance of hope, and joyful expectation of every promised good.—Thus when Jesus comes to communicate his blessings, the convinced trembling sinner often mistakes the meaning of those humbling instructions which he imparts, and those trials which he employs; he is ready to suspect, that he means to "bring his sins to remembrance," and to slay all his hopes; and is tempted to say, "What have I to do with thee?" But the loving Savior pities and bears with such trembling souls: and when he has turned their mourning into joy, by reviving their hopes and forgiving their sins; they admire his love and power, and know assuredly that his word is truth; and expect every future good in reliance on his promise, and obedience to his holy will.

NOTES.

CHAP. XVIII. V. 1, 2. The third year.] That is, in the third year of Elijah's abode at Zarephath. For it is probable, that he continued there above two years; which, added to a year at the brook Cherith, completed three years and a half: for this was the time which the drought lasted. Some, however, think he remained just two years at Zarephath; and that the six months preceded his retiring to the brook Cherith. (Luke 4:25.)—He seems to have been little noticed at Zarephath, notwithstanding the miracles which he wrought.—Elijah could not but deeply lament the miseries of Israel: but he did not leave his retirement, till the Lord ordered him to go to Ahab, previously to his sending "rain upon the land," as it should be rendered; for the land of Israel was especially intended.—The extremity of the famine rendered it the more dangerous for him to shew himself to the enraged tyrant: but at this time he was raised above all fear of what flesh could do unto him. (Note, 19:2.)

V. 3. Obadiah signifies The servant of the LORD. Obadiah was so faithful and useful a servant to Ahab, that even Jezebel's instigation did not induce him to dismiss or injure him: and he was, it seems, willing to retain his place, though perilous and difficult, while he could with a safe conscience; as he might do some good, and prevent some evil, by continuing in it: and, though he witnessed abominable idolatries and iniquities, we may be sure, that he was not required to bow his knee unto Baal. (Notes, Dan. 2:46—49. 3:1—7.) "He feared the LORD greatly." Obadiah, at a distance from religious ordinances, and surrounded by the worst of examples and by strong temptations, was eminently pious and devoted to God! (Notes, Gen. 22:11,12. Ec. 12:11—14.)

V. 4. Wicked as Ahab was, he does not seem to have directly persecuted, except as instigated by Jezebel, until she had long trained him up to it.—After the institution of the worship of the golden calves, the priests and Levites, and pious Israelites, had generally left their possessions, and gone up to the tribe of Judah, and united with it: (Note, 2 Chr. 11:13—17.) but the Lord had mercifully raised up prophets, who promoted true religion throughout the land. It is probable, that they were brought up in the schools of the prophets, first instituted by Samuel, which still remained, and were made very serviceable by the blessing of God upon them. (Notes, 1 Sam. 10:5,6. 2

5 And Ahab said unto Obadiah, Go into the land, unto all fountains of water, and unto all brooks: peradventure we may find [m] grass to save the horses and mules alive, that * we lose not all the beasts.

6 So they divided the land between them, to pass throughout it: [n] Ahab went one way by himself, and Obadiah went another way by himself.

7 And as Obadiah [o] was in the way, behold, Elijah met him: and [p] he knew him, and [q] fell on his face, and said, Art thou that [r] my lord Elijah?

8 And he answered him, I am: go, tell [s] thy lord, Behold, Elijah is here.

9 And he said, [t] What have I sinned, that thou wouldest deliver thy servant into the hand of Ahab, to slay me?

10 As [u] the LORD thy God liveth, there is no nation or kingdom, [x] whither my lord hath not sent to seek thee: and when they said, He is not there; he took an oath of the kingdom and nation, that [y] they found thee not.

11 And now thou sayest, [z] Go, tell thy lord, Behold, Elijah is here.

12 And it shall come to pass, as soon as I am gone from thee, that [a] the spirit of the LORD shall carry thee whither I know not; and so when I come and tell Ahab, and he cannot find thee, [b] he shall slay me: but I thy servant fear the LORD [c] from my youth.

13 Was it not told my lord [d] what I did when Jezebel slew the prophets of the LORD, how I hid an hundred men of the LORD's prophets by fifty in a cave, and fed them with bread and water?

14 And now thou sayest, Go, tell thy lord, Behold, Elijah is here: and he shall slay me.

15 And Elijah said, [e] As the LORD [f] of hosts liveth, [g] before whom I stand, I will surely shew myself unto him to-day.

16 So Obadiah went to meet Ahab, and told him: and Ahab went to meet Elijah.

Kings 2:3. 4:1.) These prophets did not statedly offer sacrifices; nor did they require the people to go up to Jerusalem to keep the solemn feasts: but they taught them the essentials of true religion, either in private houses, or in such assemblies as were afterwards called synagogues. Thus they worshipped the God of Israel towards, though not at, the temple and Jerusalem: (Note, 8:28—30.) and there seems to have been considerable numbers of believers dispersed through the tribes. Against these prophets, who were the chief opposers of idolatry, (and doubtless against the seminaries where they were educated,) Jezebel's rage was directed, and she cut off many of them: but Obadiah found means to conceal and preserve a hundred persons, through the persecution, supporting them in their concealment at his own expense. And, though his conduct was no secret, he was still protected and employed by Ahab!—Bread and water.] That is, with the necessaries of life; "food convenient for them." (13:8,9,16,22.)

V. 5, 6. Horses, &c. (5) Ahab seems to have been more anxious about the animals, which ministered to his luxury, than about those, which were more immediately necessary to his poor subjects, as sheep, goats, and oxen. That the king in person should go upon such a business, could only be the effect of the extremity of the famine. Probably most of the cattle, and many of the people, had perished: yet no mention was made of returning to the Lord with repentance, fasting, and prayer! (Notes, Joel 1:13—15. 2:15—17.) Had God never sent to them, it seems they would never have applied to him to terminate the calamity, whatever extremities they had endured: but he had a remnant, for whose sake he was pleased to return to them in mercy; and the glory of his name required, that he should not yet give up Israel to utter destruction. (Notes, 19:18. Judg. 3:9,10,14 Rom. 11:1—6.)

V. 7. Elijah was a poor man, and greatly hated in Ahab's court, in which Obadiah held considerable preferment: yet Obadiah, by word and deed, testified the greatest reverence for him, as to an honored and distinguished superior; because he was a man of God, and of eminent sanctity! (Note, Matt. 8:8,9.)

V. 10. No nation, &c.] That is, in the neighborhood, among Ahab's dependents and allies.—He was so earnest to discover Elijah, that he caused the rulers of those countries, in which he possessed sufficient influence, to swear that they did not conceal him, and perhaps that they would deliver him up if they found him: yet Elijah lived part of the time in Ahab's own kingdom; and the rest, in the country of Zidon, whence Jezebel came!—As Ahab offered no violence to the prophet when he met him, it has been thought, that he did not seek him from a vindictive motive, but in expectation that he would terminate the terrible drought which he had denounced: as if the prophet could do it without the Lord, to whom no application was made! It is, however, probable, that resentment and enmity greatly influenced Ahab; and that Jezebel intended to cut off Elijah also, if he could have been found, at least, unless he consented to remove the famine. But Ahab was overawed by his unexpected appearance and intrepidity, and did not dare to proceed against him (Note, 2 Kings 1:15,16.)

V. 12—16. Obadiah, even in Ahab's family, had from his youth been a devoted and zealous worshipper of JEHOVAH! He introduced the mention of his good services, not in ostentation, but as an evidence of his sincerity. He well knew, how exceedingly Ahab would be offended, saw Elijah, that Ahab said unto him, Art thou [h] he that troubleth Israel?

18 And he answered, [i] I have not troubled Israel; but thou, and thy father's house, [k] in that ye have forsaken the commandments of the LORD, and thou hast followed Baalim.

19 Now therefore send, and gather to me all Israel unto [l] mount Carmel, and [m] the prophets of Baal four hundred and fifty, and the [n] prophets of the groves four hundred, which [o] eat at Jezebel's table.

20 So Ahab sent unto all the children of Israel, and gathered the prophets together unto mount Carmel.

21 And Elijah came unto all the people, and said, [p] How long halt ye between two * opinions? [q] if the LORD be God, follow him: but if Baal, then follow him. And the people [r] answered him not a word.

22 Then said Elijah unto the people, I, even [s] I only, remain a prophet of the LORD; but [t] Baal's prophets are four hundred and fifty men.

23 Let them therefore give us two bullocks; and let them choose one bullock for themselves, and cut it in pieces, and lay it on wood, and put no fire under: and I will dress the other bullock, and lay it on wood, and put no fire under:

if he thought himself imposed upon, in a matter which he had so much at heart; and perhaps he concluded that Ahab would be enraged, because he had not apprehended the prophet, when he had the opportunity. He could not suppose that Elijah intended to venture into the presence of his indignant enemy, and he was persuaded, that the Spirit of the Lord could readily convey away his servant, and again conceal him: (Marg. Ref. a. Notes, 2 Kings 2:16—18. Ez. 8:2—4.) and therefore he desired to be excused from so perilous a service. But when the prophet solemnly assured him, that he did not mean to elude Ahab, but to shew himself unto him on that very day, he willingly went to inform him.

V. 17. Elijah was the grand opposer of Ahab's plan, for bringing Israel to unite in the worship of Baal, and so making, according to his views, a quiet settlement of the religion of the nation: and in this sense he perhaps deemed him "a troubler of Israel." (Notes, Acts 16:19—24. 17:5—9.)—But it is not easy to determine what his precise sentiments were concerning the drought, which came at Elijah's word. If he thought, that it was caused and continued by the prophet's power, and could be removed at his will; and that he troubled Israel in not removing it; he must have been disposed to credit any absurdity, rather than believe that JEHOVAH was the Author of it, and that it could be removed only by his power; or allow that it was his interest and duty to return to the worship of God which he had forsaken. (Notes, Ex. 7:22,23. 1 Sam. 6:2—9.)

V. 18—20. "Baalim" is the plural number: for Ahab worshipped many false gods.—The boldness and authority, with which the prophet charged him as the "troubler of Israel," intimidated the king, who had not his prompter Jezebel with him. He was afraid perhaps, that Elijah would execute judgment upon him at once, if he further offended him: (Note, 1 Sam. 15:26—28.) he found the prophet would not be induced by menaces and reproaches to comply with his requirements; and he was willing to be upon terms with him, in hopes that he would procure the removal of the famine: and thus he was induced to consent to the demand which he made.—It seems that an altar had been built upon mount Carmel, and sacrifices offered on it to JEHOVAH; (30) but the worship of Baal had supplanted even this irregular service of the one living and true God.—There were no less than four hundred and fifty prophets, or priests, of Baal, and four hundred of the groves (האשרה), who are supposed to have been devoted to a Zidonian goddess. These four hundred especially were entertained at Jezebel's table, as a kind of domestic chaplains; though no doubt they too were at times sent, at her expense, into every part of the land, to promote idolatry among the inhabitants.—Elijah, however, desired to confront the whole company before all the people of Israel, and to bring the matter in dispute to a fair decision. But when JEHOVAH had called for drought, and neither Baal nor any other of their idols could send rain, the matter was already sufficiently plain to every reasonable person. (Note, Jer. 14:19—22.)

Troubled, &c. (18) 'They trouble a nation, 'who break the laws of God, not they that defend 'them.' Bp. Patrick. (Note, Josh. 7:25,26.)

Mount Carmel. (19) In the lot of Asher towards the north of the land. (Josh. 19:26.) Not Carmel, in the lot of Judah. (1 Sam. 25:2.)

V. 21. Halt ye, &c.] The metaphor is taken from the unequal walk of a lame person. Many of the people wavered in judgment, and varied in practice; sometimes worshipping JEHOVAH, at others worshipping Baal, as their convictions or interests prevailed: or they endeavored to form a coalition between them, of which Baal's prophets would probably admit; but to which JEHOVAH would never consent. Elijah therefore called upon them without further delay to determine, whether of the two was the self-existent and eternal God, the Creator, Governor, and Judge of the world; and to follow him alone, whether JEHOVAH or Baal were he, as there could be no more than one supreme God. (Notes, Deut. 6:4,5. Josh 24:14, 15. Matt. 6:24.) To this the people answered nothing: being unwilling to confess their guilt, or offend the king, and not being able to object to what he said, or being ashamed of their conduct.

V. 22. Elijah was the only prophet of JEHOVAH, who stood forth at this time; the prophets whom Obadiah preserved, and the prophets of whom we afterwards read, being driven into concealment. (Marg. Ref.—Notes, 4. 19:10.)

V. 23. Elijah conceded the preference, in every external circumstance, to the prophets of Baal, that the victory might be the more conspicuous, to the glory of God alone: for doubtless he

LORD: and the God that [u] answereth by fire, let him be God. And all the people answered [v] and said, * It is well spoken.

25 And Elijah said unto the prophets of Baal, Choose you one bullock for yourselves, and dress it first; for ye are many; and call on the name of your gods, but put no fire under.

26 And they took the bullock, which was given them, and they dressed it, and called on the name of Baal [x] from morning even until noon, saying, O Baal, † hear us. But there was [y] no voice, nor any that ‡ answered. And they § leaped upon the altar which was made.

27 And it came to pass at noon, that [z] Elijah mocked them, and said, Cry ‖ aloud; for he is a god; either ¶ he is talking, or he  is pursuing, or he is in a journey, or peradventure he sleepeth, and [a] must be awaked.

28 And they cried aloud, and [b] cut themselves after their manner with knives and lancets, till †† the blood gushed out upon them.

29 And it came to pass, when mid-day was past, and they [c] prophesied until the time of the ‡‡ offering of the evening sacrifice, that there was [d] neither voice, nor any to answer, nor any §§ that regarded.

[Practical Observations.]

30 And Elijah said unto all the people, Come near unto me. And all the people came near unto him. And [e] he repaired the altar of the LORD that was broken down.

31 And Elijah took [f] twelve stones, according to the number of the tribes of the sons of Jacob, unto whom the word of the LORD came, [g] saying, Israel shall be thy name:

32 And [h] with the stones he built an altar [i] in the name of the LORD: and he made a trench about the altar, as great as would contain two measures of seed.

33 And [j] he put the wood in order, and cut the bullock in pieces, and laid him on the wood, and said, [k] Fill four barrels with water, and pour it on the burnt-sacrifice, and on the wood.

34 And he said, [l] Do it the second time. And they did it the second time. And he said, Do it the third time. And they did it the third time.

acted by direction from heaven. (Note, Ex. 8:9—11.)

V. 24. The proposal was so reasonable, that the people at once agreed to it: and thus Baal's prophets were constrained either to comply; or to allow Baal to be an impotent idol, and JEHOVAH the only true God.—By fire.] Marg. Ref. u. Notes, Gen. 4:3—5. Lev. 9:24.

V. 26. O Baal, &c.] (Note, Matt. 6:7,8.) The continued cry of four hundred and fifty prophets, during several hours, with an unmeaning repetition of the words, "O Baal, hear us," with great vehemence, must have formed a most dissonant vociferation; whilst, like frantic men, they leaped upon, or round, or up and down, at the altar and sacrifice, according to the worship which they were accustomed to perform!—Some think that the sun was worshipped under the name Baal; and that this encouraged his prophets to expect an answer by fire.

V. 27—29. Elijah mocked, or ridiculed, the false prophets, and ironically observed, that Baal, no doubt, had a very great number of engagements, and therefore was taken up, or at a distance, or asleep; and therefore his votaries would not succeed without greater earnestness and louder cries! (Notes, 22:15. Ec. 11:9,10. Is. 44:12—17. Mark 7:9.)—The absurdity of the idolatry was worthy of being exposed to contempt before the people, though the effects of it were most deplorable.—It seems however, that they thought Elijah in earnest in his counsel, and determined to follow it: and, still more to please the demon whom they worshipped as god, they cut their flesh, and mingled their own blood with that of their sacrifice, according to the frequent custom of idolaters! But all their efforts proved in vain: though they continued to prophesy, after their manner, till three hours after noon day had passed, shewing tokens of being under a supernatural influence; and, as many suppose, singing hymns to Baal along with their absurd and frantic devotions.—No doubt Satan could have sent fire, and would if he might have done it; but he can do nothing except what is permitted to him. (Notes, Job 1:9—12,16. Matt. 8:30—32.)—The evening sacrifice. (29) About three hours before sun-set. (Note, 36,37.)

V. 30. The prophet gave his competitors full opportunity of making a fair trial, what Baal could do: but when they had prophesied till almost evening, it was time that he should proceed to shew them what JEHOVAH could and would do; and therefore he interrupted them by addressing the people. (Note, 18—20.)

V. 31. (Note, Ex. 20:21—25.) Elijah meant by this exact number of stones, selected to repair, or rebuild, the altar of JEHOVAH which had gone to decay, to shew, that the descendants of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, notwithstanding divisions and apostacies, were yet the people of JEHOVAH, and formed one church and nation; and that they ought to unite in worshipping the God of their fathers, and in opposing all idolatry. The reference to the name of "Israel" given to Jacob, when he wrestled with God and prevailed.

35 And the water * ran round about the altar, and he filled [m] the trench also with water.

36 And it came to pass, [n] at the time of the offering of the evening sacrifice, that Elijah the prophet came near, and said, [o] LORD God of Abraham, Isaac, and of Israel, [p] let it be known this day that thou art God in Israel, and that I am thy servant, [q] and that I have done all these things at thy word.

37 [r] Hear me, O LORD, hear me, that this people may know that thou art the LORD God, and that [s] thou hast turned their heart back again.

38 [t] Then the [u] fire of the LORD fell, and consumed the burnt-sacrifice, and the wood, and the stones, and the dust, and licked up the water that was in the trench.

39 And when all the people saw it, [v] they fell on their faces: and they said, [x] The LORD, he is the God: the LORD, he is the God.

40 And Elijah said unto them, † Take the prophets of Baal; let not one of them escape. And they took them: and Elijah brought them down to the brook [y] Kishon, and [z] slew them there.

41 ¶ And Elijah said unto Ahab, [a] Get thee up, eat and drink; for there is ‡ a sound of [b] abundance of rain.

42 So Ahab went up to eat and to drink. And [c] Elijah went up to the top of Carmel: and [d] he cast himself down was suited to shame the people from their idol-worship, as well as to encourage Elijah's own heart in prayer. (Marg. Ref.—Notes, Gen. 32:24 —30.)

V. 32—35. By forming this trench, or trough, round about the altar, and both filling it with water, and pouring a great quantity upon the altar, the burnt-offering, and the wood, Elijah excluded all possibility of suspicion that any fire had been concealed, and thus rendered the divine interposition more illustrious and convincing.

V. 36, 37. The prophet, by the time chosen for his sacrifice and prayer, avowed his communion with the worshippers of God, at his temple in Jerusalem: and he briefly, but most fervently, besought JEHOVAH on this important occasion to interpose; that the people might be convinced that he was indeed the true God, the God of their fathers, and of the nation; and also that all, which he, his servant, had done, concerning the famine especially, had been in obedience to God's command. This would greatly display the glory of his name, and promote the highest good of his people; since they might henceforth know and worship him, as that God, who had thus turned their hearts back from idolatry unto himself, to worship and serve him alone, and to render the whole praise and glory unto his name. Holy zeal and intelligent good-will to Israel suggested every word, and rendered the prayer peculiarly emphatical; especially when contrasted with the unmeaning and long continued vociferations of Baal's prophets. (Note, 26.)

V. 38, 39. It is probable, that this fire appeared as lightning, though no cloud was seen: or it was called "the fire of God," from its extraordinary force, and its unparalleled effects; and especially as sent to plead the cause of God, and to expose his worthless rival to contempt. (Marg. Ref. t, u.)—It would be more perspicuous and emphatical to retain the original word, JEHOVAH, in the translation of this chapter. The people were convinced, for the time, that JEHOVAH was the only true God; and they prostrated themselves before him with terror, mixed with reverence. —It has been observed, that the fire on this occasion consumed the altar as well as the sacrifice, because oblations were not there statedly to be offered; but at the dedication of the temple, the sacrifice was consumed, and the altar continued. (Notes, Lev. 9:24. 2 Chr. 7: 1—3.)

V. 40. Baal's prophets, being Israelites, idolaters, and teachers of idolatry in Israel, were condemned by the prophet to die, according to the express injunctions of the Mosaic law. (Notes, Deut. 13:1—5. 13:20—22.) The people, under the present impression, readily concurred with Elijah, and Ahab did not interpose to prevent the execution of the condemned criminals.—"The four hundred prophets of the groves," were not present on this occasion. Some learned men think, that they were Zidonians, not Israelites; and therefore their attendance had not been insisted on, or they had refused to come.

V. 41. (Note, 17:1.) The idolatry of Israel having received a powerful check, and its chief abettors the prophets of Baal having suffered condign punishment; the prophet declared to Ahab the approach of deliverance from that awful calamity, under which the land had so long groaned; and encouraged him to go and cheerfully refresh himself. (Note, 2 Sam. 21:9—14.) It is probable, that the prophet, who throughout this chapter spake and acted with heroical intrepidity, "being strong in faith, giving glory to God;" was too sanguine in his expectations of subsequent success. Ahab's concurrence in all that he had done, or connivance at it, and the people's decided language and conduct, led him to conclude, that he should, as it were, carry all before him, till the worship of Baal was wholly extirpated. This unwarranted expectation made way for the timid conduct and depressed state of mind, which is recorded in the next chapter. (Notes, 19:1—14.) In this chapter he shews what man may be and do, when God upholds and strengthens him; in the next what the same man is, when left to himself. This appears, in the case of Elijah, as clearly, though in a far different way, as in the case of Samson; (Notes, Judg. 16:) and in many things it resembles what St. Paul records of himself. (Notes, 2 Cor. 12: 1—10.)

upon the earth, and [e] put his face between his knees,

43 And said to his servant, [f] Go up now, look toward the sea. And he went up, and looked, and said, There is nothing. And he said, [g] Go again seven times.

44 And it came to pass at the seventh time, that he said, Behold, there ariseth [h] a little cloud out of the sea, like a man's hand. And he said, Go up, say unto Ahab, * Prepare thy chariot, and get thee down, that the rain stop thee not.

45 And it came to pass in the mean while, that the heaven was black with clouds and wind, and [i] there was a great rain. [j] And Ahab rode, and went to Jezreel.

V. 42. In a posture of most profound reverence, the prophet sought of God, by earnest prayer, the blessing of rain upon the parched land; and he continued his fervent supplications in the same place and posture, without having taken any refreshment, as it appears, till he had sensible evidence that his prayer was granted. (Note, Jam. 5:16—18.)

V. 43—45. As Elijah had no servant before he went to Zarephath; some have thought, that the widow's son, whom he had raised to life, had accompanied him. But it appears from the narrative, that he was not old enough; and it is more likely, that a young person from the schools of the prophets attended Elijah on this occasion.—The prophet spake as one assured, that his prayer would immediately be answered; and like Jacob of old, he seemed determined not to let the Lord go until he had blessed him. The servant was therefore ordered to go seven times; and he saw no appearance till the last time, when a very small cloud arose, out of the Mediterranean sea, which was near to mount Carmel: this the prophet knew to be the forerunner of the desired blessing, and he sent word to Ahab accordingly.—The rain was no doubt equal to the necessities of the land; and it formed another demonstration that JEHOVAH was the only true God. (Note, 18—20.)

Went up, &c. (43) The transactions of the day are supposed to have taken place, at the foot of the mount, near some rivulet, whence water could still be procured. From this place, Ahab went up, to some tent or residence to take refreshment; but Elijah went up towards the summit of the mount, where the Mediterranean sea might be clearly seen: yet he sent his servant to some higher crag or eminence to make his observations.

V. 46. The Lord directed and strengthened Elijah, though weak with fasting and fatigue, to shew this respect to Ahab; and to run as a footman before his chariot; in order to convince him, that his severe reproofs were consistent with affection and loyalty in secular matters: nor was the prophet afraid of going to Jezreel, where Jezebel was; though he did not come into her presence. It does not appear, that either Ahab, or his attendants, or the inhabitants of Jezreel, offered him any refreshment, or hospitably entertained him. His reception at least was discouraging.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—16.

The severest judgments will not of themselves humble or change the hearts of sinners; who often grow more hardened under them, even to desperation. The imagined fire of purgatory, therefore, or the real torments of hell, possess no purifying efficacy; and the wicked under the anguish of their sufferings will continually increase in wickedness, and accumulate wrath to all eternity. For nothing, except the atoning blood of Christ, can expiate the guilt of sin; nothing, except the sanctifying Spirit of God, can purge away its pollution: and all other expedients are satanical delusions, to keep men from this one "fountain, which God hath opened for sin and for uncleanness."—The enmity of man's heart against God, expresses itself by persecuting those who bear his image and seek his glory: yet he protects them, until their testimony be finished.—It has been the common lot of his prophets and faithful servants, to be lodged in caves or dens of the earth, and fed with bread and water, (if that could be procured,) while the ministers of Satan have rioted in luxury. (Note, Heb. 11:35—38.) Yet the Lord has had a remnant in all places, where any part of his word has been known, in every age of the world: and notwithstanding errors and irregularities, that spiritual worship, and that repentance, fear, and love of his name, which are the fruits of his Holy Spirit, are accepted through the Redeemer, and by faith in him. Thus the remnant in Israel, when that nation had generally apostatized to idolatry, encourages the hope, that there are true believers known unto God, and reserved to him, in those parts of the Christian church, where the ostensible body is most deformed by superstition and idolatry.—If men of eminent piety were found in Ahab's family, and in Nero's palace, we may conclude that the Spirit of God will keep alive the holy flame which he has kindled, in any situation to which a believer can be called. (Note, Phil. 4:21, 22.) We should therefore be very cautious about leaving, or persuading others to leave, the posts assigned in Providence, however perilous or ensnaring; while they can be maintained without sinful compliances, and while they afford opportunities of doing good.—They, who begin early to serve God, are likely to be eminent in their generation: and those who "fear the LORD greatly," devise various methods of usefulness; for they do not shrink from trouble, danger, or expense, in promoting his cause, or protecting and relieving his oppressed and afflicted servants. Providence indeed has often remarkably preserved those, who have ventured their lives freely in his service, in times of triumphant wickedness; yet, singular activity, prudence, and fidelity in secular concerns, frequently prove the means of their security. (Notes, Dan. 6:3—5.)—Many are careful to prevent the effects of sin upon their temporal interests, whilst they continue by their crimes to augment the fierce wrath of God, which is the cause of all misery: and ungodly rich men are commonly more careful about their own self-indulgence, than to preserve the multitude of the poor from starving. (Notes, Am. 6:3—8. Luke 16:19—21.) But while sinners remain on earth, the Lord will afford them some respite; that his judgments and mercies may concur, either to lead them to repentance, or to display his justice in their condemnation: and national calamities are often retarded or terminated, for the sake of a despised remnant of believers; for if persecutors could extirpate them all, they would open the flood-gates of divine vengeance upon themselves. —The servants of God may, in his cause, boldly face their most powerful enraged enemies; for they dare not touch them when he intimidates their hearts, and cannot when he restrains their hands: (Notes, Matt. 14:3—5. Acts 4:13—22. 5: 26—39.) and such as fear the Lord, however exalted in life, will greatly respect his faithful servants, though poor and hated by all around them. —They, whose situations have long required them to be cautious of giving unnecessary umbrage, are apt to grow too timid, and to apprehend consequences which are not likely to follow: if, however, they be sincere, they will surmount their fears, and join with their more courageous brethren in doing the will of God.

V. 17—29.

The ministers of the Lord have generally been accounted the troublers of nations, nay, even of the church, by ungodly rulers: because they oppose prevailing abuses though sanctioned by authority, and denounce the wrath of God against impenitent sinners. Nay, they have frequently been treated as the authors of those calamities, which have come upon men for persecuting them, and neglecting their warnings! But they are able to refute, and even to retort, such charges, when urged to their faces; and to shew that those who forsake the commandments of the Lord, and teach others to do so, are the real troublers of the world, of the church, and of themselves and their own families: and when this is done with firmness and solemnity, as by the authority of God, it will often cause the proudest sinner to tremble; to desist from present purposes of violence, and to comply with reasonable requirements.—The condescension of the Lord in repeatedly proving the most evident truths, concerning his being, perfections, the divine authority of his word, and the nature of his worship, is as wonderful as the perverseness of men, which requires such repeated demonstrations: but the fundamentals of religion stand on such manifest grounds of reason and sound argument, that they need fear no fair investigation. It is of peculiar importance, that we come to a decision on such subjects; for whilst we waver respecting them, we must be unstable in all our ways. But we should be equally decided in our practice, else our creed, however orthodox, will be received only by a dead faith. If the LORD be God, let us worship him, choose him for our Portion, and devote ourselves to his service: if Jesus be the divine and only Savior, let us come to him, cleave to him, and depend on him alone for every thing: if the Bible be the word of God, let us reverence, study, and receive the whole of it, and submit our understanding to its teaching: and let us no longer endeavor to serve God and Mammon; to reconcile religion and secret sin; or to believe revelation, to accept of salvation, or to give up ourselves to the service of our Redeemer, by halves, or with reserves. This, Satan will be content with, but the LORD abhors it.—The cause of truth is not to be determined by vote, authority, or wealth: one poor prophet or minister for JEHOVAH; hundreds and thousands for Baal, even of those in reputation and favor, and the highest secular or ecclesiastical stations; as well as of those who have possessed wealth and learning, has been a common case! But God will plead his own cause, and that of his witnesses, which will countervail all disadvantages; and his truth is great, and will prevail. In confidence of his support, we may concede every external precedency to our opponents, and boldly stand forth in his cause, without apprehension about the event. It is right, however, to state every thing in so equitable, plain, and convincing a manner, that all may be constrained to say, "It is well spoken," and that the mouths of gainsayers may be stopped.—The absurdities of superstition and false religion might excite our ridicule or mockery, did not their awful effects demand our tears. The example of Elijah, in this instance, must be imitated with great caution, and only on very peculiar and evident occasions.—The service of Satan, whether in the observations of idolatrous worship, or in the practice of immoralities, whilst it promises indulgence to men's lusts, is cruel to their persons, and tends to torment them even in this world.

V. 30—46.

All religious diligence, which is not regulated according to the word of God, as to its grand outlines, however self-denying or plausible, is unavailing: "for he, who gathereth not with" the Savior, "scattereth." (Note, Matt. 12:29,30.) Yet, when it is impracticable for us exactly to come up to the scriptural standard; or when we cannot have personal communion with God's people, in his more solemn ordinances: we must come as near as we can to the one, and shew our fellowship with the other by such expressions as we are capable of: and the Lord will graciously accept our upright intentions, and dispense with the unavoidable irregularity.—Hypocrites expect to be heard for their much or their loud speaking; but a few words uttered in assured faith, and with fervent affections of zeal for the glory of God, and love to the souls of men, or thirstings after the Lord's image and favor, often form "the effectual fervent prayer of the righteous man, which availeth much." Such principles ought to dictate all our prayers, and we should utterly disregard even our own reputation in the judgment of men; except when it is connected with the credit of religion, the conviction of sinners that our cause is that of God, and the establishment of believers in the faith: but for these purposes we should endeavor to obviate every occasion of suspicion, and to be careful that our good be not evil spoken of. —The awful displays of the divine justice and holiness may terrify and convince the sinner; extort many confessions, and dispose him to external acts of obedience, while the impression lasts: but the view of these attributes, harmonizing with mercy, love, and truth, in Christ Jesus, is needful to draw the soul into self-abasement, affiance, and love. Yet the Spirit of God employs both methods, in effecting the conversion of sinners, in order and measure, as he pleases: and in our endeavors for that same blessed purpose, it is generally advisable to inform the understanding and convince the judgment first, and then to address the heart and conscience.—When sinners are deeply impressed with divine truth, they should be earnestly exhorted without delay, to set about those self-denying duties, to which the Savior calls his disciples. —Under the Christian dispensation indeed, we must not destroy the lives of men, even though they have deceived others to idolatrous worship. When, however, false teachers are removed, silenced, or put to shame, it exceedingly promotes the revival of true religion: and after effectual measures for public reformation have been used, we may hope for the merciful removal of public calamities.—Faith perceives things imperceptible to sense, and anticipates future and distant blessings: it therefore excites fervent prayers, in which reverence, humility, importunity, and perseverance are requisite in order to success.—The love

CHAP. XIX.

Ahab shews Jezebel, that Elijah had slain Baal's prophets, and she sends to Elijah, threatening to take away his life, 1, 2. He flees into the wilderness; is weary of living; but being twice strengthened with food brought by an angel, he fasts forty days, and arrives at Horeb, 3—8. There God meets him, preceded by a strong wind, an earthquake, and fire; and, speaking to him in a still small voice, commissions him to anoint Hazael, Jehu, and Elisha, 9—17. Elijah is informed that seven thousand worshippers of JEHOVAH still remain in Israel, 18. Elijah casts his mantle on Elisha, who takes leave of his friends, and follows him, 19—21.

AND [a] Ahab told Jezebel all that Elijah had done, and withal [b] how he had slain all the prophets with the sword.

2 Then Jezebel sent a messenger unto Elijah, saying, [c] So let the gods do to me, and more also, [d] if I make not thy life as the life of one of them by [e] to-morrow about this time.

3 And when he saw that, [f] he arose, and went for his life, and came to [g] Beer-sheba, which belongeth to Judah, and left his servant there.

4 But he himself went a day's journey into the wilderness, and came and [h] sat down under a juniper-tree: and [i] he requested [*] for himself that he might die; and said, It is enough; now, O LORD, take away my life; for I am not [k] better than my fathers.

5 And [l] as he lay and slept under a juniper-tree, behold, then [m] an angel touched him, and said unto him, Arise and eat.

6 And he looked, and, behold, there [n] was a cake baken on the coals, and a cruse of water at his [†] head. And he did eat and drink, and laid him down again.

7 And [o] the angel of the LORD came again the second time, and touched him, and said, Arise and eat: [p] because the journey is too great for thee.

8 And he arose, and did eat and drink, and went [q] in the strength of that meat, of faithful ministers to the persons of sinners should not only be manifest to that God, who in secret hears their affectionate prayers for those, whom they most severely reprove: but they should shew it by every external expression; and be ready to give honor to whom honor on any account is due; and in their private conduct to become the meanest servants to those, whom, speaking in God's name, they "rebuke with all authority." And he will strengthen his people for every exertion and self-denial, to which his commandments and his providence shall call them.

NOTES.

CHAP. XIX. V. 1, 2. (Marg. Ref.) The Lord left this wicked woman, when informed by Ahab of what had been done, to be so intoxicated by rage, that, instead of sending a messenger to apprehend or kill Elijah, she gave him warning and time to make his escape! (Note, Matt. 2:7,8.) Some indeed think, that she was afraid to venture at the same time on the rage of the people, and the miraculous power, which the prophet evidently and undeniably possessed, by attempting to slay him: but contented herself with threatening him, that he might abscond and occasion her no further interruption, or take further measures, against the worship and worshippers of Baal, and the prophets of the groves: (18:19.) while others suppose she had such an opinion of his intrepidity, that she concluded he would certainly wait the event. But her absolute language, and the imprecation upon herself if she failed, seem more like the outrageous effusion of passion, than the effect of deliberation and design. Without reflecting that she might not live till the morrow, or not be able to find Elijah, or to prevail against him; she sware by the gods, that she would put him to death, as if all events were absolutely in her own power! (Notes, 2 Kings 1:10—17. Prov. 27:1. Jam. 4: 13—17.)

V. 3, 4. It seems, that Elijah fled from Jezreel on the very night after the sacrifice, and the fire from heaven, and the abundant rain given in answer to his prayers; and before he had time suitably to refresh himself after the fatigues of the preceding day. Beer-sheba, in the south of Judah, was at a considerable distance from Jezreel, in the lot of Issachar: (Josh. 19:18.) yet he travelled with all speed till he came thither. But there he left his servant, as unable to proceed through weariness: or perhaps he was unwilling to expose him to farther hardship; having, as some think, purposed to end his life in that desolate wilderness, where Israel had wandered forty years.—He had passed through the whole kingdom of Judah, where doubtless pious Jehoshaphat would have welcomed and protected him. But he seems, on this occasion, to have been left to himself for his humiliation; and consequently he was seized with unreasonable terror. Instead of venturing all consequences, assured of the protection of the Almighty; and pushing his advantage, by leading the people to destroy the temple and worship of Baal, and restore the worship of JEHOVAH; he fled from the important service, and impatiently wished and prayed for death! What a contrast to his zeal and intrepidity, as recorded in the preceding chapter! (Notes, 18:40. Num. 11:11 —15. Jon. 1:2,3. 4:1—4,9—11.) Thus the people, left without a leader, and intimidated by his example, would be too much afraid of Jezebel, to reap those decisive advantages from the miracle, and the events recorded in the former chapter, which might have been hoped for.—When Elijah said, "I am no better than my fathers," he seems to have referred to some pre-intimations given him of his translation: but he was willing rather to die, than to live in misery, and to behold, without being able to prevent, the wickedness and ruin of his people: yet he would rather die by the hand of the Lord, than by that of Baal's worshippers, lest they should blaspheme that God whose prophet they had slain

[r] forty days and forty nights, unto [s] Horeb the mount of God.

9 And he came thither [t] unto a cave, and lodged there; and, behold, the word of the LORD came to him, and he said unto him, [u] What doest thou here, Elijah?

[Practical Observations.]

10 And he said, I have been [x] very jealous for the LORD God of hosts: for the children of Israel have forsaken thy covenant, [y] thrown down thine altars, and slain thy prophets with the sword; and I, even [z] I only, am left; and [a] they seek my life, to take it away.

11 And he said, Go forth, and [b] stand upon the mount before the LORD. And, behold, [c] the LORD passed by, [d] and a great and strong wind rent the mountains, and brake in pieces the rocks before the LORD; but the LORD was not in the wind: and after the wind [e] an earthquake; but the LORD was not in the earthquake:

12 And after the earthquake [f] a fire; but the LORD was not in the fire: and after the fire [g] a still small voice.

13 And it was so, when Elijah heard it, that [h] he wrapped his face in his mantle, and went out and stood in the entering in of the cave. And, behold, there came a voice unto him, and said, [i] What doest thou here Elijah?

14 And he said, [k] I have been very jealous for the LORD God of hosts: because the children of Israel have [l] forsaken thy covenant, thrown down thine altars, and slain thy prophets with the sword; and I, even I only, am left; and they seek my life to take it away.

V. 5—8. The Lord intended that Elijah should visit Horeb, where Moses had fastēd forty days and nights; that in him the miracle might be repeated: because as Moses was the lawgiver, so Elijah was in some respects the chief of the prophets. (Note, Matt. 17:3.) God at first miraculously provided his servant with food: (Note, 17:4—6.) and then he supported him without food, or any need or desire of it. (Notes, Ex. 34:28. Matt. 4:3,4.) As mount Horeb was but a few days' journey from Beersheba; the forty days here mentioned seem to include the whole of the time, which passed till his return out of the wilderness.

V. 9. What doest thou, &c.?] Elijah had been secretly guided to mount Horeb, rather than to another place; and probably he sought retirement for meditation and prayer. But this was not at that crisis his proper employment; for he ought by no means, to have fled from the land of Israel, but there to have persevered, without dread of consequences, in promoting the cause of true religion. (Notes, Josh. 7:10—12. Neh. 5:10—14. Acts 4:29—31. 8:1.)

V. 10. The prophet pleaded in his own behalf, that "he had been very jealous for the LORD," having had his glory exceedingly at heart, and having been deeply grieved, and even filled with holy indignation, at Israel's apostacy. This he had long endeavored to prevent; and he had now fled from his work, not through defect of zeal, but for want of encouragement. The whole nation, he thought, had renounced their covenant with JEHOVAH, and had concurred with their rulers in breaking down his altars, which had been erected on the high places; as if they were determined to worship him no more. (18: 30.) The altars, though irregular, on which sacrifices were offered to JEHOVAH alone, are thus distinguished from those, on which the people sacrificed to Baal and other idols, or to the golden calves.—They had also joined in murdering the prophets; so that he stood alone to stem the torrent, and they were all ready to assist Jezebel in putting him to death also. But he supposed matters to be much worse than they really were: for probably several of the hundred prophets, whom Obadiah had protected, were living, and privately attempting to do good with some success. So that he needlessly discouraged himself: and his mind was so much imbittered by his disappointments, that he is said to have "made intercession against Israel." (Marg. Ref.—Notes, 11—17. Rom. 11:1—6.)

V. 11—14. There seems to have been, in this manifestation of God to Elijah, an intended reference to that with which Moses was favored, when the Lord caused his goodness to pass before him; and to the terrific solemnities from mount Sinai, (where Elijah now was,) compared with the mild majesty, in which he communed with Israel from above the mercy-seat. (Notes, Ex. 19:16—25. 33:20—23. 34:5—7.) It was preceded by a vehement wind, rending the mountains and rocks; by an earthquake, still more tremendous; and by a fire, similar perhaps to that which appeared on mount Sinai at the delivery of the law: all these effects were no doubt produced by the ministration of angels. But the Lord made known his more immediate presence, not by these terrors, but by a still small voice; and it is not said, that there was any visible appearance of glory. This intimated that miraculous judgments, and terrifying displays of the Lord's power and indignation, though proper for the destruction or intimidation of his enemies, or to excite attention, were only preparatives for that real good intended for Israel; which must be effected by the energy of his Spirit, accompanying the convincing and persuasive instructions of his word. Elijah had perhaps expected to prevail, as with a high hand, and with continued miracles and judgments: or he had supposed that the desired reformation was to be effected by the interference or sanction of regal authority, or the support of the people at large. Whereas, having gained their attention by the famine, and its gracious removal, in answer to his prayers; by calling for and obtaining fire from heaven to consume the 15 And the LORD said unto him, Go, return on thy way to [m] the wilderness of Damascus; and when thou comest, [n] anoint [o] Hazael to be king over Syria:

16 And [p] Jehu the son of Nimshi shalt thou anoint to be king over Israel: and [q] Elisha the son of Shaphat, of [r] Abel-meholah, shalt thou anoint to be prophet in thy room.

17 And it shall come to pass, that [s] him that escapeth [t] the sword of Hazael shall Jehu slay: and him that escapeth from [u] the sword of Jehu shall [x] Elisha slay.

20 And [e] he left the oxen, and ran after Elijah, and said, [f] Let me, I pray thee, kiss my father and my mother, and then I will follow thee. And he said unto him, [†] Go back again; for what have I done to thee?

21 And he returned back from him, and took a yoke of oxen, and slew them, and [g] boiled their flesh with the instruments of the oxen, and [h] gave unto the people, and they did eat. Then he arose, and went after Elijah, and [i] ministered unto him.

sacrifice, and by the execution of Baal's priests, and by rain, according to his word; he ought to have proceeded to instruct them with meekness and gentleness, "publicly and from house to house," and to have excited others to assist him: and then the Lord would have blessed that "still small voice," for the most important purposes; notwithstanding the persecuting rage of Ahab and Jezebel, and the general apostacy of the people. (Note, 2 Cor. 10:1—6.)—Thus miracles in the first ages of Christianity called men's attention to the preaching of the gospel, which, as a still small voice, was the power of God to salvation to thousands and millions.—Though Elijah shewed tokens of humble adoration on this occasion, the repetition of his answer to the Lord's renewed inquiry, "What doest thou here?" shews, that he did not as yet fully understand the emblematic display: and that he was not properly convinced of his unbelief and sin in fleeing out of the land; or reconciled to going back to his station and employment. He afterwards better understood the Lord's meaning, as it appears from his subsequent conduct.

V. 15—17. As the prophet was ordered to go on the way to the wilderness of Damascus, it seems probable that he went directly towards Syria, and meeting with Hazael anointed him; though this is not recorded. Jehu was afterwards anointed by a prophet sent by Elisha; (Notes, 2 Kings 9:1—10.) and perhaps Elisha was anointed by Elijah, when called to be his successor. Some, however, think the expression is not always to be taken literally; but merely as an intimation, that God would advance the persons spoken of, to the stations assigned, and qualify them for the work to be performed by them. (Ps. 105:15. Is. 45:1.)—Jehu executed vengeance upon Jezebel and Ahab's posterity, and the priests and worshippers of Baal: Hazael through his whole reign wasted and destroyed the people of Israel: and, at Elisha's word, the Lord took vengeance on those, who would not attend to the instructions of his prophets. The order of time, in these judgments, seem not to be exactly marked, but the certainty of the events. (Marg. Ref. s—x.)—God was infinitely more jealous for his own glory, than Elijah could be for it; and he would by no means desert his cause, or suffer his enemies to triumph, as the prophet feared: but, before he proceeded to vengeance, he would gather in his chosen people, and separate a remnant from among the idolaters.

V. 18. The Lord "had reserved for himself" seven thousand Israelites, who had neither bowed their knees to Baal, nor kissed his image, nor in any way been induced to worship him. (Marg. Ref. y—a. Note, Hos. 13:2.) These, though few in comparison, were a considerable number in themselves, and far more than Elijah supposed.—As Ahab and Jezebel aimed to establish the worship of Baal, we may suppose that the golden calves were neglected; and that these persons conscientiously adhered to the worship of JEHOVAH, as the times would admit: they would however, greatly need further instruction and encouragement. Others might be recovered from idolatry; and the rising generation might be rescued from its contagion. So that there was a great deal of useful employment for Elijah, which it was well worth while to accomplish even by living amidst persecutions, perils, and conflicts. (Note, Phil. 1:21—26.) There was also a sufficient reason why the Lord should defer his anger, though provoked to jealousy every day. (Note, Rom. 11:1—6.)

V. 19. This might occur after Elijah's return from the wilderness of Damascus, or in his journey thither.—Elisha was employed in husbandry, and his father seems to have been a man of wealth. Whilst he was employed in his labor, Elijah cast his mantle upon him, which was intended, and understood, as a call to him to follow and attend upon him. (Notes, 2 Kings 2:13,14.)

V. 20, 21. It is probable that Elijah intended to discover, whether Elisha was fully determined to renounce his temporal interests, and to venture persecution as a prophet of the Lord: and to lead him to count his cost ere he engaged. (Notes, Matt. 8:18—22. Luke 14:28—33.) But Elisha's heart was touched by the Holy Spirit, and he was ready to leave all to attend Elijah. He did not ask to wait till the death of his parents, but only to bid them farewell: and, having made a feast for his neighbors of the flesh of the oxen, prepared with their yokes, as the fuel; (in token, that he never meant to return again to that employment;) he followed Elijah, and ministered to him, that under his tuition he might be prepared to succeed him, and in the mean time be a help and comfort to him. (Notes, 2 Kings 3:11,12. Matt. 9:9—13.) —The prophet could now no longer complain, that he was left alone, for the Lord had provided him a companion. (Notes, Ex. 4:14. Matt. 10:1 —4.)—From the ensuing history it appears, that Elijah and Elisha employed themselves, not only in privately instructing the people, but also in founding or superintending seminaries of prophets, in different parts of the land, who might assist them in the work of reformation, and maintain it when they were removed.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—9.

No miracles or judgments can finally stop the fury of persecutors: though they be intimidated for a season, when they have respite, and leisure to confer with one another, they grow desperate in proportion as they have been baffled and mortified. (Notes, Ex. 8:15. 14:5—9. Acts 4:13—22. 5:17—28.) Nay, such diabolic enmity can inhabit the breasts of females, and has sometimes raged in them with peculiar vehemence! (Notes, Matt. 14:3—11.)—Mad passions often defeat their own end, and furious threats prevent the execution of determined malice.—The most eminent believers cannot exercise even those graces, which most distinguish their characters, without the immediate assistance of God: and when in danger of being exalted above measure, they are sometimes left to struggle with temptation without their wonted support. Then the boldest, who before feared no number or power of the adversaries, tremble at the distant prospect of danger; the most zealous are dissatisfied with their employments, and sit down disconsolate and desponding; nay, the most resigned grow fretful, and even pray in a peevish manner; and want to die, not out of longing for heavenly glory, but from weariness of conflicts and tribulations. But it is shameful for a soldier to wish to be absent from his place in the day of battle, or to expect the victory without the peril and the hardship of the conflict. The Lord, however, bears with his faithful servants, notwithstanding their infirmities; and reserves them for every service which he has allotted them, whatever they wish or fear. As all creatures are at his command, those, for whom he engages to provide, can want no good thing; and yet if he pleases he can support them without other means or instruments. (Notes, 17:1—16.) His mercy and power are the same from generation to generation, whether displayed in the same way or not: and he will vouchsafe his gracious presence to his people, into whatever place they are banished. Indeed when they flee from the path of duty, he will meet and rebuke them, but he will not forsake them.

V. 10—14.

No former zeal, boldness, or usefulness, will excuse present neglects: yet we are most apt to boast of what we have been and done, when most remiss in present duty! Disappointments in our too sanguine expectations often sour our tempers, as well as render us discontented: and then we are ready to blame others for our failures, and to be severe in our censures and remarks. The zealous minister often finds this leaven corrupting his services: he is sometimes tempted to think all his labor in vain when he does not see the immediate effect; and to conclude, that he can do no good, because he cannot do all that he hoped for: and when he witnesses much evil in the church, or in that part in which he labors, he often imagines matters to be much worse than they really are. Thus "our hands hang down, and our knees wax feeble;" and we are ingenious in discouraging and disquieting ourselves. But upon reflection, this very experience may explain to us that rebellion of others, which so disconcerts us; and teach us gentleness and long-suffering, without disdaining or despairing of the worst of sinners.—The blessing is from the Lord; and he often works most effectually when proper means are used, with quiet assiduity and perseverance, without any of that bustle and vehemence which excite the public attention. Magistrates should indeed exercise their authority, in promoting true religion, by all hallowed and scriptural means. (Notes, 2 Chr. 17:7—9. 30:12.) But attempts to produce reformation, in either doctrine or worship, by coercive means, and the secular arm, bearing all down before it, like the strong wind, the earthquake, and the fire, in every case promise more than they effect; and even when the magistrate's authority is regulated and limited in a proper manner, in repressing impiety and immorality, and countenancing zealous ministers in their labors, it only makes way for the "still small voice" of the gospel, by means of which the Holy Spirit performs his gracious work upon the heart. (Notes, Is. 42: 1—4. Rom. 1:13—16. 1 Cor. 2:3—5. 2 Cor. 10: 1—6.) And the minister, when deprived of this protection and support, and driven by persecution into obscure corners, may expect great usefulness, by this power accompanying his labors.—The word of God also is indeed "like a fire, and a hammer, that breaketh the rocks in pieces;" and the whole of it should be preached with zealous plainness and faithfulness: but "the ministration of condemnation," and the awful terrors of eternal vengeance, only precede and make way for "the ministration of righteousness," and the sweet gospel of Christ, attended by urgent persuasions, melting expostulations, and tender invitations, in which the Lord chiefly comes to seal our hearts for himself; and without this little will be done.—We shall do well often to imagine, that we hear the Lord inquire, "What doest thou here?" In scenes of worldly dissipation, in trifling company, in riotous feastings, or where unlawful traffic is carrying on, the Christian can have no good answer ready: nor can the minister, if engrossed by needless worldly business, by trifling studies, or by the pursuits of ambition, preferment, pleasure, or reputation, to the neglect of the important duties of his calling. Nay, if we are at home, when we should be in the pulpit; asleep, when we should be at work; or in company, when we should be engaged in prayer and meditation, or reading the Scriptures; such a question must confound us. In short every station has its proper duties, and every portion of time its proper work, and we should frequently call ourselves to account, whether we be in our place and proper employment, as the duty of the season requires.

V. 15—21.

It is not easy to convince men of their faults, and silence their excuses or boastings: and, whilst the Lord encourages his servants under their difficulties, he sends them back to their proper work, ashamed of their timidity and neglect; and then he gives them both helpers and success. He has "a remnant, according to the election of grace," which he reserves to himself, and preserves from prevailing abominations. For their conversion and edification he waits and provides: in the mean time impenitent sinners ripen for vengeance: and he raises up instruments to execute it upon them, from whom they shall by no means escape: for the word of God, spoken by his despised ministers, ensures their destruction, more than the sword of any enemy. Nor will he ever desert his own cause, however it seems to be run down: he will furnish men for the most perilous and self-denying ser-

CHAP. XX.

Ben-hadad king of Syria, not satisfied with Ahab's submission, leads a powerful army against Samaria, and wars against it, 1—12. Ahab, directed by a prophet, gains a complete victory over him, 13—21. A prophet warns Ahab to prepare for another assault, 22. The Syrians come again, the next year, with very great preparations; and are opposed by a very small company, 23—27. A prophet assures Ahab of victory, because the Syrians thought JEHOVAH the God of the hills, but not of the valleys, 28. The Syrians are smitten with immense slaughter, and Ben-hadad flees and hides himself, 29, 30. He submissively sues to Ahab, who makes a league with him, 31—34. A prophet, by a parable, leads Ahab to condemn himself, and then denounces the judgment of God against him for his unseasonable lenity, 35—43.

AND [a] Ben-hadad the king of Syria gathered all his host together; and there were [b] thirty and two kings with him, [c] and horses and chariots: and he went up and [d] besieged Samaria, and warred against it.

2 And [e] he sent messengers to Ahab king of Israel into the city, and said unto him, Thus saith Ben-hadad,

3 Thy [f] silver and thy gold is mine; thy wives also and thy children, even the goodliest, are mine.

4 And the king of Israel answered and said, My lord, O king, according to thy saying, [g] I am thine, and all that I have.

5 And the messengers came again, and said, Thus speaketh Ben-hadad, saying, Although I have sent unto thee, saying, Thou shalt deliver me thy silver, and thy gold, and thy wives, and thy children;

6 Yet I will send my servants unto thee to-morrow about this time, [h] and they shall search thine house, and the houses of thy servants: and it shall be, that whatsoever is [*] pleasant in thine eyes, they shall put it in their hand, and take it away.

7 Then the king of Israel called [i] all the elders of the land, and said, [j] Mark, I pray you, and see how this man [k] seeketh mischief: for he sent unto me for my wives, and for my children, and for my silver, and for my gold, and I [†] denied him not.

8 And all the elders and all the people said unto him, Hearken not unto him nor consent.

9 Wherefore he said unto the messengers of Ben-hadad, Tell my lord the king, All that thou didst send for to thy servant at the first I will do; but this thing I may not do. And the messengers departed, and brought him word again.

10 And Ben-hadad sent unto him, and said, [l] The gods do so unto me, and more also, [m] if the dust of Samaria shall suffice for handfuls for all the people that [‡] follow me.

11 And the king of Israel answered and said, Tell him, [n] Let not him that girdeth on his harness boast himself as he that putteth it off.

12 And it came to pass, when Ben- vices: and those who duly understand the importance of the sacred ministry, will renounce every other honor, pleasure, and interest for the sake of it, though called to labor in the midst of hardships, poverty, and persecution.—Zeal for the glory of God and the salvation of souls will subordinate, though it will not extinguish, natural affections. (Notes, Matt. 10:37—39.) The work of the ministry requires the whole man: and when such persons are employed, as have not been regularly educated for it, they are especially concerned to attend the instructions, to frequent the company, and to copy the examples, of aged and approved ministers: and "no man having set his hand to the plow, and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God." (P. O. Matt. 4:12—25. Note, Matt. 8:21, 22.) In difficult times helpers of inferior abilities may be a great comfort to the discouraged servants of God: and this service is carried on to advantage, when different ministers concur, from the same principles, to seek the same great end of his glory in the salvation of souls. May "the Lord of the harvest send forth many such laborers into his harvest!" Amen. (Note, Matt. 9:36—38.)

NOTES.

CHAP. XX. V. 1. Ben-hadad signifies The son of Hadad; (11:14—22.) yet he is said to have been "the son of Tabrimon, the son of Hezion." (15:18.)—Perhaps Hadad was his father, and Tabrimon and Hezion his more remote ancestors. —The thirty and two kings were petty princes of the adjacent countries, who were either vassals or allies to the king of Syria.—Ben-hadad seems to have been induced by rapacity to wage war against Ahab; and it is probable that he had wasted the country before he besieged Samaria. —The late terrible famine must have diminished the number of the Israelites, by death and emigration, almost beyond calculation: and by the righteous judgment of God, the remainder were so disaffected to Ahab, or so dismayed by Ben-hadad, that they had retired or fled; and thus they left the capital city in a very defenceless condition.

V. 2—11. Ben-hadad's first message was couched in insulting language. He not only considered Ahab's riches as already his property; but his wives and children, even the goodliest of them, as his slaves. Yet Ahab understood this, only as a claim to dominion over him and his property, or kingdom; and in abject terms he consented to be his vassal, and to do him homage, and pay him tribute. Ben-hadad therefore, (perhaps perceiving his terror and pusillanimity,) grew more insolent, and by a second message demanded the immediate possession and use of them all, for him self and his servants, who would come the next day, and search all the houses and treasures, and carry away what they thought most valuable, whether it belonged to Ahab, or to his people. To this the elders of Israel would not allow the king to consent: the dominion and the public treasures, Ben-hadad might have taken; but to plunder the city and enslave the inhabitants must not be granted. To this answer the king of Syria sent a boasting menace, confirmed with an oath by his idols; implying, that he would enter Samaria with such numbers, that, when the whole city was reduced to a heap of dust, it would not afford them every one an handful: (Notes, Ex. 5:9,10. 2 Kings 19:23,24. Is. 10:12—14.) but Ahab very pertinently reminded him not to exult and triumph, till he had gotten the victory, and had put off his armor; as at present he was only girding it on, and preparing for the battle

V. 13. Elijah had complained that he was left alone; yet the Lord had other prophets, whom he could send to speak before Ahab. (Note, 19:10.) Probably, Elijah and Elisha were at this time well employed in some distant part of the land; and Ahab and Jezebel were too much engaged, to interrupt their labors or usefulness.—The Lord was pleased to predict the victory to this wicked prince, for his further conviction, that JEHOVAH, not Baal, was the living God; for the punishment of Ben-hadad's insolence; for the honor of his own name, and for the benefit of his true worshippers; and in his long-suffering towards Israel, and compassion for their complicated distresses.

V. 14, 15. Ahab, sensible that the promised victory must be miraculous, inquired, by whom it was to be obtained: and he was directed to employ, not his bravest soldiers, but the servants, or pages, of the chief men in the different provinces; and also himself to lead on the attack. His whole army consisted of only seven thousand men; (the same number, with those preserved from idolatry, but not the same persons;) yet none of these were to be employed, till the first assault had been made, and the first advantage gained, by this small company of servants! (Notes, Judg. 7:8,16—22. 1 Sam. 14:6—10.) And under the present impression of terror and hope, Ahab readily obeyed these uncommon orders; though in general he despised and hated both the prophets, and him that sent them.

V. 16—18. It is probable, that Ahab chose to lead out his little troop at noon, when he supposed the Syrians would be at dinner, or reposing themselves.—Ben-hadad, despising the Israelites, was indulging to excess: and on hearing that a small company came out of Samaria, he gave such orders, in haughtiness and intoxication, as were exactly suited to embarrass his officers and soldiers; and to prevent their attacking the assailants with spirit, lest they should slay those whom they had been ordered to take alive! (Marg. Ref. v.) And to make prisoners of those who came out to treat of peace, would have been contrary to all the laws and usages of nations, even in time of war.

V. 19—21. The two hundred and thirty-two servants, whom especially Ben-hadad had ordered to be taken alive, slew every one the man who attempted to seize him: and this unexpected resistance, by the secret operation of God upon the minds of the Syrians, so dismayed them, that they yielded the army an easy and decisive victory. (Note, 1 Sam. 14:11—15.) Ben-hadad, after all his boasts and menaces, might be considered as successful, beyond all reasonable expectation, in this respect, that he escaped with life, what thou doest: for [d] at the return of the year the king of Syria will come up against thee.

23 And the servants of the king of Syria said unto him, [e] Their gods are gods of the hills; therefore they were stronger than we: but let us fight against them in the plain, and surely we shall be stronger than they.

24 And do this thing; [f] Take the kings away, every man out of his place, and put captains in their rooms:

25 And number thee an army, like the army that * thou hast lost, horse for horse, and chariot for chariot: and we will fight against them in the plain, and surely we shall be stronger than they. And he hearkened unto their voice, and did so.

26 And it came to pass at the return of the year, that Ben-hadad numbered the Syrians, and went up to [g] Aphek † to fight against Israel.

27 And the children of Israel were numbered, and ‡ were all present, and went against them: and the children of Israel pitched before them [h] like two little flocks of kids; but the Syrians filled the country.

drunken as he then was. (16. Notes, 1 Sam. 30:16—19.)

V. 22. It does not appear, that Ahab regarded this merciful and seasonable warning, given him by the prophet; or that he made any suitable return for his late unexpected deliverance and success.

V. 23—25. The servants of Ben-hadad, either in flattery, as if no human valor could possibly rout his army, or from present conviction, ascribed their defeat to the gods of Israel. They supposed that Israel had deities, like the gods of other nations, especially JEHOVAH, (28) to whom they ascribed a limited power, within a certain district, out of which they could do nothing. They had probably heard, that JEHOVAH had displayed his glory from mount Sinai: the temple was built on mount Zion; Samaria was situated on a hill; and the people loved to sacrifice on high places: therefore the Syrians concluded that the God of Israel was powerful upon the mountains, but not in the plains; and they foolishly expected to prevail against Israel and JEHOVAH, by changing their ground. (Note, Num. 23:13.) No doubt, however, they likewise considered the plain country as better suited to their army, which was furnished with cavalry and chariots of war, than to the foot soldiers of Israel.—Their other advice was sensible and pertinent. The kings served rather for pomp and feasting, than for war: and it could not be expected that they would either be so hearty in the cause of Syria, or so observant of exact discipline, as Syrian captains, appointed by the king, and desirous of signalizing themselves, would be. (Marg. Ref. e, f.)

V. 26. Aphek lay in the lot of Asher, in the most northern part of the land; (Marg. Ref. g. Note, Josh. 19:24—31.) and seems to have been selected as the seat of the war, because the adjacent region had plains and vallies, suited to Ben-hadad's cavalry.

V. 27. It is probable, that Israel's late miraculous victory encouraged the small army, by which it was gained, to accompany Ahab to the country selected by the Syrians; but no others joined them, and their appearance conveyed the idea of weakness and timidity; more resembling two small flocks of young goats, in a desolate country, than a powerful army, which the occasion seemed to demand. (Notes, 1 Sam. 13:6,7, 13—15,22.)

V. 28. Ahab and Israel, instead of deliverance, merited severe vengeance: but it was proper, that the ignorance or blasphemy of the Syrians should be confuted: that all might know that JEHOVAH, the God of the whole earth, was almighty in every place. (Notes, Deut. 32:26,27. Jer. 14:7—9. Ez. 20:7—9. 36:32.)—Probably, this man of God informed Ahab, that the Lord had devoted Ben-hadad to destruction, and would deliver them into his hands, that he might execute his vengeance upon him. Another prophet seems to have been sent with this message; and not he who delivered the former one.

V. 29, 30. Perhaps the Israelites were encamped on a hill, and the Syrians, intimidated by their late defeat, did not venture to attack them, notwithstanding their immense superiority in numbers, till they came down into the plain. This, it is probable, they did on the seventh day; and the Lord miraculously interposing, both to encourage and assist the little company of Israel, and to terrify and confound the Syrians; a decided victory, with prodigious slaughter of the Syrians, ensued. And the survivors taking refuge in the city, by the immediate interposition of the Almighty, twenty-seven thousand were crushed by the wall, from which they expected defence, falling upon them. (Josh. 6:20.) And Behold now, we have heard that the kings of the house of Israel are [s] merciful kings: let us, I pray thee, [t] put sackcloth on our loins, and ropes upon our heads, and go out to the king of Israel; [u] peradventure he will save thy life.

32 So they girded sackcloth on their loins, and put ropes on their heads, and came to the king of Israel, and said, [v] Thy servant Ben-hadad saith, I pray thee, let me live. And he said, Is he yet alive? [x] he is my brother.

33 Now [y] the men did diligently observe whether any thing would come from him, and did hastily catch it: and they said, Thy brother Ben-hadad. Then he said, Go ye, bring him. Then Ben-hadad came forth to him; [z] and he caused him to come up into the chariot.

34 And Ben-hadad said unto him, [a] The cities, which my father took from thy father, I will restore; and thou shalt make streets for thee in Damascus, as my father made in Samaria. Then, said Ahab, I will send thee away with this covenant. [b] So he made a covenant with him, and sent him away.

35 ¶ And a certain man [c] of the sons of the prophets said unto his neighbor, [d] in the word of the LORD, [e] Smite me, I pray thee. And the man refused to smite him.

36 Then said he unto him, [f] Because thou hast not obeyed the voice of the LORD, behold, as soon as thou art departed from me, a lion shall slay thee. And as soon as he was departed from him, a lion found him, and slew him.

37 Then he found another man, and said, [g] Smite me, I pray thee. And the man smote him, [*] so that in smiting he wounded him.

38 So the prophet departed, and waited for the king by the way, and [h] disguised himself with ashes upon his face.

39 And as the king passed by, he cried unto the king: and he said, [i] Thy servant went out into the midst of the battle; and, behold, a man turned aside, and brought a man unto me, and said, Keep this man: if by any means he be missing, then shall [k] thy life be for his life, [l] or else thou shalt [†] pay a talent of silver.

40 And as thy servant was busy here and there, [‡] he was gone. And the king of Israel said unto him, [m] So shall thy judgment be; thyself hast decided it.

Ben-hadad concealed himself in a retired chamber. (Marg.)

V. 31—34. A general opinion seems to have prevailed, that the princes of Israel, the people of God, were more generous and clement than other kings: and indeed, sentiments, derived from the oracles of God, produce good effects, in this respect, on multitudes who do not act habitually on religious principles.—Ben-hadad's ambassadors, appearing in his name before Ahab, clothed in sackcloth, and with ropes on their heads, formed a remarkable and most humiliating contrast to the preceding state of affairs. Thus they acted as penitents and criminals, who were sorry that they had attacked Ahab, and confessed that they deserved to die for that offence. This must have been a very great mortification to Ben-hadad: and it was equally flattering to Ahab's vanity; who, seduced by it, forgot both the interests of Israel, and his own real honor and security. Indeed he ought to have given God the glory of his victory, and to have consulted the prophets in what manner to deal with Ben-hadad. But he acknowledged this wicked prince as his brother; being more pleased with the dignity of a king, than the distinction of an Israelite. (Note, 1 Sam. 15:8,9.) He even treated him with respect, and made a league with him upon disadvantageous terms; and sent him away, without any security, except his bare word, for the performance of the treaty, and which Ben-hadad soon violated. (Notes, 22:2—31.) In all this Ahab was extremely foolish, as well as deeply criminal.—These streets of Damascus were probably allotted the Israelites for the purposes of trade, that in them they might live unmolested according to their own laws. It is probable, that the same liberty had been allowed the Syrians in Samaria; where the idolaters were at ease, when the prophets of JEHOVAH were cut off.

Diligently observe, &c. (33) נחש. ינחשו auguratus est, divinavit, observavit conjecturas.—Gen. 44:5,15. (Note, Gen. 44:4—6.) Hence נחש a serpent. Gen. 3:1. (Note, Gen. 3:1.) These men acted with the subtlety and sagacity of the serpent, in their conduct before Ahab.

V. 35, 36. This command was given by one of "the sons of the prophets" "in the word of the LORD," to his neighbor, or fellow, to another of the same company, who would know that he spake in the name of the Lord. The refusal therefore was direct disobedience to God, which he was pleased to punish with immediate death, by a lion meeting and slaying him. (Note, 13:23—32.) Ahab would doubtless hear of this event: and if one who humanely refused to smite a pious prophet at the command of God was thus punished; he might conclude, that he should not be spared, who disobeyed God, by forming an alliance with a haughty idolatrous king, whom the Lord required him to destroy. It seems that the prophet intended, by being wounded, the better to personate a soldier who had been in the battle, and had deserved well of his king, though he had failed of his duty in one particular. (37)

V. 38—40. The prophet appeared, either as one wounded in the face, and so covered with a bandage like a veil to disguise himself, as many understand it; or he assumed the character of a mourner, being under condemnation to die, seeing he could not pay the talent of silver required of him; or he united both. His account implied, that the prisoner trusted to his keeping was one of superior rank; and that his officer, or captain, committed him to his care, with this injunction, or warning: yet the prisoner was gone; and Ahab, without reflecting on his own conduct, confirmed the sentence. (Notes, 2 Sam. 12:1—7.)

V. 41, 42. As soon as Ahab discovered who the prophet was, he perceived that he had been drawn in to pass sentence upon himself.—Ahab lost his life in fighting against Ben-hadad, who did not fulfil this treaty: (Notes, 22:3,31—35.) and great evils came upon Israel from the Syrians, whom Ahab might at this time have subjugated, or deprived of power to injure them. (Notes, 2 Kings 6:25—29. 8:12,13. 10:32—36.)

V. 43. Heavy, &c.] Whilst the Lord secured his own glory, and protected his people; he deprived Ahab of all satisfaction in his deliverance and victory, and filled him with vexation and dismay. He did not repent of his fault, but he was chagrined at the message, and enraged at the messenger. Many think it was Micaiah; which is not improbable. (Notes, 21:4—6. 22:8. 1 Sam. 14:45,46.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—21.

The indignation of the Lord will surely weaken and dispirit sinners: and those nations especially, which have been favored with the light of revelation, will be brought low for their iniquity, when they forsake the service of God.—Ungodly men delight to insult over the fallen; success increases their pride and insolence; and thus they too are prepared for vengeance.—Those, who most daringly rebel against God, are often mere cowards when assaulted by their fellow-creatures: and no extremities of affliction, or consulting together on what they should, or should not do, will bring sinners, when left to themselves, duly to consider the real causes of their distress.—Men will part with their most pleasant things, which they most love, to save their temporal lives: and yet they lose their souls, and incur everlasting misery, rather than bestow any labor, or give up any pleasure or interest, to prevent it! (Notes, Matt. 16:24—28. P. O. 21—28.)—Boasting and menacing language generally betrays a weak and foolish mind, exposes men to cutting rebukes, and terminates in abject meanness and disgrace. To glory in what we have done, is pride and vanity: but to glory in what we will do, is extreme ignorance and folly; for no capacity or management can ensure success. (Note, Jam. 4:13—17.)—Drunkards perform great things, as far as boasting words can go: and they urge one another on to rash and foolish enterprises, which expose them in every way to detriment and to ruin.—The Lord will secure his own glory, and take care of his own people, notwithstanding the wickedness of the great, or the many: he will leave every impenitent sinner without excuse; and he delights to save by unlikely instruments, that his own power may be the more conspicuous. At some seasons, the convictions of the most abandoned may get an advantage over their lusts: for a time they may be restrained from iniquity, may do many things according to the command of God, and even regard the admonitions of his ministers: thus they are sometimes externally favored; that they may experience the different effect of obedience and of disobedience, for their deeper condemnation, if they relapse into their former crimes.—The Lord inspires counsel and courage, or sends infatuation and dismay, as he pleases: so that the battle is not to the strong; but all calculations are strangely proved erroneous, when this secret influence is not taken into the account. (Note, Ec. 9:11,12.)

V. 22—43.

Fallen man has very confused, absurd, and dishonorable apprehensions of the divine attributes. He conceives of God, as if he were such an one as himself, and is thus emboldened to persist in his rebellion: and the most consummate wisdom, in worldly concerns, often unites with the most contemptible ignorance on religious subjects.—To silence the blasphemies, or to expose the mistakes of his enemies, the Lord sometimes gives temporary success to those, who, in another way, despise his warnings and disobey his precepts: but he will not countenance them in their crimes, nor let them finally escape condign punishment.—The whole creation is at war with those who fight against God; and he will surely render contemptible, as well as miserable, the haughtiest of them.—The ambitious are pleased with abject submissions and adulation; and love the society of the most wicked men, who will stoop low enough to them. Thus they are seduced and bribed, not only to disregard the will of God, and to prefer the friendship of his enemies; but to forego the most solid temporal advantages to themselves and their connexions, for the sake of empty words and fair professions! It indeed becomes all to be merciful; and clemency is the ornament of royalty, especially of the kings of Israel, the rulers of God's people: yet clemency to notorious criminals, whilst those who love and serve God are treated with cruelty, is strangely inconsistent; to pretend to be more merciful than the Lord, by sparing those whom he commands to be put to death, is an awful presumption; and to regard those as brethren, whom he has doomed to "utter destruction," is an evidence of great impiety.—In every thing the Lord demands implicit obedience; even the plea of compassion will not excuse rebellion against his will: and, by severe temporal judgments on such as have committed lighter offences, he loudly speaks terror to more atrocious criminals; whom he will at length constrain to decide against themselves. And whatever prosperity they may in the mean time obtain, it will be imbittered to them by what they feel, and what they fear; for "there is no peace, saith my God, to the wicked."—But may we not here, by an allowable accommodation, hint some profitable instructions? The convinced sinner, not daring any longer to persist in his impotent contest against the Almighty; and unable to flee from him, or to purchase his forgiveness and favor, is almost reduced to despair. Then he hears a report of mercy, abounding in Christ Jesus to the chief of sinners; and in hopes of obtaining a free salvation, with penitent tears and humiliat-

CHAP. XXI.

Ahab covets Naboth's vineyard, and is greatly displeased, because Naboth refuses to part with it, 1—4. Jezebel discovering this, by letters, in Ahab's name, to the elders of Jezreel, causes Naboth to be stoned, as a blasphemer, 5—14. She excites Ahab to take possession of his vineyard, 15, 16. Elijah is sent to meet Ahab, and to denounce the judgment of God against him, and his family, and Jezebel, 17—24. Ahab's enormous wickedness, 25, 26. 2 And Ahab spake unto Naboth, saying, [c] Give me thy vineyard, that I may have it for [d] a garden of herbs, because it is near unto my house: and I will give thee for it a better vineyard than it; or, if it * seem good to thee, I will give thee the worth of it in money.

3 And Naboth said to Ahab, [e] The LORD forbid it me, that [f] I should give the inheritance of my fathers unto thee.

4 And Ahab came into his house [g] heavy and displeased, because of the word which Naboth the Jezreelite had spoken to him; for he had said, [h] I will not give thee the inheritance of my fathers. [i] And he laid him down upon his bed, and turned away his face, and would eat no bread.

5 But [k] Jezebel his wife came to him, and said unto him, [l] Why is thy spirit so sad, that thou eatest no bread?

6 And he said unto her, [m] Because I spake unto Naboth the Jezreelite, and said unto him, Give me thy vineyard for money; or else, if it please thee, I will give thee another vineyard for it: and he answered, [n] I will not give thee my vineyard.

7 And Jezebel his wife said unto him, [o] Dost thou now govern the kingdom of Israel? Arise and eat bread, and let thine heart be merry; [p] I will give thee the vineyard of Naboth the Jezreelite. [Practical Observations.] ng confessions, he cries out, "God be merciful to ne, a sinner." Becoming acquainted with the gracious appellations of Father, Brother, and Friend of sinners, and the exceedingly great and precious promises contained in the scripture; he diligently observes, and eagerly catches them, as t were, from the Savior's lips, and pleads them in humble prayer. Thus he obtains forgiveness; the everlasting covenant is made with him, and all the blessings of the gospel are secured to him: at the same time, he yields himself to the Lord to be his servant, and love constrains him to live to his glory.—But alas! most that hear these glad tidings are busy here and there, till the day of salvation s gone; and, not having wherewithal to ransom heir souls, they must spend eternity in unavailing amentations and despair. Nay, even true believers are often so taken up with trifles, as to let easons of important usefulness glide away unimproved, to the loss both of themselves and of others. May the Lord "teach us so to number our days, that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom!"

NOTES.

CHAP. XXI. V. 1, 2. Ahab had not long before lost an opportunity of enlarging, securing, and improving his dominions: and now he coveted Naboth's vineyard, to make him an additional kitchen-garden, or pleasure-garden! He seemed, however, to propose equitable terms to the possessor; but his fault lay in desiring it in an inordinate manner. (Notes, Ex. 20:17. Rom. 7:7—12.)

V. 3. Naboth seems to have been a conscientious man, and a worshipper of JEHOVAH, which might render Jezebel the more determined on his destruction. (Note, 8—14.) He valued his vineyard as "the inheritance of his fathers," originally assigned to them by the Lord himself. He might, if in want, have leased out, or mortgaged, his estate till the year of jubilee: (Notes, Lev. 25:23 —28. Num. 36:1—9.) but this was not the case; and he was sensible, that if his vineyard became a part of the royal gardens, it would never revert to his family. The Lord had forbidden him to alienate his land: and he plainly gave Ahab the true reason, why he could not comply with his desires; for he would rather seem uncourteous, or offend his prince, than transgress the law of God; whatever otherwise he might have been disposed to do.

The Lord forbid it me.] חלילה לי מיהוה. 'חלילה, 'profanitas; profanum; vox aliquid abominantis. The word implies the idea of impiety; and Naboth seems to have started back from the proposal, with aversion and alarm, as from a temptation to a heinous sin.

V. 4—6. (Note, 20:43.) Ahab, a victorious and prosperous king, was filled with anguish and vexation, because he met with a denial in so small a matter! Such was the conflict of his passions, that he lay down, and, either through sickness or sullenness, would not taste food! He greatly desired the vineyard. His pride was intolerably offended, that one of his own subjects should peremptorily refuse to comply with his proposal; he was ashamed to yield the point in contest; and he was afraid of proceeding to extremities. The effects of these conflicting passions made him very miserable: yet it is probable he would not have attempted violence against Naboth, had not "Jezebel his wife stirred him up." (Notes, Esth. 5:13,14.)—It is observable, that in relating the cause of his disquietude, Ahab made no mention of Naboth's conscientious reason for his refusal; but stated it as if it had been entirely the effect of insolence and obstinacy!

V. 7. It was indeed unworthy of the king of Israel to fret himself about such a trifle. But this base woman meant to rouse her husband to gratify both his covetousness and revenge. (Notes, 2

8 So [q] she wrote letters in Ahab's name, and sealed them with his seal, and sent the letters unto [r] the elders, and to [s] the nobles that were in his city, dwelling with Naboth.

9 And she wrote in the letters, saying, [t] Proclaim a fast, and set Naboth * on high among the people;

10 And set [u] two men, [x] sons of Belial, before him, to bear witness against him, saying, [y] Thou didst blaspheme God and the king. And then carry him out, and stone him, that he may die.

Then [e] they carried him forth out of the city, and stoned him with stones, that he died.

14 Then they sent to Jezebel, saying [f] Naboth is stoned, and is dead.

15 And it came to pass, when Jezebel heard that Naboth was stoned, and was dead, that Jezebel said to Ahab, [g] Arise, take possession of the vineyard of Naboth the Jezreelite, which he refused to give thee for money: for Naboth is not alive, but dead.

16 And it came to pass, when Ahab heard that Naboth was dead, that [h] Ahab rose up to go down to the vineyard of Naboth the Jezreelite, to take possession of it. [Practical Observations.]

17 ¶ And [i] the word of the LORD came to Elijah the Tishbite, saying,

18 Arise, go down to meet Ahab king of Israel, [k] which is in Samaria: behold, he is in the vineyard of Naboth, whither he is gone down to possess it.

19 And thou shalt speak unto him, saying, Thus saith the LORD, [l] Hast thou killed, and also taken possession? And thou shalt speak unto him, saying, Thus saith the LORD, [m] In the place where dogs licked the blood of Naboth, shall dogs lick thy blood, even thine.

Sam. 13:1—4.) She intimated, that he was incapable of managing a kingdom, as it became a king, if he hesitated to seize on Naboth's vineyard, and to punish his insolence. (Note, John 11:49—53.) 'What! hast thou not power to 'crush such an adversary? Arise and enjoy thy-'self, and leave the business with me; I will 'speedily settle it to thy satisfaction.' This was her evident meaning, to which Ahab made no objection or opposition.

V. 8—14. Jezebel wrote in Ahab's name; and sealed the letters with his seal, which it seems he allowed her to use when and as she pleased. Thus the elders of Jezreel were required to obey her directions, as they valued the king's favor. She represented Naboth as a dangerous criminal, who must be taken off, without a particular inquiry into the nature of his offence: yet, as he bore a fair character, some charge must be brought against him, which might prevent the people from taking umbrage at his execution. A fast must therefore be proclaimed; as if some horrid wickedness had been discovered, which threatened the city with divine judgments, till solemnly expiated. (Note, Is. 58:3,4.) This would excite general consternation: and on the day appointed, Naboth must be apprehended; and "men of Belial" procured, (that is men wholly unprincipled, and free from all restraints of conscience, who would do any thing for hire;) to testify that he had blasphemed God and the king: thus he would be condemned to be stoned for the blasphemy; for the treasonable words, his estate would be confiscated; and the elders were required to see the sentence immediately executed. These infamous orders were as infamously obeyed, without hesitation or reluctance; and by elders and nobles of Israel, though in contempt of all religion, law, and justice!—It seems they stoned Naboth's sons also, that there might be none to avenge his death, or to demand his estate. (2 Kings 9:26.) When Jezebel cut off the Lord's prophets, she had doubtless inured the magistrates to similar practices, and rewarded their wickedness: so that she did not fear a refusal from the elders of Jezreel. They also knew from whom the orders came, and reported the execution of them to Jezebel, not to Ahab.—The elders of the same city, not long after, paid as implicit an obedience to Jehu's orders, in putting to death seventy of Ahab's descendants. (2 Kings 10:3—10.)

V. 17—19.) Other prophets or sons of the prophets had been sent upon ordinary messages to Ahab: but Elijah himself was employed on this occasion, whose very presence would dismay the proud tyrant, and whose strong faith and intrepid spirit qualified him for such a service. (Notes, 18:17—20.) In the very vineyard of Naboth, even whilst Ahab was seizing on his prey, and surrounded by his officers, the prophet delivered this message to him, for his deeper mortification, and that it might be more noticed by others. He directly charged Ahab with the murder of Naboth, nor did he attempt to deny it, or to excuse himself. The prediction, that dogs should lick the blood of Ahab, certainly implied that he would be cut off by a violent death: but the expression, "in the place where, &c." occasions considerable difficulty; because the city Samaria was at some distance from Jezreel. Some learned men think that the word rendered "the place where," may mean, in like manner as: but this signification of the original word is unprecedented. Others suppose, that the word place is taken in a large sense, for all the adjacent region; and so includes Samaria, where Ahab dwelt, and where he was buried; as well as the city of Jezreel. (22:37,38.) But may we not say, that, as dogs licked the blood of Ahab, literally, when his chariot was washed in the pool of Samaria; so they licked his blood, as flowing through and from the veins of his son Joram, when Joram was slain by Jehu, and his body thrown into this very spot? (Note, 2 Kings 9:25,26.)

V. 20. After the slaughter of Baal's prophets, and Elijah's flight from Jezebel, Ahab had returned to his wicked course of life, and he shunned the prophet as his worst enemy: and it does not appear, that Elijah had seen him since those events. (Notes, 22:8,9.) Before indeed, Ahab had bestowed much pains to find the prophet: but being now determined in idolatry, and yet afraid of him, whose prayers had called for drought upon the land, and fire and rain from heaven; (Notes, 17:1. 18:38,39,41—44.) and especially still feeling in his conscience the anguish of his cutting rebukes, he even trembled at the thoughts of him. Others, called prophets, had come to him with milder messages, and he thought them more friendly; but Elijah's severity could not be mollified. His presence therefore on this occasion surprised, offended, and affrighted him; and when "his enemy had found him," he expected not to go well away, but to hear some awful judgment denounced against him, for his recent transgression.—Nor did Elijah deny that he was an enemy to his wickedness: he neither paid respect to him, nor was intimidated by his anger or power. He had found him, as a thief caught in the fact; and, in the name of God, he denounced the most tremendous sentence of condemnation on him and on his posterity. (Note, Jer. 2:26—30.) For Ahab had "sold himself," as a willing slave to his lusts. This is very different from "being sold under sin;" so that through the remaining power of corrupt nature, a man who "delights in the law of God," and hates all sin, yet "cannot do the things that he would." In the former case, the slavery is voluntary, the will itself is enslaved: in the latter, it is involuntary, and is a man's grief and distress. "To will is present with me: but how to perform that which is good, I find not."—"Oh wretched man that I am." (Notes, Rom. 7:13—25.)

Thou hast sold thyself.] הִתְמַכַּרְךָ; 25.—מָכַרְתִּי, I have sold: נִמְכַּרְתֶּם ye have sold yourselves, or have been sold. Is. 50:1.

V. 21, 22. Marg. Ref.—Notes, 14:9—11. 16:2—6.

V. 23. This circumstance not only predicted the dreadful manner in which Jezebel should be slain, but denoted the worst punishment of sin to be after death. (Note, 2 Kings 9:30—37.)—Jezreel.] In the very place in which Naboth had been murdered. If Jezebel attended Ahab on this occasion, it was, as far as is recorded, the only time, in which Elijah spake in her presence.

V. 25, 26. Ahab's crime in respect of Naboth was not a detached part of his conduct, contrary to the general course of his life, as David's sin in the matter of Uriah had been; but it was a specimen of his continued rebellion against God: (Note, Rom. 7:15—17.) and the gross and open idolatry to which Jezebel had first stirred him up, was even more abominable in the sight of God than his murder and other crimes. Having sold himself to work wickedness in the sight of the Lord, as if in contempt and defiance of him, he was openly, constantly, and diligently employed in it, as a slave is in his master's business; and it was requisite that his punishment should be as notorious as his crimes had been. V. 27—29. Ahab was greatly terrified at Elijah's message; and at the severe, determined, and solemn manner in which he delivered it: but his humiliation was superficial, and productive of external observances only. He did not, that we find, so much as restore Naboth's vineyard to his heirs; much less did he put away Jezebel, or renounce idolatry, and establish the worship of God. But he rent his clothes, wore sackcloth and lay in it, fasted, and appeared in public with the dejected air of a penitent.—However, though his humiliation was formal and hypocritical, it acknowledged the justice of God, and his own sin, and put an outward honor on the divine law. Neither Jeroboam, nor Baasha had even thus far humbled themselves. Inadequate as it was, Ahab would have acted still worse, if he had vindicated and gloried in his crimes, or attempted to put the prophet to death: and therefore the Lord recompensed his outward temporary repentance with a similar reward; for he granted him a respite of the judgment, as far as it respected his family, and spared him the anguish of witnessing the slaughter of his children. 'Accordingly it was 'his son's blood, not his, which was licked up by 'the dogs, in the portion of Jezreel.' Bp. Patrick. (Note, 17—19.)—Jezebel was too hardened to shew any symptoms of remorse on this, or any other occasion. (Note, Acts 24:24—27.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—7.

It is natural to us, as fallen creatures, to hanker after those things which are withheld from us; and every accession of wealth or prosperity, increases the violence of this propensity. The commandment indeed, which forbids us to covet, "is holy, just, and good," the fence of our neighbor's property, and of our own peace and integrity. (Note, Ex. 20:17.) But alas! "it is weak through the flesh;" and the impetuous torrent of our lusts easily bursts the salutary barrier, and rages the more for having been opposed. (Note, Rom. 8:3,4.) Yet every violation of the precept proves its excellency; as indulged concupiscence opens the door to temptations, makes way for the most atrocious crimes, and prepares misery and destruction for every one who stands in the way of its gratification. If fair means fail to procure the object of inordinate desires, fraud or violence must be employed.—Pride cannot brook opposition: every plea of conscience is treated as mere pretence; and the best intended actions, of the most blameless and excellent persons, are ascribed to the worst of motives. But such passions are serpents cherished in a man's bosom, the bite of which inflicts exquisite torture and death.—Vain indeed are earthly advantages, if the want of a coveted spot of ground for a garden, and the supercilious or conscientious behavior of an inferior, can rob a prosperous monarch of all his comfort, and render him sick with rage and vexation! (Note, Esth. 5:13.) This, however, is wholly the effect of men's lusts and passions, which, like children, are always most restless when most indulged. Providential blessings well answer the end for which they were intended, but cannot form a rational creature's felicity: and that degree of contradiction or disappointment, which would scarcely cause a humble man to heave one sigh, will break a proud man's heart. We should beware then of covetousness, pride, anger, envy, and discontent: we should "watch and pray that we may not enter into temptation:" we should aim to make the spiritual precept, "thou shalt not covet," the barrier in our hearts, as well as in the law of God, against the violation of the other commandments; and not allow ourselves so to desire things lawful, as not to be able to brook a denial or disappointment. (Note, Matt. 5:27,28.) Our more intimate connexions are in these respects of the highest importance. In the married state we expect, and should reciprocally impart, sympathy, counsel, encouragement, and assistance: but when, instead of a prudent and pious counsellor, a man has a factor for Satan in the form of an artful, unprincipled, and beloved woman, what fatal effects may not be expected! "Be ye not therefore unequally yoked with unbelievers."—It is hard to relate facts, respecting ourselves, with simplicity and impartiality; but much more difficult to restrain those within the strict limits of equity, who are able to seize on the objects of their desires, without fear of being called to account before any human tribunal. Hence rapines and oppressions have disgraced human nature, and desolated the earth, in all ages; every resistance to the will of a superior, however reasonable, conscientious, and mild, has been condemned as rebellion; and this has occasioned assassinations, massacres, or public executions. A little acquaintance with history, and with human nature, will terminate our astonishment at such transactions; for "nothing is new under the sun:" but they must ever excite our regret, our compassion, and our indignation.

V. 8—16.

The most flagrant injustice has generally been committed under the color of legal forms; and the most horrid crimes have been perpetrated under the mask of piety: because the shew of these good things hides the deformity of such transactions, as otherwise could never be endured. (Notes, Matt. 23:14,25—28.)—Many command and reward villany, who in their hearts despise and detest the mercenary wretches whom they employ. (Note, Matt. 27:3—5.) It is grievous that men of Belial abound even in the lower order of society; but most horrible when judges and nobles deserve this harsh appellation. Yet there will always be found those in every rank, who will prostitute their talents, influence, and conscience, to the tyrant who rewards iniquity. (Notes, Ps. 58:1,2. 82:2—4. Ez. 22:27,28. Mi. 2:1—3. 7:1—4. Matt. 26:57—62.) Let us then bless God for a limited government, and for security from such outrages of oppression: though even in Britain, men of Belial, by false testimony and perjury, may deprive us of our property, our liberty, our reputation, or our lives. We should therefore commit all that is dear to us to the Lord's keeping; seek those good things, which cannot be taken from us; and wait with cheerful patience for that approaching judgment, when all iniquitous sentences shall be reversed. And let judges, juries, and witnesses beware of being warped, in their decisions, verdicts, or testimony, by fear, affection, or interest: for those, who now are placed upon the tribunal, must shortly stand at the bar, to answer before a heart-searching, impartial Judge, for their conduct in their important stations.—Those who rejoice in iniquity, and gladly seize on the profit derived from the crimes of others, will be condemned equally with the perpetrators: and the triumphing of the wicked, in the success of their villany, resembles the flash of lightning, which leaves the night more dark and gloomy than before: for the Lord beholds and is displeased; and his tremendous threatenings are only preludes to his more tremendous vengeance.

V. 17—29.

Such ministers of God, as are most decidedly faithful, must expect to be deemed morose, and even malevolent, by sinners, whose consciences have been galled with their plain warnings and rebukes, but whose hearts are wedded to their lusts. Men of this character often count the very persons to be their enemies, whose hearts bleed with compassion for them, and whose secret prayers in their behalf are recorded before God, as a demonstration of their disinterested love for them. Indeed this appears, in their being willing rather to incur their keenest resentment, than cease their endeavors to save their souls. If men allow that they hate the minister for his faithfulness, they condemn themselves; but if they dislike him for his excessive severity, and his ill-nature, they are perfectly excusable: and what sinner would not wish to stand fair with his own conscience, and with society? (Note, 22:8.) On the other hand, impenitent sinners often account those to be their friends, who speak smooth things, and help them to deceive themselves: and are very lavish in their commendation, by way of contrasting them with those whom they deem their enemies; that it may be thought they love religion, while they hate its firmest friends.—But "the man of God" will neither desire the applause, nor fear the reproach, of those who have "sold themselves to work wickedness," and evince that they are the enemies of God and holiness. His testimony will one day find out those who have rejected it to their condemnation. Terrible things may come upon the willing slaves of sin in this world; but they will surely receive its awful wages in the second death. (Note, Rev. 20:11—15.)—At the tribunal of God, the difference will be manifest to all men, between the most lamentable falls of true believers, and the habitual wickedness of ungodly men; and between true repentance, and all external, partial, and temporary appearances of it.—Before the searching word of God, the most hardened conscience with very few exceptions) will sometimes be disquieted, and the stoutest hearts tremble; and for a season sinners will speak and act as if truly penitent. But "by their fruits ye shall know them:" and as the heart remains unchanged, nature will soon return to that course from which it has been violently forced; so that relapses into former iniquities, with continuance and quietness, will evince such hopeful appearances to be widely different from "that repentance, which is unto salvation not to be repented of." Yet, as these concessions outwardly yield the point in contest, and are thus honorable to God, he will notice and recompense them with respites and outward benefits. So that, whilst we are warned to beware of counterfeits, we are encouraged by the abounding grace of God, which he will never withhold from the upright humble soul; seeing he so delights in mercy, that he extends it even to wicked men, as far as consists with his justice, holiness, truth, and wisdom. We may also be animated to abound in the work of the Lord, assured that our labor will not be in vain; since he even recompenses in kind the formal services of his enemies. And finally, may we seek the blessings of the new covenant for the good of ourselves, and of our children after us; whilst wicked men leave their inheritances to their posterity, burdened with the curse of God and ensure destruction to their own souls.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXII. V. 1. Three years.] During this time Ben-hadad was, no doubt, recruiting his forces, and preparing for war; having by no means adhered to the treaty, which Ahab had made with him.

V. 2. We shall have a better opportunity hereafter, of fully considering Jehoshaphat's character. (Notes, 2 Chr. 17:—20:)—He was very criminal in marrying his son to one of the family of idolatrous Ahab, which probably occasioned his visit at Samaria, with all its consequences. (Notes, 2 Kings 8:18. 2 Chr. 18:1.)

V. 3. Ramoth, &c.] This seems to have been one of the cities, that Ben-hadad had engaged to restore to Ahab: but, having recovered his liberty, he made no scruple of violating his word. (Note, 20:31—34.) Ramoth in Gilead was allotted to the tribe of Gad, and appointed by Moses to be one of the cities of Refuge. (Deut. 4:43. Josh. 20:8.) It was also given to the Levites of the family of Merari. (Josh. 21:38.) Yet it was at this time possessed by the king of Syria.

V. 4. Jehoshaphat meant nothing more, than to express his readiness to afford Ahab every assistance in his power; as both he and his forces were at his command: but the language seemed to countenance all Ahab's undertakings; or at least to treat all the differences in opinion and conduct between him and Ahab as unimportant! Yet surely there was an essential difference between the reformer of Judah, and the corrupter of Israel! But excessive pliability of temper was the grand defect in Jehoshaphat's character; which exposed him to many temptations, and involved him and his kingdom in many and complicated calamities; and terminated in the extirpation of his whole family, Joash alone excepted. (Notes, 2 Kings 8:18. 9:27,28. 10:13,14. 11:1,2. 2 Chr. 18:1. 19:2.)

V. 5. Jehoshaphat had been used to "acknowledge God in all his ways," and not to engage in any important undertaking without inquiring of him by his prophets, or high priest; and he was not satisfied that Ahab should do otherwise. But what true servant of God could bring an acceptable, or even a tolerable message, to a gross idolater and cruel oppressor, who, for twenty-two years after he came to the throne, had been hardening himself in iniquity, amidst warnings, judgments, mercies, and convictions?

V. 6. It is most probable, that these were the prophets of the groves, who escaped, when the prophets of Baal were slain at the command of Elijah; for certainly they were false prophets. (Notes, 18:18—20,40.) No doubt, they commonly prophesied in the name of Baal, or of some idol: but it seems that occasionally they could speak in the name of the LORD. In this verse indeed the word is not JEHOVAH, but Adonai, which is used with greater latitude: but afterwards both Zedekiah, and the rest of them, used the word JEHOVAH. (11,12.) Like some modern philosophers and poets, they perhaps would argue, that it was all one, whether the Supreme Being were called Baal, or JEHOVAH, or Jupiter. To accommodate themselves therefore to Jehoshaphat, and to shew that they were not bigots, but men of candor and liberality, they would for once prophesy in the name of JEHOVAH. They perhaps allowed Jehoshaphat to be a good sort of man: but he had some narrow prejudices, and would not be satisfied, if they said, 'Go up, for Baal shall deliver it into 'the hand of the King;' and they would scorn to disagree with him about a trifling variation, which they could make with little trouble, and without expense.—They perceived also which way Ahab's inclinations leaned, and to please him likewise they assured him of success. It is however to be supposed, that the number and valor of Ahab's forces, his alliance with Jehoshaphat, and the scandalous treachery of Ben-hadad, concurred in encouraging their hopes that he should obtain the victory: especially as, notwithstanding his idolatries, he had before been rendered successful. (Notes, 20:)

V. 7. Jehoshaphat must have regarded these prophets as deceivers and sycophants, whose interest it was to counsel Ahab to please himself. He knew that Israel was favored with Elijah, Elisha, and other eminent prophets, though none of them appeared at court: he felt dissatisfied; but being too afraid of giving offence, he seemed to allow that these were prophets of God, yet he wished to consult some other, if there were any to be found. Perhaps he took occasion, from their using the word Adonai, (which might mean either the God of Israel, or a false god,) to inquire after some other prophet of JEHOVAH: and this might induce them afterwards to change their language in this respect. His subsequent conduct, however, shews that he paid far more regard to them, than he ought to have done, or than they deserved. Indeed, he ought to have decidedly entered his protest against them, and warned Ahab of his danger, if he hearkened to them; as Micaiah did. At least he should have done this, after he had heard Micaiah's message. (Notes, 17—28.)

V. 8. Micaiah is never mentioned in the history, except in this chapter and the history in Chronicles: (2 Chr. 18:) yet he doubtless had several times been sent with messages of rebuke and warning to this haughty idolater: (Note, 9.) Ahab, therefore, while he allowed, that they might inquire of the LORD by him, acknowledged that he hated him! (Notes, Is. 30:8—11. John 7:3—10. 15:17—21.) But Jehoshaphat ventured gently to intimate that he ought not to speak thus: he ought neither to hate him, nor be displeased with his word, nor seek agreeable but useful things; and he hoped on this occasion he would bring an encouraging message.

V. 9. Ahab knew where to find Micaiah, whom he perhaps had put in prison for some of his faithful reproofs. (Note, 26,27.)—Some conjecture shalt thou push the Syrians, until thou have consumed them.

12 And all the prophets prophesied so, saying, [u] Go up to Ramoth-gilead, and prosper; for the LORD shall deliver it into the king's hand.

13 And the messenger that was gone to call Micaiah, spake unto him, saying, [x] Behold now, the words of the prophets declare good unto the king with one mouth: let thy word, I pray thee, be like the word of one of them, and speak that which is good.

14 And Micaiah said, As the LORD liveth, [y] what the LORD saith unto me, that will I speak.

15 ¶ So he came to the king. And the king said unto him, Micaiah, [z] shall we go against Ramoth-gilead to battle, or shall we forbear? And he answered him, [a] Go, and prosper: for the LORD shall deliver it into the hand of the king.

16 And the king said unto him, How many times [b] shall I adjure thee, [c] that thou tell me nothing but that which is true in the name of the LORD?

17 And he said, [d] I saw all Israel scattered upon the hills, [e] as sheep that have not a shepherd: and the LORD said, These have no master: let them return every man to his house in peace.

18 And the king of Israel said unto Jehoshaphat, [f] Did I not tell thee that he would prophesy no good concerning me, but evil?

19 And he said, [g] Hear thou therefore the word of the LORD: [h] I saw the LORD that Micaiah was the prophet, who three years before had chagrined Ahab, and that he had kept him in prison ever since. (Note, 20:43.)

V. 10, 11. (Marg. Ref. q, r.—Note, 24,25.) Horns, &c. (11) These horns of iron were, probably, intended to represent the joint forces of the two kings, made successful by the power of God. The false prophets imitated the true ones in using external signs, the more deeply to impress the minds of those whom they addressed. (Marg. Ref. s, t.)

V. 13, 14. Perhaps this man intended to be friendly to Micaiah: and thought it was a pity, that he should hinder his preferment, and expose himself to Ahab's resentment, by a needless or useless scrupulousness. He advised him to shew some deference to royalty; to have some respect to the other prophets; and not to affect singularity, or presume that he alone was divinely inspired. But he must have entertained most absurd notions concerning prophecy; either considering the whole to be a mere imposition; or supposing that the truth, will, and purpose of God, could be modelled according to the inclinations of man. If he thought that Micaiah, by speaking that which was good to Ahab, could promote the success of the enterprise, he must have been extremely ignorant. And it was still worse, if he advised Micaiah to please the king, without regard to consequences. Perhaps he concluded, that the unanimity and confidence, with which so great a number of prophets assured Ahab of success in the name of the LORD, proved them to be in the right; and that it would be foolish in Micaiah to oppose his single voice to such a multitude. And indeed, not only Ahab, but Jehoshaphat himself, seems to have been imposed upon by the same delusive argument; which, in one form or other, has been urged as cogent, if not unanswerable, by very able and sensible men, in every age of the church. 'He thought he could persuade 'Micaiah, not to dissent from the rest, lest he 'should fall under the censure of singularity, 'peevishness, and privacy of spirit. And thus it is 'in the church at this day.' Bp. Patrick.—Micaiah however at once silenced the courtier; and with a solemn oath protested, that he would deliver the message of JEHOVAH without any alteration, whatever the king thought of it, and whatever the other prophets might agree in.—A most noble example!

V. 15. Go, &c.] The prophet did not preface this address, with "Thus saith the LORD:" and Ahab evidently perceived that he did not speak with his usual decision and authority. It was, as if he had said, 'You intend to go up against Ra-'moth-gilead, and your prophets assure you of 'success; and if I do not, you will disregard my 'warning, and treat me as an enemy. But you 'have my good will and good wishes, if they could 'profit you: and if my conscience would allow me, 'I too could easily seek your favor, by saying, ' "Go, and prosper, for the LORD shall deliver it 'into the hand of the king."—You have a mind to 'go, and do so: try the truth of their prediction.'—Bp. Patrick. (Notes, 18:27—29. Ec. 11:9,10.)

V. 16. Ahab spake as if he had, on former occasions, thus adjured Micaiah to speak nothing to him, but "that which was true in the name of the Lord;" and with some intimation, that the prophet needed such adjurations. He evidently aimed to be thought, especially by Jehoshaphat, exceedingly solicitous about discovering the will of God. Perhaps Micaiah hesitated, till repeatedly urged to speak: and some think, that he did not receive his message, till the very moment before he delivered it.—The adjuring a person to speak, was equivalent to putting him upon his oath; and calling on him, as in the presence and by the authority of God, to speak all he knew. (Marg. Ref.—Note, Matt. 26:63—68.)

V. 17. This vision exactly represented the condition of Ahab's forces, after he was slain; and shewed, that Ben-hadad, his pride and revenge being gratified by Ahab's death, would allow the Israelites, when vanquished, and scattered without a leader, to return home in peace. (Marg. Ref.—Note, 36.)

V. 18. Ahab aimed to persuade Jehoshaphat and himself, that this warning originated from Micaiah's malignity and enmity to him, being similar to the messages which he had formerly delivered; and therefore, that it ought not to be put in competition with the predictions of all the other prophets. (Notes, 21:17—19. Prov. 29:1. Jer. 38:1—6.)

V. 19—23. In order to leave this hardened criminal without excuse, and to give a salutary instruction and warning to others in future ages, Micaiah received and related this vision.—It is not requisite to inquire particularly, concerning what passes in that world, where the Lord unveils his glory; for truths, rather than facts, are revealed in such representations. (Note, Job 1:6.)—God had doomed Ahab to fall at Ramoth-gilead, by the army of Ben-hadad, whom he had sinfully spared. (Notes, 20:31—34,41,42.) In order to bring him thither, he was pleased to give an evil spirit leave to impose on him, with the hopes of success in that expedition. "The devil and his angels" are always ready for such attempts, and generally use false prophets and teachers as their ministers. (Note, 2 Cor. 11:13—15.) This method the lying spirit proposed upon the present occasion, and prevailed against Ahab, by inducing all his prophets to assure him of victory. And by permitting him to do this, "the LORD put a lying spirit in the mouth of all his prophets." (22) He neither commanded nor inclined the lying spirit to tempt Ahab's prophets; nor did he put the wickedness into their hearts, or the lies into their mouths. He likewise gave Ahab fair warning; and if he had not hated the truth, and loved a lie, he would not have gone to Ramoth-gilead: but God foresaw he would go, and would perish there.—The prophet "saw the LORD sitting upon his throne," and that made him disregard Ahab upon his throne, and not fear his frown and vengeance; nor the resentment of the four hundred prophets, who must have been enraged, even to madness, at being thus publicly declared to be the ministers of the devil, to deceive and persuade their king to his destruction. (Marg. Ref.—Notes, Ez. 14:1—11. 2 Thes. 2:8—12.)

Persuade. (20) יְפַתֶּה. In piel פָּתָה persuasit, seduxit: Suadere, veris rationibus, vel falsis, et sic est decipere. Hinc πειθω suadeo. Robertson Judg. 14:15. 16:5. Jer. 20:7. Heb. (Notes, Gen 9:27. Jer. 20:7—9.)

V. 24, 25. (Note, 10,11.) Zedekiah seems to have been the principal person among Ahab's prophets: he therefore highly resented Micaiah's words, and both reviled and smote him in the presence of the king and his nobles; (Marg. Ref. q.) nay, in the presence of Jehoshaphat; and yet he met with no rebuke! As one who would appear confident, that he spake by the Spirit of the LORD, he inquired, when and how that Spirit left him to inspire Micaiah. But the prophet meekly answered, that the event would determine which of them spake by the Spirit of God; and he would not need information on that head, when he should conceal himself in the closest recess, "a chamber," or closet, "within a chamber," (marg.) for fear of those who sought his life. Probably Zedekiah accompanied Ahab to the war, and this prediction was fulfilled when he fled from the enemy, after Ahab's death. Then he would have leisure to reflect on his own impiety, and the fatal effects of his counsel to his king, for whom he had pretended great friendship. (Notes, Jer. 28:9—17. Ez. 13:6—16. Am. 7:10—13.)—He would hide himself, 'for fear he should be seized, and 'punished as a false prophet, and the cause of 'Ahab's death.' Bp. Patrick.

V. 26, 27. Ahab sent Micaiah back to the persons, who had him before in custody, one of whom was "Joash, the king's son:" yet nothing is elsewhere said of a son of Ahab, of that name. To these, however, he sent orders, to "put him in the prison," some place of closer confinement than before; (Note, 9.) and there to treat him with severity in respect of his sustenance, and in other respects, until he should return in peace, probably intending then to put him to death, as a false prophet. Ahab forgot his own counsel to Ben-hadad, when he spake so confidently of returning in peace. (20:11.)

by me. And he said, [a] Hearken, O people, every one of you.

[Practical Observations.]

29 ¶ So [b] the king of Israel, and Jehoshaphat the king of Judah, went up to Ramoth-gilead.

30 And the king of Israel said unto Jehoshaphat, [*] I will disguise myself, and enter into the battle; but [c] put thou on thy robes. And the king of Israel [d] disguised himself, and went into the battle.

31 But the king of Syria commanded his [e] thirty and two captains that had rule over his chariots, saying, [f] Fight neither with [g] small nor great, save only with the king of Israel.

32 And it came to pass, when the captains of the chariots saw Jehoshaphat, that they said, Surely it is the king of Israel. And they turned aside to fight against him: and [h] Jehoshaphat cried out.

33 And it came to pass, when the captains of the chariots perceived that it was not the king of Israel, [i] that they turned back from pursuing him.

34 And a certain man drew a bow [†] at a venture, [k] and smote the king of Israel between the [‡] joints of the harness: wherefore he said unto the driver of his chariot, Turn thine hand, and carry me out of the host; for I am [§] wounded.

35 And the battle [‖] increased that day: and the king was stayed up in his chariot against the Syrians, and [l] died at even: and the blood ran out of the wound into the [¶] midst of the chariot.

36 And [m] there went a proclamation throughout the host about the going down of the sun, saying, [n] Every man to his city, and every man to his own country.

37 So the king died, and [] was brought to Samaria; and they buried the king in Samaria.

38 And one washed the chariot in the pool of Samaria, [o] and the dogs licked up his blood, and they washed his armor, according unto the word of the LORD which he spake.

39 Now [p] the rest of the acts of Ahab, and all that he did, and [q] the ivory house which he made, and all the cities that he built, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Israel?

V. 28. Micaiah thus put the difference between himself and Ahab's prophets to the test, and made his appeal to the people at large; that, if the king despised the word of God, they might from his fate learn to reverence it. (Notes, 18:36, 37. Num. 16:28—34.)—People.] עַמִּים, peoples, meaning both the men of Judah who attended Jehoshaphat, and those of Israel.

V. 29. Jehoshaphat's silent connivance at Ahab's treatment of Micaiah, and his willingness to go with him to battle, after these solemn warnings, were very criminal, and almost unaccountable. Perhaps he feared personal insults; or he persuaded himself that in Ahab's court he had no business to intermeddle; or, matters were carried with such violence and precipitation, that he had scarcely time to reflect on his own conduct. (Note, 7.)

V. 30. Perhaps Ahab was secretly alarmed by the solemnity of Micaiah's address, though he scorned to desist from his enterprise; or he was aware, that he should be peculiarly aimed at by the Syrian forces. Under pretence of honoring Jehoshaphat as with the chief command, he made this insidious proposal, that by exposing him to the greatest danger he might favor his own escape. (Note, 2 Chr. 18:29.) Such was his friendship! But Jehoshaphat meant no harm, and suspected none: yet in such a case, the wisdom of the serpent was as needful, as the harmlessness of the dove. (Notes, Matt. 10:16—18. 1 Cor. 14:20—25, v. 20.)

V. 31. (20:24.) Some have imagined, that Benhadad wished to wipe off the disgrace of his own captivity, by making Ahab prisoner in return; and to reciprocate his kindness, in liberating him without ransom. (Note, 20:31—34.) But his proud heart seems to have rankled with a far more malignant resentment; and Ahab's triumphant success against him had excited such hatred, as no subsequent kindness could erase.

V. 32—35. Jehoshaphat in extreme danger cried unto the LORD, and he wonderfully preserved him. '"They turned back from pursuing 'him;" which was to be ascribed to the secret 'providence of God, ... who resolved as wonder-'fully to preserve Jehoshaphat, as to destroy 'Ahab.' Bp. Patrick. (Note, 2 Chr. 18:30—34, v. 31. 19:1,2.) But Ahab, notwithstanding all his precaution, could not escape the destined blow. The captains of Ben-hadad knew not where to seek for him: but an arrow shot at random by a Syrian was directed by God, to penetrate the joints of his breast-plate, or coat of mail, and to give him a mortal wound.—"Joints of the harness" in the text, seems less proper than the marginal reading.—Perhaps Ahab did not think that the wound would prove fatal, and was unwilling to intimidate his forces by wholly leaving the field of battle; and therefore probably having retired that his wound might be dressed, he returned, and remained in his chariot till he died.

V. 36. When Ahab's death was known, either Jehoshaphat, or those who succeeded in command, issued this proclamation, probably with reference to Micaiah's vision. (Note, 17.)

V. 38. Note, 21:17—19.

V. 39. Ivory house.] It cannot be supposed, that this house was built of ivory: but it was so inlaid and ornamented with ivory, that it thence derived its principal elegance, or magnificence. (Marg. Ref. q.)

40 So Ahab [r] slept with his fathers; and [s] Ahaziah his son reigned in his stead.

41 ¶ And [t] Jehoshaphat the son of [B. C. 914.] Asa began to reign over Judah in the fourth year of Ahab king of Israel.

42 Jehoshaphat was [u] thirty and five years old when he began to reign; and he reigned twenty and five years in Jerusalem: [x] and his mother's name was Azubah, the daughter of Shilhi.

43 And [y] he walked in all the ways of Asa his father, [z] he turned not aside from it, [a] doing that which was right in the eyes of the LORD: nevertheless [b] the high places were not taken away; for the people offered and burnt incense yet in the high places.

44 And Jehoshaphat [c] made peace with the king of Israel.

45 Now [d] the rest of the acts of Jehoshaphat, and his might that he shewed, and how he warred, [e] are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Judah?

46 And [f] the remnant of the sodomites, which remained in the days of his father Asa, he took out of the land.

47 There was then [g] no king in Edom: a deputy was king.

48 [h] Jehoshaphat * made [i] ships of Tharshish to go [k] to Ophir for gold: but [l] they went not; for the ships were broken at [m] Ezion-geber.

49 Then said Ahaziah the son of Ahab unto Jehoshaphat, Let my servants go with thy servants in the ships: but Jehoshaphat would not.

50 And Jehoshaphat [n] slept with [B. C. 989.] his fathers, and was buried with his fathers [o] in the city of David his father: and [p] Jehoram his son reigned in his stead.

51 ¶ Ahaziah the son of Ahab [B. C. 897.] [q] began to reign over Israel in Samaria, the seventeenth year of Jehoshaphat king of Judah, and reigned [r] two years over Israel.

52 And [s] he did evil in the sight of the LORD, and walked in the way of his father, and [t] in the way of his mother, [u] and in the way of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, who made Israel to sin.

53 For [x] he served Baal, and worshipped him, and [y] provoked to anger the LORD God of Israel, [z] according to all that his father had done.

V. 41—45. Perhaps this general account is here given, of Jehoshaphat's reign over Judah, in order to contrast it with Ahab's wicked reign over Israel. The chief blemish in Jehoshaphat's character and conduct is hinted at, when it is said, "He made peace with the king of Israel:" not merely engaging to avoid all hostile measures; but entering into the most intimate alliance with him, and confirming the treaty by marrying his son to Ahab's daughter, which introduced much idolatry and wickedness into Judah, brought great calamities on the inhabitants, and occasioned the almost entire ruin of Jehoshaphat's family. (Marg. Ref.—Notes, 2—5. 2 Chr. 17:—20:)

High places. (43) 'This error was so deeply 'rooted, that the best of the kings, till Hezekiah's 'time, ... connived at it.' Bp. Patrick. (Notes, 2 Kings 18:4,22. 2 Chr. 31:1.)

V. 46. 15:12. Notes, 14:22—24. Deut. 23:17,18.

V. 47. David had conquered Edom; and it is probable, that till this time the nominal king of Edom had been merely a viceroy of the kings of Judah. (Marg. Ref.—Note, 2 Sam. 8:13,14.)

V. 48, 49. Jehoshaphat at first joined with Ahaziah, and lost his fleet: but, being reproved by a prophet, he would not consent to Ahaziah's proposals the second time. (Note, 2 Chr. 20:35—37.) These ships of Tharshish were made to go to Ophir: yet it is said in Chronicles, they were "made to go to Tarshish." Was there not therefore a Tarshish near Ophir, as well as a place of that name in Spain? (Note, 10:22.)

V. 51. Jehoshaphat began to reign in the fourth year of Ahab, who reigned twenty and two years; (41) yet Ahaziah succeeded Ahab, in the seventeenth year of Jehoshaphat. This occasions some difficulty: but learned men suppose, that the chronology of the kings of Israel was adjusted to that of the kings of Judah. Now Ahab began to reign, after Asa had entered on his thirty-eighth year, and Asa died before the end of his forty-first year. (16:29. 2 Chr. 16:13.) And Jehoshaphat began to reign in the same year, which thus was reckoned both to Asa and Jehoshaphat. Ahab therefore is computed to have reigned four years in Asa's time, and eighteen in Jehoshaphat's, including a part of the year in which Asa died, and in which Jehoshaphat succeeded him: though Ahab did not live till Jehoshaphat had fully completed his seventeenth year; having died nearer the beginning of the year, than Asa had done.—It is difficult to make this intelligible to persons not acquainted with the Jewish method of computing time; who, (whether in days or years,) take in both the first and last of the account, as if entire, even though only a small part of each had actually passed. Thus Ahaziah, having reigned part of the seventeenth year of Jehoshaphat, and part of the eighteenth, (for he died in the eighteenth,) is said to have reigned two years. (Note, 16:8—14.)

V. 52, 53. Marg. Ref.—Notes, 2 Kings 1:—Baal, &c. (53) 'Which worship had been intro-'duced by his mother Jezebel; beyond the impi-'ety of Jeroboam. Taking no warning by the 'hand of God against his father, which was very 'remarkable; nor believing the dreadful threat-'enings of Elijah against his mother, and their 'whole family.' Bp. Patrick. (Notes, 21:17—23.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—9.

They, who neglect the word of God to rely on the promises of ungodly men, generally meet with merited disappointment: but this does not excuse the treachery and ingratitude of those, who deceive and injure the very persons, that have been criminally kind to them.—There are certain critical seasons, when advantages are placed within our reach: but if we let the opportunity pass we shall in vain attempt to recal it, and our endeavors will only serve to increase our losses. (Note, Ec. 8:6,7.)—Wicked men court the friendship of the righteous, when they can render their assistance subservient to their own purposes: but their professions of regard must be insincere.—That same compliant spirit, which betrays some pious persons into amity with the declared enemies of religion, renders the connexion peculiarly dangerous to them: they are perpetually persuaded to improper concessions of every kind; and induced to connive at, and even sanction, such converse and conduct, as they ought decidedly to protest against: and the fear of being deemed uncourteous, and the desire of escaping censure, ridicule, or insult, for their religious peculiarities, stop their mouths, and cause them to deviate from sincerity in their expressions of civility or courteousness. Yet these alone are the godly persons whose acquaintance the men of the world will much desire. If, however, we are necessarily placed among profane or infidel characters; we must not yield either to fear or shame, so as to conceal our dependence on God and devotedness to him; for these mark the difference "between those who serve him, and those who serve him not."—If it were to be decided by vote, what is the true religion, we see plainly, that those abominations which God abhors would gain the election, against that worship which he has instituted. Even in the visible church, numbers, authority, and unanimity, have repeatedly been in favor of delusions, nay, destructive heresies, and abominable idolatries, against a single poor despised prophet of the Lord!—It is indeed, in a worldly sense, worth while, for a man of competent talents and address, to employ himself in reconciling men's consciences to their inclinations; and if great men cannot discard their religious scruples, to enable them, by help of some false system, to render them subservient to the commission of sin without remorse. In some places and at some times, rich false prophets will be well paid for their decisions: and those, who from ambition, avarice, or sensuality, "turn away their ears from the truth," and "cannot endure sound doctrine," will heap to themselves teachers of this kind, after their own lusts:" (Note, 2 Tim. 4:1—5, vv. 3,4.) that the agreement of so many ministers may embolden them to disregard those singular and uncourteous persons, who are always robbing them of their comfort, and putting them upon an unnecessary strictness. A few individuals indeed hint, that something is wanting in their favorite instructers; nay, prefer such as they dislike. But then, are not these too scrupulous? Do they not carry matters too far? Do they make proper allowances for human frailty, and peculiar situations? Thus eventually smooth doctrine, united with confidence, ingenuity, and courtly manners, obtains the preference, and opens the way to the favor of the great and of the many. The faithful servants of God must therefore lay their account with hatred, contempt, and insult. They know not to give flattering words, or to call base crimes by soft names, or to buoy up the hopes of hypocrites with insinuating falsehoods: they cannot be silent, when called to speak; but must declare the counsel of God, and not keep back any thing profitable, however displeasing. Their conscientiousness will often be ascribed to pride and obstinacy; the language of their tender compassion for souls will be called severity or malevolence; and their plain-dealing will be branded as insolence and ill-manners. But they must commit their cause to God: and wicked men, who hate them for the truth's sake, will at length find, that they were their own enemies in so doing, and that in opposing them they strove against the Almighty.

V. 10—28.

Unprincipled teachers are sufficiently pliable in matters of religion: they carefully avoid the imputation of bigotry; they make great pretensions to candor, and even treat the most fundamental truths of Revelation, as matters of indifference or uncertainty: but the same men are exceedingly tenacious of their own interests, and stubborn in their own concerns. Whereas we ought to be as pliant as the willow, where our own ease, credit, advantage, or indulgence are at stake; and as firm as the sturdy oak, in standing up for the great things, which relate to the glory of God, and the salvation of souls.—Those who are rising in the world, or possessed of wealth, are apt to counsel the ministers of Christ, what they ought to speak in the name of the LORD; though they betray their own ignorance and love of the world by every word. We should indeed be accessible and teachable, and willing to take a friendly hint from any man: but when others would persuade us to consult our own ease and interest, to shun the cross, to prefer courtesy to integrity, and to bend the word of God to the humors of the rich and great; we must recognise the tempter in such counsellors, and by peremptory language stop at once their insidious proposals, by declaring our determination, whatever others do, to adhere to what we consider as the truth and will of our Lord and Judge. (Notes, Am. 7:12—17. Matt. 16:21—23.)—In some cases however we should not be forward to speak: when men evidently do not wish to hear the truth, and appear determinately set against our testimony, it may be enough to express our compassionate good will, and our fears for them; or to shew our disapprobation by silence. But if we are fairly called upon to give our sentiments, we must do it with all seriousness and firmness, without regarding personal consequences.—A believing view of the presence and glory of the King of Heaven, will raise us above the fear of our fellow-creatures, however powerful or enraged; and will enable us to commit ourselves to his protection, in the discharge of our duty, in the midst of apparent danger. But we must not expect exemption from hardship and ill usage; and need not wonder, if we eat the bread of affliction, and are even rewarded with blows, imprisonment, and cruel mockings: and when princes, false teachers, and apostates unite against the servants of God, even the remnant of his people will often be afraid to interfere in their behalf.—Alas! how should we be ashamed to complain of what we in this day call trials, when we consider what the servants of God formerly endured! Yet it will be well, if our exemption from trouble prove not more injurious to us, than persecutions did to them: for we are more easily allured and bribed into unfaithfulness and conformity to the world, than influenced by terrors and threats. Let us then watch and pray, and prepare for temptations of every kind: and be careful that the quietness of our enemies do not arise from our making too many concessions, and going upon their ground, to meet them half way, in order to form the worst of all coalitions.—Nothing can by any means harm us, if we continue faithful, and meekly valiant for the truth: the Lord will remove every aspersion from our characters, and bear testimony to his truth, in his due time: and some will profit by our warnings, though others rush headlong on ruin.—Little do unbelievers suspect how many legions of crafty, malicious, and powerful enemies are unwearied in plotting their destruction; restrained by no hand, but that of him whom they despise and disobey. (P. O. Job 1:6—12.)—The whole multitude of those, "who privily bring in damnable heresies," or propagate infidelity with vast industry and ingenuity, speak and write no other things, than are suggested to them by the prompter behind the curtain. Let us then fear suppressing our convictions, and returning back to sin after professions of repentance, lest Satan should thus prevail against us. For if he obtain leave to deceive, the disposition of our hearts to prefer a flattering lie, to a humbling truth that opposes our inclinations, will give him such an advantage, that every attempt of others to prevent his success, will only exasperate the mind to persecution or blasphemy.

V. 29—53.

Those, who are rebellious against God, and injurious to his people, will not often be very faithful or grateful to their friends. Self-love is their supreme principle, to which all other considerations must be sacrificed; and the children of God are seldom so politic as the children of the wicked one. When, however, the Lord has rebuked his offending people, he will mark that difference between them and his enemies, which they did not sufficiently observe. "His eyes are upon the righteous, and his ears are open to their prayers: but his face is against the workers of iniquity." None "can hide themselves in secret places from him." That which is casual to man, is the appointment of God, to fulfil his word of mercy or of wrath; so that, "men shall say, This hath God wrought, for they shall perceive that it is his work." The deceiver and deceived are his, and the flatterer and flattered shall be taken in the same net, and fall into the same destruction. Alas! what will all riches, monuments, or splendid achievements avail, when God shall require the sinner's soul? Happy are they in death, who have served him in their generation: but the best of mere men, nay their best actions, are so defective, if not defiled, that "blessed is he" alone "whose iniquity is forgiven, and whose sin is covered." Yet sincere endeavors to do good are the proper evidences and effects of saving faith: and the concurring reproofs of God's word and rod will lead the upright believer to repent of every transgression, and to bring forth fruits meet for repentance: whilst hardened sinners rush forward, unawed and unmoved, in the ways which have led others before them into everlasting misery.

THE

SECOND BOOK OF THE KINGS,

COMMONLY CALLED

THE FOURTH BOOK OF THE KINGS.

This book is merely a continuation of the preceding, to which it is joined in the Hebrew Canon: the remarks therefore already made on that, in a great measure apply to this.—It contains the history of above three hundred years.—In Israel the kings were uniformly idolatrous and wicked: and, though the labors of Elijah, Elisha, and other prophets, were prospered to preserve a considerable number of the people from the general contagion; yet the measure of their national iniquity was soon filled up; so that they were conquered and carried captive by the kings of the Assyrians, and dispersed among the Gentiles, no more, as a collected body, to be restored to their own land. Their country was after this, planted by the conquerors with a mingled people, who established a corrupt and partial worship of JEHOVAH, from whom originated the nation and religion of the Samaritans. These events began to take place considerably above a hundred years before the Babylonish captivity.—In Judah indeed some remarkable revivals of religion took place under the pious princes of David's family, and by means of the faithful labors of the prophets: but these promising appearances were of short duration; several of the kings were idolatrous and extremely wicked; the priests and Levites exceedingly neglected their important duty; and the people were generally prone to idolatry and iniquity. So that, after the death of pious Josiah, the nation became almost universally corrupt; and the melancholy account closes with the destruction of the city and temple, the desolation of the country, and the enslaving and carrying away of the inhabitants, by the Chaldeans.—As all the prophets, (commonly so called,) whose writings have been preserved, lived in the latter part of this period; (those excepted who lived during or after the captivity;) and as they continually refer to the facts recorded in this history; we may consider all their predictions as sanctioning, by their accomplishment, the divine authority of the narrative: though it does not contain any express prophecy, the completion of which extended much beyond the term of the return of the Jews from the Babylonish captivity.

CHAP. I.

Moab rebels against Israel, 1. Ahaziah, being sick, sends to inquire of Baal-zebub; and Elijah is sent by an angel to order the messengers to inform him, in the name of JEHOVAH, that he should surely die, 2—4. Ahaziah sends to apprehend Elijah, who twice calls down fire to consume those who came against him, 5—12. The captain of the third company sues for mercy; and Elijah, encouraged by an angel, goes to Ahaziah, and assures him that he would die at that time, 13—16. Ahaziah dies, and is succeeded by Jehoram, 17, 18.

tribute were transferred to the kings of Israel, as those of Edom remained to the kings of Judah. (Note, 1 Kings 22:47.) But after Ahab's death the Moabites revolted. (Marg. Ref.—Notes, 3:4—27. 2 Sam. 8:1,2.)

V. 2. The lattice, through which Ahaziah fell, is supposed to have had some curious ornamental net-work, which being decayed, gave way when he leaned upon it.—"Baal-zebub" signifies the lord of a fly, or flies. Probably, the country was grievously infested with swarms of flies, and the Ekronites fancied that their idol delivered or preserved them from these. (Note, Ex. 8:21.) Beelzebub, (which is the same name,) is called in the New Testament "the prince of the devils;" and hence we learn that, under these names and images, evil spirits were actually worshipped as gods. (Note, Matt. 12:22—24.)—The Baal generally worshipped in Israel at that time, was the god of the Zidonians; but Baal-zebub was the god of Ekron in Philistia: for they "had lords many, and gods many." It seems that his oracle was then in great repute, as that of Delphos was in Greece some ages afterwards.—Ahaziah did not send to inquire what he was to do in order to his recovery, but merely to know whether he should recover or not. (Notes, 8:7,8. 1 Kings 14:1—4.) Perhaps he had been making preparations for reducing the Moabites, and was impatient to march against them.

V. 3, 4. When a king of Israel sent to inquire of a heathen oracle, he proclaimed to the Gentiles his want of confidence in JEHOVAH: as if the only nation favored with revelation, and the knowledge of the true God, had been the only nation in which no God was known! This was peculiarly dishonorable and provoking to the Lord; (Notes, 5:8,15,16. 1 Kings 18:36,37. Ps. 76:1,2.) and therefore the Lord by his angel commissioned Elijah to answer the inquiry of the messengers, and to send them back to Ahaziah, with the solemn denunciation of his speedy death by the disease which confined him to his bed. The prophet accordingly went and met the messengers, and sent them back with this sentence. And he departed, yet did not conceal himself; but continued so near to the same place, that the captains and their soldiers readily found him. (9,10.)

V. 5, 6. The speedy return of the messengers convinced Ahaziah, that they had not gone to Ekron; and they punctually delivered the message of God, which Elijah had sent by them, without softening it in the least, or changing a word in it. Something peculiarly venerable in the appearance of the prophet, with the firm solemnity of his manner in speaking to them, seems to have overawed them; and probably they were convinced, that his words would be verified.

V. 8. Elijah was a hairy man, either in his person, or by reason of the coarseness and roughness of his garments, made perhaps of hair, and girded round him with a piece of undressed skin. In this manner he shewed his mortifiedness to the world, and expressed his concern and grief for the idolatry and iniquity of his people. (Note, Matt. 3:4.)

V. 9. This officer called Elijah a "man of God" by way of derision, not out of respect as others did.—Jezebel's name is not mentioned in this transaction; but probably she stirred up her son, as she formerly had done her husband, against the prophets of the Lord.

heaven, [x] and consumed him and his fifty.

11 [y] Again also he sent unto him another captain of fifty, with his fifty: and he answered and said unto him, [z] O man of God, thus hath the king said, Come down quickly.

12 And Elijah answered and said unto them, [a] If I be a man of God, let fire come down from heaven and consume thee and thy fifty. And the fire of God came down from heaven, and consumed him and his fifty.

13 And [b] he sent again a captain of the third fifty with his fifty: and the third captain of fifty went up, and came and [*] fell on his knees before Elijah, and [c] besought him, and said unto him, [d] O man of God, I pray thee, let my life, and the life of these fifty thy servants, be precious in thy sight.

14 Behold, there came fire down from heaven, and burnt up the two captains of the former fifties, with their fifties: therefore let my [e] life now be precious in thy sight.

15 And the angel of the LORD said unto Elijah, Go down with him; [f] be not afraid of him. And he arose, and went down with him unto the king.

16 And he said unto him, Thus saith the LORD, [g] Forasmuch as thou hast sent messengers to inquire of Baal-zebub the god of Ekron, is it not because there is no God in Israel to inquire of his word? therefore thou shalt not come down off that bed, on which thou art gone up, but shalt surely die.

17 So he died, according to the word of the LORD which Elijah had spoken: and Jehoram reigned in his stead, [h] in the second year of Jehoram the son of Jehoshaphat king of Judah; because he had no son.

V. 10. No doubt Elijah was moved, to call for fire from heaven on these men, by immediate revelation. He was influenced by a holy zeal for the honor of the Lord, which was attacked in his person as a man of God, by the worshippers of Baalim; for if he had been actuated by resentment or selfish passions, the fire from heaven would not have come at his word. (Notes, 2:23, 24. 2 Cor. 13:7—10.)—He had before demonstrated JEHOVAH to be the only true God, by fire from heaven consuming the sacrifice; (Notes, 1 Kings 18:32—39.) yet the nation in general, and especially the rulers, adhered to the worship of Baal: it was therefore proper, that they should receive a more awful proof; and be made sensible that all the enemies of the Lord would at length be destroyed. The officers and soldiers, who were slain, not only deserved death as idolaters, but doubtless they had been the instruments of Ahab and Jezebel in persecution: and the example would have salutary effects on many in Israel. (Notes, Dan. 3:19—23. Luke 9:51—56. Acts 12:18,19.)

V. 11, 12. It is hard to say, which was on this occasion the more wonderful, the madness of the wounded and enfeebled Ahaziah, when the report of the awful event reached him, or the presumption of this officer and his soldiers: for the second attempt was made in a more peremptory and haughty manner, than the foregoing. But perhaps the former calamity was ascribed to chance. 'Indeed it had so happened that terrible lightning, just at that moment, slew the captain and 'his fifty men.' None of the persons concerned appear to have been convinced, that JEHOVAH had sent the fire from heaven, for this express purpose, in answer to the words of Elijah. (Note, 1 Sam. 6:2—9.)

V. 13, 14. This officer had not courage to refuse obedience to the infatuated tyrant, who ordered him on this desperate service; and yet he dared not attempt any thing against Elijah: he therefore employed humble entreaties, with every expression of respect and submission; and in this manner his life and the lives of his soldiers were preserved. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 15, 16. Elijah had so exasperated Jezebel and her party, by putting the prophets of Baal to death; and by the awful sentence on Ahab and Jezebel, and the whole family, denounced in the vineyard of Naboth; that he had no further prospect of doing them good. In general he lived in a retired manner; and labored among the inferior inhabitants without exposing himself to the rage of the king: but on this occasion, he was especially commissioned to go to him, along with the captain and his fifty. And his presence and authoritative boldness in delivering in person the solemn message before sent by the messengers, so dismayed Ahaziah, that he did not attempt any thing against him: and shortly after he died, (17) according to Elijah's word, for attempting to consult a heathen oracle. (Note, 1 Chr. 10:13,14.)

V. 17. Jehoshaphat lived some time after this: it is therefore supposed that he admitted his son Jehoram to reign with him, eight or nine years before his death: and Jehoram the son of Ahab began to reign over Israel, in the second year of that term, or in the eighteenth year of Jehoshaphat. (Notes, 8:16,17. 1 Kings 22:51.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—8.

Man's revolt from God is often punished by the rebellion of those who owe subjection to him. —Death meets men in the most unexpected places and forms, but always under the direction of the all-wise and righteous God. If reconciled to him by faith in the Savior, and walking in his ways, "death is ours," and can never come in a wrong time or manner: but to the impenitent and unbelieving he is and must be "the king of terrors."—False religion amuses men's minds, and gratifies

CHAP. II.

Elijah when about to be translated, cannot induce Elisha not to attend him in his progress, 1—7. With his mantle he divides Jordan, and they pass over, 8. Elijah allows conditionally of Elisha's request of a double measure of the Spirit, and is taken to heaven in a fiery chariot, 9—11. Elisha takes up Elijah's mantle; smites and divides Jordan with it, and passes over; and is received as Elijah's successor, 12—15. The sons of the prophets in vain seek for Elijah, 16—18. Elisha heals with salt the bad waters of Jericho, 19—22. Bears destroy the children that mock him, 23—25.

AND it came to pass, when the LORD would [a] take up Elijah into heaven, [b] by a whirlwind, that Elijah went with [c] Elisha from [d] Gilgal.

2 And Elijah said unto Elisha, [e] Tarry here, I pray thee; for the LORD hath sent me to Beth-el. And Elisha said unto him, [f] As the LORD liveth, and as thy soul liveth, [g] I will not leave thee. So they went down to [h] Beth-el.

ı vain curiosity: but the Bible declares the way of acceptance, and the path of duty; and, without nforming us of the events of our future lives, or he time and manner of our death, it teaches us o be always ready; and instructs us how to be- ıave under every dispensation of Providence, and hus to find comfort under them all, and derive ıenefit from them.—With such instructions, and ccess to the mercy-seat of our God and Father, ve have no occasion to consult any of those ora- les, which pretend to unfold what God has been leased to conceal. The believer, assured by the ord of God that all things shall work together or his good, may rejoice in hope, and look for- ard with comfort: but the foreknowledge of the fflictions of future life, joined to the terror of nal misery, would mar the little enjoyment hich the unbeliever has in this world, and tor- ıent him before his time. (P. O. Gen. 15:12—21.) —Men are prone to act, as if there were no God; nd as if they were left to take care of themselves, s well as to spend their lives in following their wn inclinations: hence they are so readily in- uced to yield to every temptation, and to make apid progress in wickedness, when in pursuit of he objects which they idolize, or when afraid of osing them.—Those who would be valiant for the ruth, and in the cause of God, before the great nes of this world, must learn temperance, and rugality; and evince that they neither envy nor ovet their luxuries and embellishments, but are ıdifferent about all other things, compared with ne glory of God and the salvation of immortal ouls.

V. 9—18.

The conduct of some persons, as impartially re- orded in the word of God, appears so infatuated, ıat we should scarcely be able to credit the ac- ount, did we not sometimes witness actions qually unaccountable. Often has it been ob- erved, that men upon a death-bed, and aware ıat they could not recover, have appeared more rifling, profane, avaricious, morose, fierce, or ruel, than at any former period: so that those round them have been tempted, by their intoler- ble conduct, to wish them dead before the hour rrived! Some have even seemed to regret with heir dying lips, that they could do no more mis- hief in the world before they left it! And in ıany other ways men are continually acting in a ıanner inexplicable, except upon the principles f the wise man; "The heart of the sons of men is ull of evil, and madness is in their heart whilst hey live, and after that they go to the dead." Notes, Ec. 9:1—3. Matt. 2:16—18.)—Haugh- y persecutors will always meet with wretches, eady to execute their most impious and desperate ıandates: and when providential mercies, means f grace, warnings and corrections, leave them hus desperate in enmity against God and his ser- ants, we may be confident that vengeance slum- ereth not.—If the wicked face death in its most remendous forms, to obtain or preserve the favor f an earthly prince, whose "breath goeth forth, and he returneth to his dust, and all his thoughts perish;" what danger and hardship ought we not to welcome in the service of the everlasting God, who can give us the gracious recompense of eter- nal life. (Notes, Ps. 146:3—6.)—There are proper seasons for different methods of behaving towards sinners, and we must ask wisdom of God to direct us: and, as the same action may be either right or wrong, according to the principle from which it springs, we should look well to our own spirits, and be candid in judging our brethren. It is, however, our general rule, "not to be overcome of evil, but to overcome evil with good."—The judgments of God under the Christian dispensa- tion are commonly spiritual: and the more mildly we behave to those, who insult and injure us for the Lord's sake, the more terrible punishment will he at length inflict upon them. But our God is ever ready to forgive the humble supplicant, however rebellious he has been; and the way to prevail with him is to bow before him. We there- fore should be followers of him, and be ready to pray for and favor our bitterest enemies, especial- ly when under any alarm of conscience they en- treat us so to do.—We may safely venture into the presence of our most enraged foes, when he requires us, who has all hearts in his hand: the courage of faith has often struck terror into the heart of the proudest sinner: how then shall any be able to stand before God, when he arises to execute judgment? His words will surely take effect: and while some sinners, being long spared, increase their own condemnation; others are cut off speedily, and hurried into destruction. Both are intended to warn others to seek the Lord whilst he may be found: and his servants will, one way or other, survive and witness the destruction of all his enemies.

NOTES.

CHAP. II. V. 1. None, Enoch alone excepted, had ever been favored with exemption from the general sentence denounced against sinful man, "Dust thou art, and to dust shalt thou return." (Note, Gen. 5:22—24. P. O. 21—32.) But the Lord had given Elijah some previous intimations, that he intended thus to distinguish him, and that the day was at hand. (Note, 1 Kings 19:3,4.) At that time, he and Elisha were at Gilgal: (Notes, Josh. 5:9. 10:7,40—43.) and thence Elijah went in circuit to several of the schools of the prophets in different places, to give them his parting exhortations and blessing. Doubtless most of them were established, and all of them were superintended, by him. (Note, 1 Kings 19: 20,21.)—It is not known how old Elijah was, when translated.

V. 2. Elijah might intend by this proposal to make trial of the strength of Elisha's attachment; or perhaps he longed for retirement, and shunned ostentation. But Elisha expressed his determina- tion to enjoy the pleasure and reap the benefit of his company to the last; and, if it might be, to witness his translation: and this he confirmed with a most solemn asseveration. (Notes, Ruth 1:16, 17. 2 Sam. 15:18—22.)—As the life and soul of man entirely depend on God, to mention them in a solemn oath, either alone, or along with him, was deemed equivalent to swearing by the name of the LORD. (Notes, Matt. 5:33—37. 23:16—22.)

V. 3. Beth-el.] (Marg. Ref.—Notes, 1 Kings 12:26—33. 13:1,2.) 'In that place where the gold-'en calves were worshipped, God ... continued the 'schools of the prophets among them. For by "the sons of the prophets" are meant the scholars of the prophets, whom they educated and trained 'up in religion and piety. And God ... bestowed 'on some of them the Spirit of prophecy. ... This 'was a great testimony of God's love to an apos-'tate people. ... And it is still more remarkable, 'that prophets of greater excellency for miracles 'were continued in Israel, than were in Judah; 'because they needed them more. ... It seems to 'me very probable, that these "sons of the proph-'ets" were such ministers to the prophets, as the 'evangelists were to the apostles; whom the proph-'ets sent to publish their prophecies and instruc-'tions to the people, where they could not go 'themselves.' Bp. Patrick.—"The sons of the prophets" at Bethel, and other places had received a divine intimation, that Elijah was on that day to be taken from them: and as Elisha was next in precedency after Elijah, sitting nearest under him, or at his feet, while he delivered his instructions; he would be considered as their superintendent, when his master was taken "from his head," or from above him. (Note, Acts 22:1—5.) —Elisha however, would not allow them to interrupt the composure of Elijah's mind at this solemn season by any lamentations: it is probable, that he forbad them publicly to speak of it, lest multitudes should be collected to witness the event; or he counselled them to be calm, and not to disquiet themselves, for the Lord would make up the loss.

V. 6. 'He hoped for some great blessing from 'him, when he was carried up to heaven; and 'therefore continued firm in his resolution, to at-'tend that wonderful change.' Bp. Patrick. (Note 9,10.)

V. 7, 8. These fifty men seem to have hoped to witness Elijah's translation, but this favor was granted only to Elisha. They, however, saw Jordan twice divided, first before Elijah and Elisha, and then afterwards before Elisha alone, by smiting the waters with Elijah's mantle. (Notes, 14. Josh. 3:15—17.)

Mantle. (8) אַדֶּרֶת. In all the places, where this word is used, the LXX translate it μηλωτη, a sheep-skin. Heb. 11:37. Gr. (Note, 1:8.)

V. 9, 10. Elisha was thus reminded to make his request before Elijah was taken from him: for the prophet did not give the least intimation of being prayed to as an intercessor, after he was gone to heaven; nay, his words imply the contrary, in a very decisive manner. If the request were not made before he was taken away, it would afterwards be too late. Elisha, therefore, knowing the efficacy of Elijah's prayer, desired him to ask for him a double portion of his spirit. (Notes, Num. 11:25—29. 27:18. 1 Kings 3:5—14.) He seems only to have meant a double portion of the Spirit of prophecy, and of wisdom, courage, faith, and grace, to what was ordinarily bestowed upon the prophets: but as he was to succeed so eminent a person in a most important work, and in arduous times, his desires and expectations might be enlarged by zeal for the honor of God, and for the revival of true religion; so that he was led to use words, which may signify even double the portion which Elijah had possessed: and Elijah's answer seems to imply, that this was the import of them. —It appears from the history, that Elisha wrought twice as many miracles as Elijah had done: and being more constantly among the people, as their example and instructer, for above sixty years from his first calling by Elijah, he seems to have been favored with more extensive usefulness than he; though in other respects he may be considered as his inferior. (Note, 13:14.) Thus our Lord appeared [y] a chariot of fire, and horses of fire, and parted them both asunder; and Elijah went up [z] by a whirlwind [a] into heaven.

12 And Elisha [b] saw it, and he cried, [c] My father, my father, the chariot of Israel, and the horsemen thereof. And he saw him no more: and he took hold of his own clothes, and [e] rent them in two pieces.

13 He took up also [f] the mantle of Elijah that fell from him, and went back, and stood by the * bank of Jordan;

14 And he took the mantle of Elijah that fell from him, and [g] smote the waters, and said, [h] Where is the LORD God of Elijah? And when he also had smitten the waters, they parted hither and thither; and Elisha went over.

15 And when the sons of the prophets, which were [i] to view at Jericho, saw him, they said, [j] The Spirit of Elijah doth rest on Elisha. And they came to meet him, and [k] bowed themselves to the ground before him:

16 And they said unto him, Behold now, there be with thy servants fifty † strong men; let them go, we pray thee, and seek thy master; lest peradventure [l] the Spirit of the LORD hath taken him up, and cast him upon ‡ some mountain, or into some valley. And he said, Ye shall not send.

17 And when [m] they urged him till he was ashamed, he said, Send. They sent therefore fifty men; and they sought three days, but [n] found him not.

18 And when they came again to him, (for he tarried at Jericho,) he said unto them, Did I not say unto you, Go not?

V. 11. (Marg. Ref.—Note, 1.) Elijah's transation was doubtless performed by the ministraion of angels, who caused the appearances and ffects here described. The event was a distinuished honor put upon one, who had been peuliarly zealous for the honor of God, and had entured all consequences in his cause, by oposing the idolatry of an apostate and persecutng age and nation. It was a public attestation f the doctrine of a future state of retributions, or the encouragement of God's suffering people; nd it was also a prefiguration of the Redeemr's ascension. (Notes, Luke 24:50—53. Acts 1: —12.)—The prophet had on one occasion pasionately wished to die; but the Lord was graiously pleased to deal with him better than his ishes. He had passed over Jordan to his native ountry, and was conferring with Elisha, perhaps bout the joys of heaven, or the interests of true eligion in Israel, when they were thus suddenly nterrupted and separated.

V. 12. The manner in which Elijah was taken way, amidst his most interesting discourse, ust have been exceedingly affecting to Elisha, ho could not but congratulate his felicity. But e had lost one whom he loved and revered as a ther; and Israel had lost a reformer, whose bors and prayers did more to preserve the naon from ruin. than chariots and horsemen, howver numerous, could have done: and on these ccounts he grieved, and expressed his regret y rending his clothes. (Note, 13:14.) Nor was he reconciled to his own and the public loss, by being the president of all the schools of the prophets, or by being assured of a double portion of Elijah's Spirit.

V. 13. The prophet went to heaven in the body; yet, as a token of the different state into which he was entered, and the change which had taken place, he dropped his mantle or upper garment. (Notes, 1 Cor. 15:50—54. 2 Cor. 5:1 —4.) Elisha had been first called to attend Elijah, by the casting of his mantle over him; and he now received and valued this mantle, as a token of his receiving a double portion of his Spirit. (Notes, 9,10. 1 Kings 19:19.)

V. 14. Elisha was inwardly moved to make trial, whether Elijah's words were indeed fulfilled to him; and whether the LORD God, who had wrought such miracles by Elijah, and had just before divided the waters of Jericho when he smote them with his mantle, was with him in like manner. The original is more expressive than the translation, and may be rendered, "Where is JEHOVAH, the God of Elijah, even He?" He is still with me: though Elijah be not here, the God of Elijah is. (Notes, Josh. 3:7 Matt. 28:19,20.)

V. 15. These "sons of the prophets" had witnessed the division of Jordan, both by Elijah, and afterwards by Elisha; (Note, 7,8.) thence they concluded, that the Spirit of Elijah rested on Elisha; and by bowing to the ground before him, they gave him honor as their superintendent from that time.

V. 16—18. These sons of the prophets might think, that even in case Elijah was finally taken from them, his soul alone was gone to heaven and that his body might be found, and buried with due honor: but perhaps they also doubted, whether he was really removed; or had only and put [q] salt therein: and they brought it to him.

21 And he went forth unto the spring of the waters, and [r] cast the salt in there, and said, Thus saith the LORD, [s] I have healed these waters: [t] there shall not be from thence any more death or barren land.

22 So the waters were healed unto this day, according to the saying of Elisha which he spake.

23 ¶ And he went up from thence unto [u] Beth-el: and as he was going up by the way, there came forth [x] little children out of the city, and [y] mocked him, and said unto him, [z] Go up, thou bald head; go up, thou bald head.

24 And he turned back, and looked on them, and [a] cursed them in the name of the LORD: and there came forth two [b] she bears out of the wood, and tare forty and two [c] children of them.

25 And he went from thence to [d] mount Carmel; and from thence he returned to Samaria.

been carried to some other place in a supernatural manner, as he seems to have been on former occasions. (Marg. Ref.—Note, 1 Kings 18:12—16.) Elisha, however, might fear lest they should suspect, if he persisted in refusing their request, that he was influenced by an undue desire of filling Elijah's honorable place; and the event tended to establish his authority.

V. 19—22. Jericho had not long before been rebuilt, in defiance of the curse which Joshua had denounced against him who ventured to rebuild it; and it is probable, that the pleasantness of the situation had been the inducement. (Note, 1 Kings 16:34.) But, as an evidence of God's displeasure, the water was unwholesome; and, perhaps in consequence, the ground, (though not otherwise deficient in fertility,) had the property of causing the cattle to cast their young; and as some think, the immature fruit to fall from the trees. It is not unlikely, that similar effects were produced on the women also. (Marg.) But, as the inhabitants had admitted a seminary of prophets among them, these tokens of the divine displeasure were miraculously removed.—The new cruse, and the salt, could have no natural efficacy to heal the water, and remove the bad property of the land: but were merely signs of JEHOVAH's powerful operation. (Marg. Ref.—Notes, 4:40,41. 6:1—7. Ez. 47:11. Matt. 5:13.)

V. 23, 24. Several learned men have endeavored to prove, that these offenders were not children, but grown up persons: and, no doubt the first word (נְעָרִים), rendered children, is often used in that sense. The addition, however, of the word rendered little, seems clearly to evince, that they were not men, but young boys, who had been trained up in idolatry, and taught to despise the prophets of the Lord. They had heard that Elijah was "gone up" to heaven, and they insultingly bade Elisha follow him, that they might be rid of him also; and they reviled him for the baldness of his head. Thus they united the crimes of abusing him for a supposed bodily infirmity, contemptuous behavior towards a venerable person, and enmity against him as the prophet of God. The sin therefore even of these children was very heinous: yet the greater guilt was chargeable on their parents and teachers; and their fate was a severe rebuke and awful warning to them. If the Spirit of God had not dictated Elisha's solemn curse of them, Providence would not have followed it with so terrible a judgment. (Notes, 1:10. Prov. 26:2.) The children of the city in general seem to have been present; and the insult was perhaps the effect of a pre-concerted plan, to drive the sons of the prophets from Beth-el by ill-treatment. The forty-two children (יְלָדִים), which were devoured, seem to have been only a part of the whole company, and perhaps they were the most guilty. However, the Judge of all the earth surely did right. Had he cut them off by a fever, no one would have objected to it: but, while the dispensation would have been as severe towards them, it would not have been suited, in any adequate measure, to make the same useful impression on the minds of the survivors, or to inculcate the same important instructions to other ages and nations, as this solemn sentence and immediate execution were. (Notes, Num. 31:2. Josh. 6:21. Acts 5:1—11.)—It seems that the inhabitants of Beth-el were so overawed, that they no more ventured to molest Elisha or the sons of the prophets.—She-bears. (24) Note, Hos. 13:5—8.

V. 25. (Marg. Ref.) To Samaria.] Perhaps, there was a seminary of the sons of the prophets even in Samaria: or Elisha had lodgings in that city, to which he returned after his circuits in other parts, for whatever service might there be performed by him. (Note, 6:32, 33.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.
V. 1—10.

The Lord always acts with perfect wisdom, justice, goodness, and truth; but he does not always deign to explain to us the reasons of his conduct. In exempting sinners from merited condemnation, and in conferring unmerited blessings, he "divideth to every man severally as he will." (Note, Acts 10:34,35.) We are assured, that they who repent and believe the gospel, shall be saved; that the Lord will honor those who honor him: and if we obtain eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord, we need not greatly regret, that we do not pass the same way to it, as Enoch and Elijah did; being comfortably assured, that we shall be more than conquerors in the last conflict, through him "who hath loved us;" and that at last "death will be swallowed up in victory." (P. O. Gen. 5:21—32. Note, 1 Cor. 15:50—58.)—As we know not the time of our departure, we should give diligence to be habitually ready: and we ought to mind our proper work with greater assiduity, if able, when we perceive that the time approaches. Whether ministers or private Christians, we are called to "serve our generation;" and should aim to leave all around us deeply convinced of the nearness and reality of eternal things, and animated with the desire of glorifying God and doing good: and our example, exhortations, and prayers should especially be directed to these important objects, when we approach the solemn closing scene. (Note, 2 Pet. 1:12—15.) On the other hand, we should gladly embrace opportunities of visiting the death-beds of eminent believers, that we may learn heavenly wisdom, and catch holy fire, as it were, from their converse and behavior. But such occasions require seriousness, calmness, and submission to the will of God; and we should learn even to repress our own feelings, rather than distract the minds, or interrupt the devotions and discourse, of the departing Christian. As long as pious persons are with us, we should beg an interest in their prayers; that, by "the supply of the Spirit of Jesus Christ," we may be enabled to tread in their steps, and to be serviceable to the church as they have been. And if from zeal for the glory of God, and love to the souls of men, we should covet earnestly to abound still more in grace, wisdom, and usefulness; neither God, nor his dying saints, will blame the largeness of our desires. Nor is this hard in itself, however it may appear to us; for that fulness, whence prophets and apostles derived all their endowments, still remains, and we are invited to ask large supplies from it: (Note, John 1:16.) and those who are called to succeed eminent men in arduous and important stations, and are conscious of their own insufficiency, are peculiarly encouraged to expect a double portion of the Spirit of God, that they may not disgrace their situations, or remain useless in them.

V. 11—18.

Angels delight to be employed in removing the saints to their glorious rest, in any way that the Lord pleases. (Notes, Gen. 24:2--9. Luke 16:22, 3. Heb. 1:13,14.) Yet the event, which is so joyful to them, often causes painful separations to those who are left behind: many on these occasions are bereft of such, as have been more dear and useful to them, than the tenderest parent: yea, even the public has been deprived of some of its strongest bulwarks, though most men are insensible to the loss. (Note, Is. 57:1,2.) On these accounts it is allowable to grieve: but believers should be warned "not to sorrow, as men without hope;" the separation will at length issue in a more joyful meeting, and the loss shall be made up to them. Though Elijah be removed, the LORD God of Elijah" lives. Thus, when the Savior ascended into heaven, he left not his disciples comfortless; but he bequeathed to them his precious gospel, like Elijah's mantle, as the token of the divine power being exerted to subvert the empire of Satan, and to set up the kingdom of God in the world: and he poured out upon them his Holy Spirit, both to qualify them fully for their most important and arduous ministry, and to render their labors abundantly successful. The same gospel still remains with us; and, though the miraculous powers are withdrawn, it will is attended with a divine energy for the conversion and salvation of sinners. Oh, may that power be more abundantly experienced, wherever the word of God is truly preached! And may we all seriously inquire, whether it be not suspended, retarded, or removed, through some criminal cause in us!—Having, however, the same exceeding great and precious promises, the same throne of grace, the same Mediator, the same powerful God and Father, as the primitive christians had; if we have also the same "precious faith," we need not fear breaking through all difficulties, opposing enemies, and at last passing comfortably through the Jordan of death, as on dry ground.—When we perceive men averse to conviction, and bent upon their own schemes, though vain and empty; it is sometimes best to leave them to take their own course: and their fruitless labors and inquiries often most effectually discover to them their mistakes.

V. 19—25.

The nature of man, in its best estate, and adorned with all the embellishments of which it is capable, resembles the unwholesome water and soil of Jericho. It is throughout infected with sin, and barren of real good; and man's best actions, till renewed by grace, proceed from selfish and carnal motives, are directed to unworthy purposes, and measured by a false rule. But when that remedy is applied, a blessed change takes place through all the powers of the soul: and repentance, faith, and love of God and man, produce good works, performed from the purest principles, and for the most important ends; and regulated according to the holy law of God, and the example of the Redeemer. In this way sometimes whole towns and cities have assumed a new appearance, through the preaching of the gospel, and by the pouring out of the Holy Spirit; so that the curse of sin and ungodliness has been converted into the blessing of fruitfulness "in the works of righteousness, which are through Jesus Christ to the praise and glory of God:" and when this blessing is vouchsafed to seminaries of learning, and places of public education; the fertilizing streams may flow through whole countries, nay into the most distant lands, and produce the most happy change. (Notes, Ez. 47:1—11.)—While the special favor of God evidently rests on those places where his gospel is welcomed; his heaviest wrath will light on those who reject the gracious message, and insult and abuse his ministers. The words and actions even of children, yea, of "little children," are noticed by him. Let then the youngest who read or hear these observations, "stand in awe, and sin not:" let them think of the terror and anguish of the children of Beth-el, when they are tempted to deride the deformed, the lame, or the infirm; when they are induced to shew contempt to the aged; and especially when they are about to join those, who revile or ridicule such as are in reputation for sanctity: for this is to despise the holiness of God in them. And if any have the misfortune to have parents or teachers so wicked, as to set them an example of such profaneness, or to instruct or encourage them to behave in such a manner; let them remember that they should "obey God rather than man," and that they must answer to him for their offence, whoever commands them to commit it. But words cannot express what strikes the imagination on this awful subject. We can scarcely conceive the horror which seized the parents of Beth-el, on the view of the mangled bodies of their children, whom they had taught that impiety, which brought the dreadful judgment upon them. What then will be the anguish, at the great decisive day, of those parents, who witness the everlasting condemnation of their offspring, occasioned by their negligence and wickedness! Let us turn from the dreadful meditation, and take warning to train up our families, with increasing earnestness, "in the nurture and admonition of the Lord;" hoping and praying that we shall be enabled, at that important season, to appear before God, and to adopt the language of the prophet, "Behold, I and the children that thou hast given me."—Indeed the ministers of Christ must and will in all ordinary circumstances continue to bless, and not curse: but the Lord is still glorious in holiness, and all creatures serve him; and while he protects his people, even among their enraged foes, he can soon call for instruments of his vengeance on those, whom he sees to be ripe for destruction.

CHAP. III.

Jehoram reigns wickedly, 1—3. Mesha king of Moab revolts, 4, 5. Jehoram, Jehoshaphat, and the king of Edom, march against him; and being greatly distressed for want of water, they apply to Elisha, who sharply reproves Jehoram, but shews respect to Jehoshaphat, 6—14. He promises them water, and victory, 15—19. Plenty of water is sent; the Moabites are deceived by the appearance, and are entirely defeated, 20—24. The allied kings destroy the cities, spoil the country, and besiege Kir-haraseth, 25. The king of Moab, sacrificing his eldest son, causes them to raise the siege, 26, 27.

NOW [a] Jehoram the son of Ahab began to reign over Israel in Samaria, the eighteenth year of Jehoshaphat king of Judah, and reigned twelve years.

2 And he [b] wrought evil in the sight of the LORD, [c] but not like his father, and [d] like his mother; for he put away the * image of [e] Baal that his father had made.

3 Nevertheless [f] he cleaved unto the sins of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, [g] which made Israel to sin; [h] he departed not therefrom.

4 ¶ And Mesha king of Moab was [i] a sheep-master, and [k] rendered unto the king of Israel an hundred thousand lambs, and an hundred thousand rams, with the wool.

5 But it came to pass, when Ahab was dead, [l] that the king of Moab rebelled against the king of Israel.

6 And king Jehoram went out of Samaria the same time, and [m] numbered all Israel.

NOTES.

CHAP. III. V. 1. Note, 1:17.

V. 2, 3. Jehoram threw aside, but did not destroy, the image of Baal: and if he suppressed the worship of Baal for a time, in order to please Jehoshaphat, and secure his alliance, or through terror at the awful end of his father and brother, it was soon allowed to revive. (Notes, 10:18—31. 1 Kings 16:30—33.) But he was not so eager on that idolatry, or so vehement a persecutor of the prophets, and worshippers of the Lord, as his predecessors had been; preferring the more politic measures of Jeroboam. (Note, 1 Kings 12:26—29.) Yet, it seems, Jezebel retained her influence, and promoted her favorite idolatry; though for reasons of state, or being discouraged by various calamities, she acquiesced in her son's measures at the beginning of his reign.

V. 4—6. Marg. Ref.—Note, 1:1.—Rams. (4) Or wethers, as some understand it.

V. 7. Jehoshaphat used exactly the same words in this answer to Jehoram, as he had done to his father Ahab. But the ill success of Ahab's expedition, his own extreme danger and merciful deliverance, and the sharp reproof given him by the prophet, should have taught him a different conduct. (Notes, 1 Kings 22:4,30,32—35. 2 Chr. 19:2,3.)—As Jehoram had put away the image of Baal, Jehoshaphat perhaps was in hopes of effecting a more complete reformation in Israel, by this compliance: but he thus almost entirely ruined his own family. (Note, 1 Kings 22:41—46.)

V. 8, 9. This way was far about for Jehoram, and through a part of the desert in which Israel had wanted water, when they came out of Egypt; and the same difficulty might reasonably have been expected. (Notes, Num. 20:2—5,14—21. 21:16—18.) Jehoshaphat seems to have intended to prevent the revolt, and secure the assistance of the deputy-king of Edom, and to attack the Moabites by surprise: (Note, 1 Kings 22:47.) but he neglected to inquire of the Lord, for which he was speedily rebuked. It is probable, that the army either missed the direct road, or was hindered in its march, and turned out of the way which the kings had intended to take, by some unforeseen impediments: or a great drought prevailed in that region, of which they had no been aware.

V. 10. Jehoram had planned this expedition, without any divine direction, for his own interest, and had drawn the other two kings into it. Had they succeeded, he would not have given God the glory; yet when calamities came upon him, through his own inadvertency, "his heart fretted against the LORD:" but he expressed neither repentance, nor faith, nor submission to the will of God. (Notes, 6:24—33. Prov. 19:3.)

of Israel and Jehoshaphat and the king of Edom went down to him.

V. 11, 12. Doubtless, the prophet was divinely directed to follow the camp on this occasion. The servant of Jehoram was better acquainted with Elisha, than his master was; and he was known, as having been the attendant of Elijah, to assist him in washing his hands, and other menial offices; yet as appointed to be his successor. (Note, 1 Kings 19:20,21.) Jehoshaphat was now made sensible of his fault in neglecting to inquire of the Lord: and the three kings concurred in shewing respect to Elisha; not ordering his attendance, but waiting on him. (Notes, 5:8—12. Ex. 11:8. Is. 60:10—14. Rev. 3:8,9.)

V. 13, 14. It is probable, that Elisha meant to shew Jehoshaphat the deficiency and hypocrisy of Jehoram's reformation; as his heart still went after the prophets and worship of Baal: and he had no real regard for the prophets of God, though he consulted him in his distress. He would not therefore shew him any respect or honor, that he might understand how the Lord detested his iniquity: but he treated Jehoshaphat with respect, though he also was faulty. (Notes, Judg. 10:13—18. Ez. 14:1—5. 20:39.)—Doubtless he was directed to act in his public character, differently from what he would have done as a private subject of Jehoram's kingdom. This indeed is implied in the words of the oath, by which he confirmed what he spake. "As the LORD of hosts liveth, before whom I stand." (Marg. Ref. d.)

V. 15. The "minstrel" was one skilful in playing on a harp, or some other musical instrument: and it is probable, that he sang the praises of God, accompanied with soft and sweet music. —This was intended to calm the prophet's mind, which had been discomposed with a holy indignation, by recollecting the abominations of Ahab's family; and so to prepare him for those illapses of the Holy Spirit, which he assuredly expected, and accordingly received. (Notes, 1 Sam. 10:5,6. 16:15—23.)

V 16, 17. With the prophetical promise of a sufficient supply of water, for them, their cattle, and beasts of burden, a commandment was given which required considerable labor, and was a trial of the faith and obedience of the persons concerned. It is useless to inquire whence this water came: He, that caused the rock to pour forth rivers, could never want resources. (Note, Ex. 17:5,6.) The supply, however, was evidently miraculous: and those who have insinuated the contrary, as if Elisha had merely known that there was water in the place, if they would only dig for it; must suppose that the prophet, whom they attempt to disparage, had more sagacity in matters of this kind, than these three kings, with all their officers, and counsellors, and soldiers.

V. 18, 19. (Marg. Ref.) Providence put it in Jehoram's power to execute that severe vengeance upon the revolted Moabites, which he meditated. But it is not certain, whether the words of Elisha implied a permission to do so, or were merely prophetical of the event. (Deut. 20:19,20.)—It is probable, that much of the land could not be cultivated, till the stones were gathered off: and these, lying in heaps upon the corners of the fields, would speedily be dispersed by a numerous army, and occasion great hindrance and difficulty in the future cultivation of the country.

V. 20. The time of the morning-sacrifice at Jerusalem was chosen by the Lord for this miracle, to intimate to the whole company, that the deliverance was vouchsafed them through the sacrifices and the worship there performed. (Marg. Ref. r.)—It may here very properly be noted, that neither Elijah nor Elisha seems ever to have resorted to the worship at the temple, or to have required the people, under the government of the kings of Israel, to do so; though that worship was appointed by God, and it is evident that his spiritual worshippers had respect to it. The peculiar circumstances of Israel were such, that without uninterrupted miracles, or subverting the foundation of the civil establish-that the kings were come up to fight against them, they * gathered all that were able to † put on armor and upward, and stood in the border.

22 And they arose up early in the morning, and the sun shone upon the water, and the Moabites saw the water on the other side, as red as blood:

23 And they said, [t] This is blood: the kings are surely ‡ slain, and they have smitten one another: [u] now therefore Moab to the spoil.

24 And when they came to the camp of Israel, the Israelites rose up and [x] smote the Moabites, so that they fled before them: but they § went forward smiting the Moabites, even in their country.

ment, the people could not exactly observe the ritual law. The prophets were therefore directed, by God himself, to accommodate their conduct to these circumstances, and to spend their lives in recovering or preserving the people from idolatry. and in teaching them the grand essentials of acceptable religion.—In every age hitherto, considerate and faithful ministers have found it impracticable, for them to rectify every external deviation from what to them appeared most scriptural: but, having adverted to the distinction between what is desirable, and what is attainable; and between the essentials of true religion in every age, and matters more circumstantial; they have accommodated themselves to that state of things which they could not alter; and endeavored to bring men to repentance, faith in Christ, and holiness of life, and to as scriptural an external worship as they could. And, though some of their brethren have censured them, the Lord God of Elijah and Elisha has evidently pleaded their cause, by making them the instruments of numerous conversions, and great revivals of religion: whilst others, scrupulously exact in external forms, and earnest to magnify them, have worn out their lives in vainly attempting to new model the church and the world, and have missed their opportunity of more essential usefulness. (Notes, 4:23. 1 Sam. 7:9,17. 1 Kings 18:4,36,37.) In due time the Lord will regulate every thing externally, as well as internally, in the best manner: in the mean while we must make the best of things: we must aim to be satisfied respecting our own conduct as in the sight of God; to be moderate and candid in our own judgment concerning those who differ from us, and patient under their censures of us; and, learning what that means, "I will have mercy and not sacrifice," to be careful not to lose sight of the great end of all religion, for the sake of some of the disputable means of attaining it. For at last, nothing "availeth in Christ Jesus, but faith which worketh by love," and "a new creature" manifested in "newness of life." (Notes, Gal. 5:1—6. 6:11—16.)

The way of Edom.] Mount Seir was inhabited by Edom: and some think, that plentiful rains on the mountains of Edom supplied the water. But this is uncertain: and mount Seir was not so distant, but that tokens of wind or rain would have been perceived by the army. (17)

V. 22, 23. The sun shining upon the water in ditches, probably in a red soil, had the appearance of blood; and deceived the Moabites, who knew that it was just before a dry valley, and that no rain had fallen: and as combined armies have often quarrelled, and destroyed each other, they hastily concluded this to be the case, and acted as if it had been fully proved to them. 'The Moabites easily believing what they wished, imagined they had nothing to do, but to go 'and gather the spoil, and not to fight at all.' Bp. Patrick. God permitted them to be thus infatuated for their destruction. (Note, Judg. 7:16—22. 2 Chr. 20:22—25.)

V. 24, 25. Marg. Ref. Notes, 18,19,27.

V. 26. The camp of the viceroy of Edom seems not to have been so well fortified, as the camps of the other kings: and therefore the king of Moab, in his extreme danger, thought to force his way through in this direction; but he was not able.

V. 27. It has been supposed that the king of Moab offered in sacrifice the eldest son of the king of Edom, whom he had taken prisoner: but the narrative does not admit of this interpretation. It is evident, that he sacrificed his own eldest son, and the heir apparent of his crown, to procure the assistance of his idols, or to avert their indignation. It has been thought, that a tradition of Abraham's offering his son Isaac, nay, that even a distorted tradition concerning the sacrifice of the Redeemer, gave occasion to those horrid human sacrifices, which have been, and still are, very common in the gentile world. But this at most could only be the occasion: the cause was two-fold; the depravity and blindness of the human heart, and the subtlety and malignity of Satan; in whose worship, as directed by him, it must be a first principle, that the more costly, painful, unnatural, and cruel the oblation is, the more acceptable the sacrifice; because it best gratifies his pride, envy, and malice. (Notes, Lev. 20:2—5. Mic. 6:6—8.)—This horrid sacrifice the king of Moab offered in the sight of the combined armies, that they might see his desperate determination to endure and inflict all extremities, rather than be reduced: his remaining forces were thus fired

CHAP. IV.

At Elisha's word the oil of a poor prophet's widow is increased, to enable her to pay her debt, 1—7. He is hospitably entertained by a woman of Shunem, who is rewarded by having a son in her old age, 8—17. The child dies, but is restored to life in answer to Elisha's prayer, 18—37. Elisha heals the pottage made with poisonous herbs, 38—41; and feeds a hundred men with twenty small barley loaves, 42—44.

NOW there cried a certain woman of the wives of the [a] sons of the prophets unto Elisha, saying, Thy servant my husband is dead; and thou knowest that [b] thy servant did fear the LORD: and [c] the creditor is come to take unto him my two sons to be bondmen.

with indignation against Israel; and perhaps Jehoshaphat, and the king of Edom, expressed their disapprobation of those severities which occasioned the dreadful deed. In this manner the minds of the assailants being filled with horror, and their measures disconcerted, they, by common consent, raised the siege of Kir-haraseth, the principal city of Moab, before the walls of which these transactions took place. Thus it escaped the destruction which had overwhelmed the other cities: (25) and the allied armies returned home, without having fully completed their design.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—12.

Partial reformations often originate from the hope of advantage in temporal things, by the favor of godly men: and even the selfish will sometimes renounce those sins, which occasion them loss and trouble; and then detect their own hypocrisy by adhering to those which promise present advantage. True piety, however, disposes men to judge favorably: and this candor is apt to carry them too far; while they indulge the hope of drawing half-converts further into the ways of God, by complying with their inclinations, and cultivating their acquaintance. We should indeed endeavor, by kindness, both to win upon the affections of our neighbors, and to evince the tendency of our religion: yet our conduct in all things should be regulated by the word of God; and it is there declared that "evil communications corrupt good manners;" and we are commanded "to come out, and be separate" from the ungodly.—Worldly men are quick-sighted to their temporal interests, but they seek nothing further; and often seduce pious persons to forget their own principles, and to "lean to their own understandings," instead of "acknowledging the LORD in all their ways." But whilst the wicked in their difficulties are ready to "fret against the Lord," as the author of those calamities, which their own sin and folly have brought upon them; the believer will be humbled before him for neglect of duties, and disposed to inquire his will and seek his help. And when corrections have brought men to this temper, relief will be afforded them; and their ungodly connexions will often succeed the better on their account.—Those, who would be eminent in the church of the living God, must readily stoop to the meanest service and the hardest labor: for such as have thus distinguished themselves, have generally attained to singular honor and usefulness. (Notes, Matt. 20:24—28.)

V. 13—27.

Many shew respect to the ministers of God under heavy trials, who despise them at other times. In that case, they might be justly left to seek help from the worldly idols, the vicious companions, the worthless forms, or infidel principles, which they have preferred to the favor and truth of God: and they should be shewn, that with him "there is no respect of persons." The minister may also properly let them know, that he is no stranger to their character, and will pay no court to them, whatever he would do or suffer for their good: and he, who in private life is the allowed inferior, and willing to be the servant of all, when speaking in the name of the Lord, is commissioned to "rebuke with all authority." In all ordinary cases, however, it should be with evident affection and respect; and it is proper so to change the voice, and regulate the conduct, as decisively to mark the difference between the offending believer and the mere hypocrite.—Composure of mind favors the reception of heavenly communications: when the wickedness and misery of man have ruffled us, meditation on the glorious perfections and wonderful works of God is suited to restore the calm: and it is well, when the sweet, but much perverted arts of poetry and music, are used with such caution and propriety, as to favor communion with him.—The Lord will take occasion, from the distresses of his offending servants, to manifest the glory of his power, truth, and love: and, whilst all good gifts are from him alone, we must shew our believing expectation, and prepare for their reception, by observing the directions of his word.—It is a light thing for him to preserve his people from becoming a prey to their enemies: he will make them more than conquerors over them all.—Our rule is to do good and not evil to our adversaries: but we shall hereafter behold and rejoice in the destruction of all the enemies of God. And they who are expressly commissioned by him, (as the Israelites of old, and magistrates at present,) to execute his vengeance upon the wicked, are authorized in those severities, which in others would be extremely criminal.—The Lord will put honor upon his own institutions: and sinners left to themselves are speedily infatuated; for if men could not believe what they wish to be true, without proof, and in defiance of demonstration, "the fool" would not "say in his heart, there is no God."—When sinners are promising themselves peace and safety, sudden and inevitable destruction comes upon them; desperation succeeds their mad presumption; and in Satan's service, and at his suggestion, such horrid deeds have been perpetrated, as cause even the natural feelings of humanity to recoil. We should, however, be careful not to urge the worst of men to extremities, lest we should occasion blasphemies, murder, or suicide: we ought rather to recede from our right, and leave them to the judgment of God.

NOTES.

CHAP. IV. V. 1. The prophets were ministers by selection, and not by entail, as the priests were: yet they seem in general to have married and brought up families; though Elijah and Elisha are supposed to have continued in a single state.—Except the prophets had private fortunes, which probably was not often the case, their incomes must have been very precarious; and would arise either from the donations of pious persons, or from their own manual labor. The people perhaps sometimes gave them the first fruits, and some other of the oblations, which would have belonged to the priests and Levites, if they had not depart-

4 And when thou art come in, [g] thou shalt shut the door upon thee and upon thy sons, [h] and shalt pour out into all those vessels, and thou shalt set aside that which is full.

5 So [i] she went from him, and shut the door upon her and upon her sons, who brought the vessels to her, and she poured out.

6 And it came to pass when [j] the vessels were full, that she said unto her son, Bring me yet a vessel. And he said unto her, There is not a vessel more. [k] And the oil stayed.

7 Then she came, and told the man of God: and he said, Go, sell the oil, and [l] pay thy † debt, and live thou and thy children of the rest.

ed from among them. (Note, 2 Chr. 11:13—17.) Many of them, however, seem to have been very scantily provided for: and this servant of God, who was of approved piety, not only left his family destitute, but involved in debt. Yet the creditor paid no more regard to the distress of the widow, than to the character of the deceased; nay, perhaps he was the more severe in his demands, because of the attachment of the debtor to the worship of JEHOVAH, and his zeal against idolatry. As therefore the widow had no effects, with which to discharge the debt, he proceeded to sell her sons for slaves in order to pay himself. (Marg. Ref. c.—Notes, Ex. 21:2. Neh. 5:1—13. Matt. 18:23—27.)—Elisha had no wealth from which to assist the widow: yet it was proper, for the honor of religion, that the creditor should be satisfied: and the Lord directed him to a method of effectually answering this demand, and of supplying her future necessities.

V. 2. The woman had parted with every thing of value, to satisfy other demands, or to supply her urgent necessities. Probably this oil was a present from some friend of her deceased husband, out of the produce of his olive-yard, but it was utterly insufficient to satisfy the creditor.

V. 3. Not a few.] As many, and as large, as she could procure. (Marg.)

V. 4. Shut, &c.] This direction was given, in order that the woman might avoid interruption and ostentation; and that in retirement, she with her sons might the more leisurely consider and adore the goodness of the Lord. (Note, Matt. 6:6.)

V. 6. The woman was ordered "to borrow empty vessels not a few;" and, as her neighbors were willing to lend her, we may conclude, that she borrowed as many as she thought could be wanted: yet the oil stayed not, till all the vessels were filled. Had her expectations been larger, the supply would have been still more abundant. (Note, 13:15—19.)

V. 7. The woman would not make use of the miraculous supply, till she had received the prophet's direction: and by his orders, she first discharged her whole debt, and then used the remainder for the subsistence of herself and her children. (Marg. Ref. Note, Rom. 13:8—10.)

V. 8—10. Elisha seems to have generally resided at or near mount Carmel: but he went his circuits through the land, to visit the seminaries of the prophets, and to instruct the people, which probably was his stated employment, when not sent on some special service. (Notes, 2:1. 1 Kings 19:20,21.) At Shunem there lived a woman of wealth and piety, who invited him to come to her house, and with some difficulty prevailed on him. But when he became acquainted with her character, he never failed to call upon her when he journeyed that way. Her husband seems to have been a pious person, but not so zealous and active as she was: and, as he confided his domestic affairs to her care, she is chiefly noticed. By his approbation she prepared for the prophet a retired lodging; perhaps perceiving that the hurry of a large family did not suit his contemplative mind. —The plain, simple manner in which the prophet's chamber was furnished, (though he was the patriarch, if I may so speak, of the whole church of Israel,) is worthy of our notice. There was nothing provided for ornament or indulgence, but merely for necessity, for study, and for devotion. —Shunem. (8) In the lot of Issachar. (Marg. Ref. m.—Note, Josh. 19:17—23.)

15 And he said, Call her. And when he had called her, she stood in the door.

16 And he said, [d] About this * season, according to the time of life, [e] thou shalt embrace a son. And she said, Nay, [f] my lord, thou man of God, [g] do not lie unto thine handmaid.

V. 13. Elisha had no doubt acquired considerable influence with Jehoram, or his captains, by the singular deliverance and victory obtained through him: (Notes, 3:4—27.) and, though he would ask nothing for himself, he was willing to shew his gratitude in behalf of his kind hostess, by interposing in her behalf, if she had any petition to present.—Perhaps Jehoram's soldiers or tax-gatherers might be oppressive or troublesome in the neighborhood; and he thought she might desire to seek redress of this, or some other grievance. (Notes, 8:3—6.) Or perhaps he made the proposal, with an intention of manifesting her indifference to temporal interests. Accordingly she answered, that, living safe and contented among her friends and relatives, and those who behaved kindly to her, she had no request to make. Having said this, she seems to have withdrawn; but Elisha further conversed on the subject with Gehazi.

Thou hast been careful.] חרד . חרדת, tremere, turbari, commoveri curâ. Robertson. Probably, the same word was used by our Lord to Martha, rendered τυρβαζῃ, art troubled, Luke 10:41.

V. 14—17. Gehazi, as having more leisure and opportunity to observe the affairs of the family than Elisha had, discovered what favor would be most acceptable; and he seems not to have doubted the prevalence of his master's prayers in this respect. In addressing his benefactress, Elisha used words, which some think implied, not only the time, but the very day, on which she should embrace a son. (Marg. Ref.—Gen. 17:21. 18:14.)—Her answer reminded him of his character, and intimated that she could not suppose he would mock her with delusive expectations: especially as she had expressed no impatience under her trial, and had not so much as mentioned a desire of having children. (28. Notes, Gen. 30:1,2. 1 Sam. 1:4—8.)

V. 21. On the bed, &c.] This implied, that the woman had some expectation of her son's being restored to her; as he had at first been given her in so extraordinary a manner: (Notes, 1 Kings 17:17—24. Heb. 11:17,19.) yet this hope was not sufficiently prevalent to exclude her anguish of spirit, under this unexpected and sudden affliction.

V. 22. The field, where the woman's husband superintended his reapers, was near to the house; as this request must have been made by some messenger.

V. 23. It appears, that on the sabbaths, new moons, and other solemnities, the people were accustomed to assemble in appointed places, to worship God, and to receive instruction from the prophets; and it was thought allowable to use the cattle on the sabbath-day, to go to the prophet, or to these places, if at a distance. (Notes, Ex. 20:8—11.)—It is not certain whether they assembled in synagogues, or private houses; but probably it was done in most parts of the land of Israel.—In Judah, pious people had the advantage of the temple-worship, and the instructions of the priests and Levites; they were generally countenanced and protected by their kings; and they thankfully availed themselves of these advantages. But in Israel, the ruling powers were against them: yet they served God according to their consciences, as their circumstances would admit. (Note, 3:20.)—The afflicted mother would not needlessly distress her husband, by informing him of the death of the child, still hoping, that the restoration of the child, by the miraculous interposition of Elisha, would prevent his grief; but mere-and say unto her, [t] Is it well with thee? is it well with thy husband? is it well with the child? And she answered, [u] It is well.

27 And when she came to the man of God to the hill, she caught *him [v] by the feet: but Gehazi came near to [x] thrust her away. And the man of God said, [y] Let her alone; for her soul is [†] vexed within her: and the LORD hath [z] hid it from me, and hath not told me.

28 Then she said, [a] Did I desire a son of my lord? did I not say, [b] Do not deceive me?

29 Then he said to Gehazi, [c] Gird up thy loins, and [d] take my staff in thine hand, and go thy way: if thou meet any man, [e] salute him not; and if any salute thee, answer him not again: and [f] lay my staff upon the face of the child.

30 And the mother of the child said, [g] As the LORD liveth, and as thy soul liveth, [h] I will not leave thee. And he arose, and followed her.

ly said it would be well for her to go: and he had that confidence in her, that he required no further explanation.

V. 24—26. Mount Carmel was at some distance from Shunem; and the words, "Slack not thy riding," imply, that the servant also rode on an ass. The word, (נהג) rendered Drive, properly means, Lead the way, or, Go before.—Elisha did not expect to see her at this time; and, being afraid that some calamity had befallen her, sent Gehazi to make very particular inquiries; to which she answered, "It is well," or peace. (שָׁלוֹם) Some suppose that she only meant to put off Gehazi with this answer, as in part true, in respect of herself and her husband, though not the whole of the case: but it is probable that it was also the language of her faith and submission; as she was persuaded, that the affliction was in mercy, and would terminate well, though her passions conflicted against her better judgment. (Marg. Ref. —Note, Lev. 10:3.)

V. 27. (Marg. Ref.) It is plain from this verse, that the prophets derived all their supernatural knowledge from immediate communication; and not from any power of discerning, habitually inherent in them.

V. 28. Doubtless the acute feelings of the Shunammite mingled some impatience in these expostulations: yet she meant them as arguments, to prevail with the prophet to come to her relief; being satisfied of the prevalency of his prayers. For, as she had not impatiently desired children, she could not think that her son had been given her without solicitation, merely to become the occasion of her far deeper distress. (Notes, 14—17,21.)

V. 29—31. It is difficult to determine what the prophet meant, by thus sending Gehazi. He had divided Jordan by using Elijah's mantle; and perhaps he thought his own staff, in the hands of Gehazi, would be as efficacious. (Note, 2:14.) Or perhaps he meant to make trial of the Shunammite's faith. Gehazi, however, was ordered to proceed as a man upon urgent business, who may not be delayed even by attention to ordinary civilities: (Luke 10:4.) and he would thus arrive at Shunem some time before Elisha could. He seems to have observed his directions punctually, but in vain; either through his own unbelief; (Notes, Matt. 17:19—21. Acts 19:13—20.) or because the woman had no expectations from him; or because Elisha was faulty in attempting to perform the miracle by a substitute; or, as some think, because the prophet altered his purpose, at the importunity of the woman, and so did not pray for Gehazi's success. (Notes, 5:20—27.)

V. 33—35. It is instructive to compare the manner, in which Elijah and Elisha wrought their miracles, especially in raising the dead, with that of Jesus Christ. Every part of their conduct expressed a consciousness of inability in themselves, and an entire dependence on another, and earnest application to him for his interposition: but Jesus wrought by his own power; "he spake, and it was done;" "Young man, I say unto thee, arise;" "Talitha, cûmi;" "Lazarus, come forth." (Notes, Mark 5:35—43. Luke 7:11—17. John 11:41—46. Acts 9:36—43.)—On this occasion, Elisha by his great attention, shewed his earnest desire of restoring the child to his afflicted mother: and the actions which he employed were significant expressions of his expectation, that God, by communicating life to the body, would enable each part to perform its proper office. The recovery of the child was gradual: life was communicated, and then one symptom and another of it appeared. As his disorder had been in her: and when she was come in unto him, he said, [r] Take up thy son.

37 Then she went in, and [s] fell at his feet, and bowed herself to the ground, and took up her son, and went out.

[Practical Observations.]

38 ¶ And Elisha [t] came again to Gilgal; and there was [u] a dearth in the land, and [x] the sons of the prophets [y] were sitting before him: and he said unto his servant, [z] Set on the great pot, and seethe pottage for the sons of the prophets.

39 And one went out into the field to gather herbs, and found [a] a wild vine, and gathered thereof wild gourds his lap full, and came and shred them into the pot of pottage: for they knew them not.

40 So they poured out for the men to eat: and it came to pass, as they were eating of the pottage, that they cried out and said, [b] O thou man of God, there is [c] death in the pot! and they could not eat thereof.

41 But he said, Then bring meal: [d] and he cast it into the pot; and he said, Pour out for the people, that they may eat: and [e] there was no * harm in the pot.

42 ¶ And there came a man from [f] Baal-shalisha, and brought the man of God [g] bread of the first fruits, twenty loaves [h] of barley, and full ears of corn in † the husk thereof: and he said, Give unto the people that they may eat.

43 And [i] his servitor said, [k] What! should I set this before an hundred men? He said again, Give the people, that they may eat: for thus saith the LORD, [l] They shall eat, and shall leave thereof.

44 So he set it before them, and they did eat, and left thereof, according to the word of the LORD.

V. 36, 37. (Notes, 1 Kings 17:21,22. Heb. 11: 35—38.) The joyful mother not only expressed her high respect for the prophet, but worshipped God also, giving him humble thanks for his great goodness to her: for the words may be rendered, "She fell at his feet, and worshipped."

V. 38, 39. (Marg. Ref.) Wild gourds. (39) These are supposed to have been gathered from the plant called coloquintida, which is of a most nauseous bitter, and, if taken improperly, operates as a fatal poison. The sons of the prophets seem to have fared very hardly; and in a season of urgent scarcity they were glad to gather what they could find, and thus one of them ignorantly brought the produce of this noxious plant.

V. 40, 41. It is probable that these men were alarmed, not only by the nauseous taste of the food, but by the effects produced on those who had begun to eat of it.—Yet we may take occasion to remark the goodness of God, in giving us the senses of smelling and tasting, to be, as it were, sentinels to keep watch, that nothing prejudicial may be received into the stomach.—The "meal cast into the pot," was only a token of the divine operation, in changing the taste and properties of the pottage, that his servants might not want a necessary refreshment. (Notes, 2:19—22. Ex. 15:25,26. Mark 16:17,18.)

V. 42—44. This would be a considerable present in a time of famine. (Note, 1.)—'Unto whom' the prophets) 'it is probable, pious persons gave that portion, which was assigned by God for the priests, to whom they could not now carry their first-fruits, they being in the land of Judah. And I suppose the schools of the prophets might be partly maintained by this means.' Bp. Patrick. The loaves seem to have been small; perhaps each intended to be a meal for one man. The supply, however, was deemed greatly inadequate to the company: but the increase was little, compared with the miracles of this kind wrought by Jesus Christ. (Notes, Matt. 14:15—21. 15:32—38.)--The sons of the prophets seem at this time to have become very numerous: but perhaps some of the people, who came from a distance to receive instruction, shared the repast. And this might be one reason of the servant's objection to setting so little food before such a number of persons. (Notes, 1--7. 1 Kings 17:10—16.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.
V. 1—7.

It is incumbent on all Christians, and especially on ministers, to submit to Providence in respect of their temporal provision; and, while they trust in God for their daily bread, not to tempt him by negligence or extravagance. They ought not to contract debts, for things not absolutely necessary, which they have not a reasonable prospect of discharging: for nothing tends more to bring reproach on the gospel, and excite prejudice against it; nothing more distracts men's minds whilst they live, or more distresses their families when they are dead, than a burden of debt, without effects with which to pay it. Many hardships therefore should be endured, and many pleasant things renounced, rather than that such injurious consequences should be occasioned. Yet, in the mystery of providence, this may sometimes unavoidably prove the case, even of those who are eminent for piety; nor can the strictest prudence avert the calamity: besides, many good men are deficient in worldly sagacity, and their unsuspecting simplicity exposes them to the designs of the artful. But, when this is a man's misfortune rather than his fault, he will have a testimony to his integrity in the consciences of all impartial persons: the Lord's people will be inclined to relieve him or his, according to their ability: and God himself will, in some way, interpose to clear up his character, and to provide for his wants.—He who has all hearts in his hand is able, without a miracle, to procure as effectual a supply, as the increase of the widow's oil: and when the ability is given, the creditor, though unreasonable and severe, must first be satisfied,

CHAP. V.

Naaman, captain of the host of Syria, is a leper, 1. By the report of a captive maid of Israel, concerning the prophet, he comes to the king of Israel at Samaria to be healed, 2—7. Elisha sends for him; he goes to him, and is ordered to wash seven times in Jordan: he is angry; but, persuaded by his servants, he complies and is cleansed, 8—14. He acknowledges the true God; offers presents to Elisha, who refuses them; and is sent away in peace, resolving to worship the LORD alone, 15—19. Gehazi, by a lie, obtains presents from Naaman, and is punished by leprosy, entailed also on his descendants, 20—27.

after which the remainder may be enjoyed with comfort.—We should then be careful to perform our present duty, and to commit all our concerns to the Lord: we should study to adorn the gospel in our life and conversation, and he will take care of us and ours: and if he bring us into distress, he will manifest his power and truth in our deliverance. He generally supplies what is requisite for honesty and charity to his people, by blessing them while they are occupying with a little. And the best directed benevolence of man consists, in teaching and helping the poor to make the most of what they acquire by honest industry: but in every way we should shew a readiness to relieve those in distress; and to give them our counsel and prayers, when we have nothing else.—If our hearts were more prepared to receive spiritual blessings, and if we, in retirement and fervent prayer, expected larger supplies, we should be more richly replenished.—At length all the vessels of mercy shall be filled with the Lord's goodness: and the Redeemer's all-sufficiency will only be stayed from supplying the wants and saving the souls of sinners, when there are no more inclined to come to him for salvation.

V. 8—17.

The ministers of religion should not seek great things for themselves, or court the intimacy of the great, except to do good to them, or by them: but they ought to be unwearied in their useful labors, like him "who went about doing good," that all may "perceive that they are holy men of God," simply dependent on him, walking with him, devoted to his service, and seeking his glory. Though backward to form connexions with their superiors, lest they should be taken off from their important work, and entangled in the world; they may yet find a few in that sphere, whose acquaintance may be deemed a privilege. But, whilst they do not refuse their countenance and friendship, they feel, that "it is more blessed to give than to receive;" and they will endeavor to make such returns of gratitude as are in their power, and especially they will seek the blessing of God upon their benefactors: nay, they will go further with man to ask favors in behalf of others, than for themselves. But it is a great happiness to know when it is well with us, and to be content among our friends and relatives, without coveting the splendor or pleasures of courts and public life: and when we have so learned submission to the will of God, as to express no desire for those objects, which others can perceive are wanting to our comfort. The Lord however sees the secret wish, which is suppressed in obedience to his will; and will hear the prayers of his servants in behalf of their benefactors, by communicating unsolicited and unexpected mercies: nor must the promises and engagements of the men of God be deemed fallacious, like those of the men of the world.

V. 18—37.

Alas! all earthly comforts are sources of trouble and sorrow: anxious fears counterbalance our pleasure from our beloved children, when most hopeful: and their sudden sickness and death may turn all our joy into poignant anguish. On such occasions it is right to keep silence, or to say that "all is well:" nor must we think it hard to bring up children for the grave, or for the kingdom of heaven.—We indeed cannot expect a present resurrection of our deceased friends: but in many of our troubles we may find relief; in all of them peace and comfort, from the counsel and prayers of the Lord's faithful servants, who can teach us how to turn all our losses into the richest gain. Their company therefore, with the ordinances of God, and the throne of grace, should be doubly welcome to the afflicted and bereaved.—We should treat those with great tenderness whose souls are vexed in them; making allowance for improprieties in their conduct, and impatience in their expressions; and suffer them to open before us their griefs, as well as be ready to attempt their consolation: and in general we should not avoid trouble, nor affect state, by doing those things by others which we are able to do ourselves.—When we have used proper means with diligence and earnestness, we may expect the efficacious blessing of God, both in things temporal and spiritual: but not otherwise.—The gospel of salvation will no more effect the sinner's conversion, without the presence and blessing of God, than the condemning law will: and if the minister be a hypocrite, and destitute of faith, little good can be expected from the most exact external observances 'the sinners are "not awaked' " will generally be the doleful report. Not so, when the use of appointed means is accompanied by the spirit of fervent believing prayer, and persevering expectation from the Lord: then the change, which takes place in the conduct of many, shall evince that "they are quickened who were dead in trespasses and sins."—As the choicest comforts occasion the severest trials, so our heaviest afflictions make way for the sweetest consolations: and, notwithstanding appearances, the Lord will not needlessly grieve his true people, by giving them blessings in order to take them away from them: but it is a comfort under temporal losses to reflect that we did not inordinately desire the object of which we are bereft.—It is happy and comely when harmony prevails in domestic life; when the husband's authority is tempered with affection and unsuspecting confidence; when the wife answers that confidence with deference and submission, as well as fidelity; and when each party consults the other's inclinations, and both unite in attendance on the ordinances of God, and supporting his cause.

V. 38—44.

While the servants of the Lord are contented with mean accommodations, and put their trust in him, he can make their coarsest fare pleasant to them. Let them but observe his directions, and he will not only supply their wants, but extract the death, the evil, from such things as most alarm them. When he pleases, the scantiest provision shall suffice; and whilst he communicates to us, we should in faith impart a portion to others; and thus all will be clean and salutary to us. But to those, who feed themselves without fear, their table becomes a snare, and perdition entwines around their sensual enjoyments. Aware of this danger, let us learn to use temporal good things with caution and moderation, in dependence on him, by whose blessing alone our food is made wholesome and nutrimental.

NOTES.

Chap. V. V. 1. The Syrians were idolaters, and often oppressors of Israel; yet the deliverance of which Naaman had been the instrument, is here ascribed to the power and goodness of God. "By him Jehovah had given deliverance (or salvation, תְּשׁוּעָה) to Syria." Such is the rational language of the sacred writers: whilst the arguments and phraseology of those in general, who compose what is justly called profane history, too evidently shew that God is not in all their thoughts. (Notes, Josh. 10:9,10. Ps. 144:10.)—The leprosy was a loathsome and distressing distemper: and though Naaman was not under the restrictions prescribed for Israel; yet doubtless, he found it a great deduction from the satisfaction, which he might otherwise have found in his high preferments and honors. (Notes, Lev. 13:45,46. Num. 12:11—15.)

V. 2—4. This young damsel, though taken captive, and torn from her relatives and country, and made a slave to Naaman, having, it is likely, been treated with kindness, and employed to wait on his wife, entertained a cordial affection for her master, and earnestly desired the removal of his affliction. Young as she was, she had heard of the piety and miracles of Elisha; and, though he had not cleansed any lepers, she was persuaded he would be inclined to shew kindness even to a heathen, and be enabled to effect his cure. Nor did Naaman despise the information as coming from such a quarter. He had doubtless tried to the utmost, what the physicians could do for him, but in vain; and his earnest desire of a cure prevented him from disdaining an application to the prophet of Israel. (Note, Luke 17:11—19.) Either the prophet was at Samaria, when the damsel was taken captive; or the adjacent district is meant.

V. 5, 6. Ben-hadad king of Syria, having heard, probably from Naaman himself, that there was a prophet in Israel, who, it was supposed, could heal the leprosy, seems to have concluded that he must be at the command of the king of Israel, and perform his miracles for his pleasure and advantage: and if the Israelitish maid knew so much of the prophet, the king must have him continually in his presence, or in his thoughts. He therefore concluded, that he had only to ask it as a favor of Jehoram, that Naaman might be cured, and it would be granted of course. Naaman also would prefer going in state to the king of Israel, to becoming a supplicant to a poor prophet: yet it seems he intended liberally to reward Elisha for the service.

V. 7. Jehoram interpreted the ignorant language and absurd request of the king of Syria, into blasphemy against God, as well as malice against himself, and a pretence for waging war against him. Though an idolater, and a very wicked man, he would be thought concerned about the honor of God: and as full of abhorrence of Ben-hadad's supposed crime, "he rent his clothes."—He had either for the moment forgotten the miracles wrought by Elisha; (Note, 3:16, 17.) or he did not desire to witness any more of them; or he thought this beyond his power: for it seems it was deemed as impracticable, by human skill, to cleanse a rooted leprosy, as to raise the dead. (Note, Lev. 13:1,2.) By this concession of the king, the miracle wrought by Elisha became the more illustrious. (Marg. Ref. n.)

V. 8. It is probable, that Elisha was at or near Samaria, when Naaman arrived; and the report of what had occurred was directly brought to him. This induced him, not to go to Jehoram, but to send, it may be supposed by one of the sons of the prophets, this message to him. Naaman had come into the land of Israel, expecting relief from a prophet of the God of Israel: and Elisha would by no means have him go back disappointed, lest he should conclude that Jehovah was like the gods of the nations, and as unable to do good or evil as they were. On the contrary, he would have it known, that God had "a prophet in Israel," by whom he performed such cures, as none of the heathen prophets, priests, or physi-

10 And Elisha [t] sent a messenger unto him, saying, Go and [u] wash in Jordan [x] seven times, and [y] thy flesh shall come again to thee, and thou shalt be clean.

11 But [z] Naaman was wroth, and [a] went away, and said, [b] Behold, * I thought, He will surely come out to me, and stand, and call on the name of the LORD his God, and † strike his hand over the place, and recover the leper.

12 Are not ‡ Abana and Pharpar, rivers of Damascus, [c] better than all the waters of Israel? may I not wash in them, and be clean? So he turned and went away in a rage.

13 And [d] his servants came near, and spake unto him, and said, [e] My father, if the prophet had bid thee do some great thing, wouldest thou not have done it? how much rather then, when he saith to thee, [f] Wash, and be clean?

14 Then [g] went he down, and dipped himself seven times in Jordan, [h] according to the saying of the man of God: and [i] his flesh came again like unto the flesh of a little child, [k] and he was clean.

15 And [l] he returned to the man of God, he and all his company, and came and stood before him: and he said, Behold, [m] now I know that there is no God in all the earth, but in Israel; now therefore, I pray thee, take [n] a blessing of thy servant.

16 But he said, [o] As the LORD liveth, before whom I stand, [p] I will receive none. And he urged him to take it; but he refused.

cians could effect; and which were far beyond all the power of the mightiest monarchs.

V. 9—12. The prophet knew how to stoop to the meanest service or person, when it was proper: but Naaman seemed to have come to him with great ideas of his own importance, as if he conferred a favor or honor upon him. Elisha was therefore directed to assume that superiority, which really belonged to him: and to shew Naaman, that he was far from being elated by the presence of so great a man; and that he regarded not his rank, desired not his friendship, and would not accept his presents; though, for the honor of the God of Israel, his leprosy should be cleansed, if he would observe the simple direction which he sent him by a messenger. But Naaman thought, that the prophet treated him with rudeness and neglect. He had previously formed an idea in his mind of the manner, in which the cure would be performed, and this message did not at all answer his expectations. He wanted to be cured as a man of consequence, who was entitled to regard; and not as a poor pensioner, who is glad of his alms by whomsoever sent. Abana and Pharpar were larger rivers than Jordan, and Naaman thought them more likely to effect a cure: but the rivers of Damascus had not been distinguished by miracles, as Jordan had been; (Notes, 2:7,8,14. Josh. 3:4.) and Naaman, in his haughtiness and wrath, forgot that JEHOVAH was to cleanse his leprosy by means of his own appointment, and not in a way of man's devising. (Notes, Num. 21:6—9. John 3:14,15. 2 Cor. 4:7.)

V. 13, 14. This Syrian was favored with very prudent, respectful, and affectionate servants; and probably he was in general a kind and considerate master, who could bear to be reasoned with by his inferiors. (Note, 1 Sam. 25:14—17.) They had, it may be supposed, heard a great deal from the Israelitish maid of Elisha's miracles; and were very desirous that Naaman should make the trial. Being more calm and impartial than he, they perceived that the prophet's directions were simple, easy, and safe. Had the prophet prescribed nauseous medicines, a tedious regimen, or some painful operations, or even some burdensome religious observances; or had he demanded a large sum of money as the price of the cure; they knew that Naaman would have complied without hesitation: how much more then ought he, in reason, to go to Jordan, and wash seven times in its waters? This remonstrance was "a word spoken in due season," and had its full effect: (Note, Prov. 25:11,12.) and his cure immediately followed on his obedience; so that the decayed and loathsome parts of his skin and flesh became perfectly sound, and assumed the healthful appearance of the flesh of a child.—'This was the 'only cure of a leprosy, that we read of, till 'Christ the great Prophet came into the world.' Bp. Patrick. Though the remark be not quite correct, it is entitled to consideration. Miriam was cleansed, in answer to the prayer of Moses; but no other instance is recorded. (Notes, Num. 12:9—15.)

V. 15, 16. Naaman, having received the cure, returned to Elisha, to express his gratitude, and to give glory to God: and now the prophet went out to confer with him. (Note, Luke 17:11—19.) His confession was very expressive and satisfactory. He not only allowed that JEHOVAH was the true God; but also, that there was "no God in all the earth, but in Israel;" the gods of all other nations being helpless, worthless idols.—What an awful representation does this give us of the state of the Gentiles, "without hope, and without God in the world!" (Note, Eph. 2:11—13.)—Naaman therefore urged the prophet to take a present, or blessing, of him, as a token of his gratitude; but he most decidedly refused. He did not scruple to receive presents from pious Israelites, and he seems to have accepted Ben-hadad's gift; (Note, 8:7—9.) but the case of Naaman was singular. It was of great importance what impressions he, at that crisis, should receive, concerning the God of Israel and his worshippers. Elisha had sent for him, to confer a benefit on him; and had he taken the present, Naaman might have ascribed this to a selfish motive, and imbibed prejudices: but perfect disinterestedness would have a contrary tendency. (Note, 1 Cor. 9:13—18. 2 Cor. 11:7—12.) 'He would have strangers to their 'religion know, how good the God of Israel was, 'who made his servants so good, that they did the 'greatest good to mankind for nothing. Which 'generous piety was apt to invite others to the 'worship and service of this great and good God. 'For it gives great authority to a teacher of vir-'tue, not to be covetous.' Bp. Patrick.

V. 17—19. Naaman in his first impressions conceived, that there must be a peculiar sanctity in the earth of Israel, having received such benefit from washing in one of its rivers: he therefore asked permission to carry home with him enough of it to build an altar, on which to offer sacrifices to JEHOVAH, whom alone he was determined in future to worship with burnt-offerings and sacrifices, as Israel did. Yet, as holding a high station in Ben-hadad's court, it would be expected that he should accompany him to the temple of Rimmon: and whilst the king, leaning on his arm, should bow before his idol, Naaman could not avoid bowing also. But as he meant to do this, not as an act of worship to Rimmon, but of service to his prince; he hoped the Lord would pardon him in it: and some learned men have thought that his conduct in this respect was justifiable; because he was not an Israelite, and so not under the law of Moses. It is evident, however, that the prohibition of every kind and degree of idolatry, belongs to the moral law, which is universally obligatory. Our strict rule of duty certainly forbids such a conformity; the gospel grants no dispensations; and, in similar circumstances, a Christian would be absolutely required to renounce every advantage and preferment, which could not be retained without such communion with idolaters, and countenance of idolatry; nay, to endure the utmost effects of the persecutor's rage, rather than make such compliances, however palliated by salvos and mental reserves. (Notes, Dan. 3:8—18.) The prophet however seems to have perceived, that Naaman was convinced, that even bowing with the king in the house of Rimmon was not right, and he left those convictions gradually to produce their effects: if they were the result of regenerating grace, they would in time bring him to make a more public protest against idolatry, when his faith, judgment, and experience were matured. Moreover, as the whole work was from God in so extraordinary a manner, it is probable, that the prophet declined interposing his private judgment, when he had no immediate directions from heaven respecting it. —"In this thing the LORD pardon thy servant, that when my lord went into the house of Rimmon, to bow down himself there, and leaned on my hand, I bowed down myself there; that I bowed down myself—the LORD pardon thy servant in this thing." (Whitby, Note on Luke 12:8.) This would imply, that Naaman had previously favorable thoughts of true religion, and had not been an idolater in other respects; though he had conformed in this particular, which now appeared to him the most heinous of his sins. Yet there is no intimation, that he had not been as gross an idolater as the other Syrians. This translation, which many learned men have endeavored to establish, disregards the vau conversive, which generally changes the preterite into the future. All the versions or ancient translations understand the words of the future, and not of the past.—Elisha seems also to have been silent conçerning the earth, which Naaman requested, and probably for the reasons before mentioned. (Note, Matt. 9:16,17.) Nor was any thing proposed to him, concerning his embracing in other respects the religion of Israel.

V. 20—25. It is probable, that Gehazi was one of the sons of the prophets, had long had the advantage of the society of Elisha, and kept up a profession of piety; yet he remained an avaricious and wicked man, and far worse than the servants of Naaman the Syrian! (Notes, Matt. 26:14—16.) He deemed Elisha foolish, to miss so fair an opportunity of enriching himself, having a right to Naaman's money in return for the cure. But as for himself, he would not be so scrupulous; and with a solemn oath, (even when speaking to himself, which in this case was peculiarly profane,) he declared that he would take somewhat of him. To accomplish his covetous purpose, he soon devised a plausible lie: and Naaman's heart was so affected by the benefit which he had obtained; that he treated even the prophet's servant with the greatest respect, and pressed his acceptance of a larger sum than he petitioned for. In this manner Gehazi appropriated above seven hundred pounds sterling in silver, which he secreted in some convenient place; and he then returned to Elisha with another direct falsehood, as if he could have deceived God, as well as his prophet. (Notes, Acts 5:1—11.) His whole conduct was wicked in a most aggravated degree: he did what he could to disgrace the God of Israel, and to misrepresent his religion: he behaved in a manner most injurious to his master's character: and he not only robbed Naaman of his property; but he took the most effectual method imaginable to prejudice him against the prophet and true religion, and to induce him to return to idolatry. (Notes, Jer. 7:8—11. John 12:1—8. 2 Cor. 12:16—21.)

V. 26, 27. The Spirit of God shewed Elisha what had passed, as plainly as if he had witnessed the whole transaction. (Note, 1 Kings 14: 5,6.)—Considering the distressed state of Israel by reason of the famine, and the low estate of religion, other interests and employments called for Gehazi's attention. The prophets of JEHOVAH were required to shew themselves men of another spirit than the false prophets, by a disinterested indifference about the world; and the state of Naaman's mind, and the peculiarity of his case, rendered this action the most ill-timed that could be. (Note, 15,16.)—We may suppose, that Gehazi was inwardly contriving how to lay out his money, in purchasing an olive-yard, or vineyard, that he might exchange the service of Elisha for a more profitable occu-receive garments, and olive-yards, and vineyards, and sheep, and oxen, and men-servants, and maid-servants?

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.
V. 1—7.

In whatever manner, or degree, a man is honored and preferred by the princes of the earth, or made an instrument in Providence of public benefit to others, he can obtain no exemption from trouble. Some bodily infirmity, or distressing disease, or domestic affliction, will counterbalance his advantages, and imbitter his enjoyments: nor can we remedy this vanity and vexation, except by humble submission to the will of God, and believing confidence in his truth, wisdom, and mercy; and the enjoyment of that peace and consolation, which are communicated by "the supply of the Spirit of Jesus Christ."—The Lord over-rules, to his own glory, those events which originate in man's wickedness: the young, or the poor, are often better acquainted with his servants and service, than the rich or aged: but as he works by despised instruments, so wise men will avail themselves of a useful hint from the lowest of their inferiors.—Kind behavior to domestics generally ensures a valuable recompense: and no injuries or hardships should indispose us to seek the welfare, or to compassionate the sorrows, of those among whom our lot is cast; especially when they are kind to us. This "little maid" proved a richer treasure to Naaman, than any Ben-hadad could bestow: and good and pious servants are indeed invaluable benefits.—We carry our knowledge of God and of true religion with us, wherever we remove; none can deprive us of these true riches and this blessed liberty; and the meanest believer will find opportunities of glorifying God and being useful to man, if he act consistently with his character and profession: for such a conduct will attract regard from those who are ignorant or careless about religion, and dispose them to attend to his words, particularly in times of affliction. (P. O. Acts 8:1—8.)—Those who know the servants of God, will not doubt their readiness to relieve the distressed; and such as know him, are sensible that in answer to their prayer of faith, he frequently removes calamities, and imparts temporal benefits, even to those who serve him not. In these concerns men have keen sensibility, and readily make trial of any probable means of relief, though expensive, laborious, painful, and even uncertain: it would be well if they were equally sensible of the power of the divine wrath to which they are exposed, the burden of guilt with which they are chargeable, and the loathsome leprosy of unmortified sin with which they are polluted. (Note, Matt. 8:1—4.)—The great ones of the earth are apt to suppose, that wealth, authority, and influence can command every thing: but when they seek those blessings which the Lord communicates in answer to the prayers of his faithful servants, they will find that nothing can be done in this way; but that they must act as poor and needy persons, and come as humble supplicants for a free gift, and not as lords to demand, or to purchase. (Notes, Matt. 5:3. Jam. 1:9—11.) For the ministers of God must obey man, only so far as the will of their great Master allows them: and in his service they must not be directed or dictated to by any human authority.—The ignorance of many, in spiritual things, is manifested by every part of their conversation: yet we should not impute that to a blasphemous or malevolent intention, which they utter merely because they know no better.—No judges are more severe towards their fellow sinners, than those who themselves have no fear of God before their eyes: and they are especially quick sighted to the atrocious conduct of those, whom they suspect of intentions to injure them; and vehement in their declamations against the crimes, of which themselves are not known to be guilty.

V. 8—19.

The minister of God should seize every opportunity to evince the truth and importance of his religious principles, and to display the glorious perfections of the Lord: yet he should not appear greatly pleased with the respect shewn him by great men; and he ought to be cautious lest, by his language and behavior, he enhance that pride and vanity which need to be mortified. Rather he should aim to convince them of his earnest desire to do them good; and of his indifference about those external distinctions, which others envy, covet, or are delighted with.—All the commands of God are suited to make trial of men's spirits; especially those which direct a sinner how to apply for the blessings of salvation. These do not accord with the self-importance and self-sufficiency, the carnal prejudices and pompous ideas, of an unhumbled heart: nor can they be cordially attended to, except by "the poor in spirit," or without that implicit faith which produces as implicit obedience. The way of a sinner's acceptance and sanctification, by the blood and Spirit of Christ, through faith alone in his name, does not sufficiently gratify or employ self, to please the sinner's heart. The method seems to many futile and inadequate: human wisdom and philosophy, (like Abana and Pharpar, rivers of Damascus,) can furnish more rational and eligible methods of cleansing: nay, the operose and austere devices of superstition appear to numbers preferable to "the Fountain opened for sin and for uncleanness;" and the very proposal shocks and affronts all the sons of pride and self-sufficiency. But the sinner, who is deeply burdened with guilt, and longs to escape the wrath to come, and the service of Satan, would do "great things," if required for that purpose. If pilgrimages, mortifications, and austerities could avail, they would not be evaded: to torture his body, to part with his wealth, or even lay down his life, would be deemed a low price at which to purchase forgiveness of sins and eternal salvation; but none of these things, in this use of them, can be accepted. (Note, Mic. 6:6—8.) As, however, the Fountain is opened, and the access free, he will "much more wash and be clean," as the Lord has directed.—Salvation is from the love and power of God, in the way of his appointing and revealing, for his own glory, and in the use of those means which he has instituted. In this manner the believer seeks for it, not neglecting, altering, or adding to the Savior's directions; and by repeated washings he is made clean from the guilt and pollution of sin: whilst others, neglecting this great salvation, through proud contempt, sensual indulgence, covetousness, or sloth, live and die in their leprosy, and must for ever be excluded from the presence of a holy God. But when sinners are under serious impressions, and as yet prejudiced against the Lord's method of salvation, they should be reasoned with in meekness and love, and persuaded to make trial of it in simplicity. For he will not cast out the humble supplicant, however enormous his former crimes have been, or however weak and wavering his present faith may be.—If masters were courteous and condescending, and servants could give salutary advice with modesty and respect, many evils might be prevented, and the pernicious effects of hasty sallies of passion counteracted.—When temporal troubles and deliverances bring us acquainted with God, and lead us to his service, they are indeed precious blessings; and gratitude to the Lord will dictate liberality to the instruments of his mercies. But different circumstances will render it necessary to adopt different measures. "The man of God" will never allow himself to "covet any man's gold, or silver, or apparel;" but be content with daily bread, and learn to trust for tomorrow. Yet sometimes he will understand that the proffered kindness is the Lord's method of supplying his necessities, that it will be fruit abounding to the benefit of the donor, and that there is a propriety in accepting it as a token of love: (Note, Phil. 4:14—20.) but, at others, the gift will be looked on as a temptation; and he will perceive that the acceptance of it would degrade his character and office, dishonor God, and tend exceedingly to the injury of the giver. In this case he will decidedly refuse it. This is particularly to be adverted to in the case of the great, when they first turn their thoughts to religious subjects. From knowledge of the world, they are apt to suspect all their inferiors of mercenary designs, and naturally suppose that ministers are only carrying on a trade like other men; while the conduct of too many so called confirms them in this sentiment. There is but one way of counteracting this prejudice; and that is by evidencing a disinterested spirit, and not asking any thing, and in many cases refusing to accept favors from them, until they have attained a further establishment in the faith; and by always persevering in an indifference to every personal interest.—It is not advisable violently to oppose every mistake which unites with men's first convictions, lest we should damp that earnestness which promises good fruit, when matured by experience, and duly regulated by the gradual teaching of the divine Spirit, attending suitable instruction. We cannot bring men forward faster, than the Lord prepares them to receive instruction: and where he works, he will in time lead them to renounce every secular interest, and bear any cross rather than sin against him.

V. 20—27.

No outward religious advantages ensure the renewing of the heart; and better servants are frequently found in ungodly families, than in the houses of the most eminent servants of God. 'Tis true, that the latter must, for the time, wear the hypocrite's cloke; yet under it, the covetous man, the thief, the liar, the traitor, may lurk concealed; but a fair occasion will betray the secret, and his profession will end in awful apostacy. (Notes, Matt. 13:20—22.) Such worldly professors deem themselves wiser in their selfishness, than those who shake their hands from unlawful gain: they have the name of God in their mouths, but they have not his

The sons of the prophet prepare to enlarge their dwelling, and Elisha causes iron to swim, 1—7. He discloses to Jehoram the counsels of the Syrian king, who sends troops to apprehend him, 8—14. Elisha's servant is terrified; but is encouraged by seeing horses and chariots of fire round his master, 15—17. The Syrians, at Elisha's prayer, are partially blinded; and he conducts them into Samaria, where they regain their sight, and by the prophet's proposal are entertained, and dismissed in peace, 18—23. Ben-hadad besieges Samaria, and reduces it to extreme famine, 24, 25. Women contest about eating their own children; and appeal to the king, who in a rage resolves to kill Elisha, 26—33.

8 ¶ Then [n] the king of Syria warred against Israel, and [o] took counsel with his servants, saying, In such and such a place shall be my [†] camp.

9 And the man of God sent unto the king of Israel, saying, [p] Beware that thou pass not such a place; for [q] thither the Syrians are come down.

10 And the king of Israel [r] sent to the place, which the man of God told him and [s] warned him of, and [t] saved himself there, not once nor twice.

11 Therefore [u] the heart of the king of Syria was sore troubled for this thing; and he called his servants, and said unto them, [x] Will ye not shew me which of us is for the king of Israel?

12 And one of his servants said, [‡] None, my lord, O king: but [y] Elisha the prophet, that is in Israel [z] telleth the king of Israel the words that thou speakest in [a] thy bed-chamber.

glory at heart; nor do they care how many stumble and perish through their wickedness. They make their advantage of those who are under serious impressions: they can never want a plausible lie, when Satan is their prompter; and they speak and do whatever is suggested, "for filthy lucre's sake." (Note, Tit. 1:10—13.) Thus they add sin to sin with rapid progress, deceiving many, but known to the heart-searching God; and they are often detected, exposed, and solemnly warned by his servants. In this world they are sometimes branded with infamy, and made awful examples, to wipe off the disgrace which they have brought upon the gospel: and everlasting misery and contempt will be their portion if they die impenitent.—Alas! what a price do men pay for outward advantages, when they are connected with such consequences to themselves, and such misery is entailed upon their posterity! Let us beware of hypocrisy and covetousness, and dread above all things the curse of spiritual leprosy, remaining upon our souls, living and dying, and for ever. (Rev. 22:10—12.)

NOTES.

CHAP. VI. V. 1—7. Probably, this event occured either at Gilgal, or at Jericho, both of which were near Jordan.—Under Elisha's superintendence the schools of the prophets flourished, and doubtless true religion revived and spread in proportion: but it is not certain, whether the building intended was a place of assembly, where the prophets met for religious exercises with other pious Israelites; or whether they purposed to live together in it, with their families, as a collected body separate from others. When, however, they were straitened for room, they did not depend on others to prepare them a more convenient or spacious building: but they proposed to fill up the intervals of their time in manual labor, and prepare one for themselves: and probably they were accustomed to work in one way or other, that the people might not be burdened. (Notes, Acts 18:1—6. 1 Cor. 4:9—13. 2 Cor. 11:7—12. 2 Thes. 3:6—9.) But they would not go to hew timber, for this purpose, without Elisha's permission; and they desired his company, to sanction their attempt, and to solace their toil by his edifying conversation; to which he willingly consented.—Perhaps they were not very skilful about their work, and some of their tools were borrowed; so that an axe-head falling into the water, proved a cause of anxiety to one of them; as it seems he was not well able to make it good, and the owner could not afford to lose it. In so small a matter the Lord was pleased to work a miracle, to compose the young prophet's mind, to put honor upon Elisha, to enable the company to proceed with their undertaking, and to encourage their faith and hope!—The stick cast into the water was the token of the Lord's operation; and it is useless to inquire, in what way he made the iron to swim. (Note, 4:40,41.)

V. 8—12. (Marg. Ref. o—r.) As the Israelites had repeatedly avoided the ambushments which the Syrians had formed against them; Ben-hadad suspected that he had a traitor in his privy-coun

13 And he said, Go, and [b] spy where he is, that I may send and fetch him. And it was told him, saying, Behold, he is in [c] Dothan.

14 Therefore [d] sent he thither horses, and chariots, and a * great host: and they came by night, and compassed the city about.

15 And when the † servant of the man of God was risen early, and gone forth, behold, an host compassed the city both with horses and chariots: and his servant said unto him, [e] Alas, my master! how shall we do?

16 And he answered, [f] Fear not, for [g] they that be with us are more than they that be with them.

17 And Elisha [h] prayed, and said, LORD, I pray thee, [i] open his eyes, that he may see. And the LORD opened the eyes of the young man, and he saw: and, behold, the mountain was [k] full of horses and chariots of fire round about Elisha.

18 And when they came down to him, Elisha prayed unto the LORD, and said, [l] Smite this people, I pray thee, with blindness. And he smote them with blindness, according to the word of Elisha.

19 And Elisha said unto them, This is not the way, neither is this the city: ‡ follow me, and [m] I will bring you to the man whom ye seek. But he led them to Samaria.

20 And it came to pass, when they were come into Samaria, that Elisha said, LORD, [n] open the eyes of these men, that they may see. And the LORD [o] opened their eyes, and they saw; and, behold, they were in the midst of Samaria.

21 And the king of Israel said unto Elisha, when he saw them, [p] My father, [q] shall I smite them? shall I smite them?

22 And he answered, Thou shalt not smite them: [r] wouldest thou smite those whom thou hast taken captive with [s] thy sword and with thy bow? [t] Set bread and water before them, that they may eat and drink, and go to their master.

23 And [u] he prepared great provision for them, and when they had eaten and drunk, he sent them away, and they went cil, though he knew not on whom to fix the charge: and this greatly perplexed his mind. Many of the Syrians, it seems, were acquainted with the extraordinary powers given to Elisha by the God of Israel. Naaman's cure could not fail to increase his reputation, and good effects might be thus produced upon the minds of some individuals; though the enmity of the Syrian king against Israel still remained: and perhaps Naaman had been dismissed from his high station, as no longer sufficiently compliant to the king. (Notes, 1 Kings 20: 22:)

V. 13, 14. It was wonderful, that Ben-hadad did not perceive, that the God of Israel could as easily disclose this design to his prophet, as the other plans which he had formed! (Note, Matt. 2: 3—8.) He had perhaps heard, that fire from heaven had consumed the small companies who attempted to apprehend Elijah; and therefore he sent a large army, as if this would ensure success. (Notes, 1:9—12.) But a small number would have sufficed to take an unarmed man: and no force could prevail against the prophet's omnipotent Defender. (Note, Matt. 26:47—56.) The offence however was less heinous in Syrians than in Israelites; and therefore Ben-hadad's army was not punished, as Ahaziah's captains and soldiers had been.

V. 15—17. Elisha, by strong faith, perceived the invisible guard assigned him: but his servant, who had newly succeeded Gehazi, was weak in faith and needed encouragement; and the Lord was pleased to enable him, as if with his bodily eyes, to perceive hosts of angels, in the form of chariots and horses of fire encamped around the prophet, to protect him, and to fight against those who should offer him any violence. (Notes, 2:11, 12.)
